PREFACE.

IN the work, of which this volume is an instalment, I have undertaken to reproduce in an English dress Professor Susemihl's edition of the Politics in Greek and German as issued by him, with notes explanatory of the subject-matter, in 1879. It is not, however, a simple reproduction, but a minute and scrupulous revision, the translation having been dropped and the plan of the work sensibly modified to adapt it to the wants of English students. Some changes have been made in the Introduction, to which a section has been added, though naturally the materials of this section are by no means new. The text (for which Professor Susemihl is solely responsible) has been corrected in some hundreds of places, mostly to bring it into agreement with his later edition in the Teubner series, of which a nova impressio correctior was issued in 1894, only a few months ago. The great majority of the changes which distinguish the impressio of 1894 from that of 1883 have, however, to be sought in the Corrigenda. By the simple device of a change of type it has been found possible to exhibit to the eye the effect of the numerous transpositions here recommended, and yet to retain the received order of the text for facility of reference. In the notes explanatory of the subject-matter bearing his signature Professor Susemihl has introduced comprehensive changes. No one therefore should be surprised if these notes fail to correspond in substance (as they correspond in appended number) to those of the German edition.

Where it seemed expedient, they have been supplemented from my own collections. It can be said with truth that difficulties have never been shirked, numerous as they undoubtedly are. Wherever a note grew to an inordinate length or threatened to digress from the context, it has been relegated to an excursus.

In compiling additional notes I have received the greatest stimulus and advantage from the writings and correspondence of my collaborator, whose patience and forbearance have not been exhausted in the long interval preceding publication. He has always been willing to lavish upon me every assistance from the stores of his erudition, and to aid me with the latest results of his experience and ripened judgment. Indeed, it is not too much to say that not only primarily, but in the additions of date subsequent to 1879 indirectly, this volume, and the Politics as a whole, owes far more to him than to all other sources put together. Next to him I am most indebted to Dr Henry Jackson, who has never failed to give me encouragement and assistance, and in 1880 most kindly placed at my disposal a selection of valuable notes, critical and exegetical, which are published in the course of the volume with his signature. Moreover, as in private duty bound, I acknowledge that it is to the stimulus of his inspiring lectures that I, like Dr Postgate and Mr Welldon, owe my first interest in Aristotelian studies. I have naturally endeavoured to profit by the publications of recent years, so far as they bore upon my author, and I may especially mention the contributions to the Transactions of the Cambridge Philological Society and Journal of Philology by Dr Jackson, Professor Ridgeway, Dr Postgate and Professor J. Cook Wilson. I have taken the liberty of consulting any materials to which I had access, such as the marginalia of the late Richard Shilleto in the Cambridge University Library, and of the late Edward Meredith Cope in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge. In common with the publishers I deplore and apologise for the long delay between the announcement and the publication of this work, although this delay has enabled me to secure a collation of the oldest extant source of the text, the fragments of the Vatican palimpsest, and to incorporate in the Addenda the most important of the references to the recently discovered Constitution of Athens. Thus supplemented the commentary will, it is hoped, be found more adequate than any of its predecessors to our existing materials and means of information.

Some will be surprised that more attention has not been bestowed upon the superb Introduction or the full and lucid commentary upon Books I and II published by Mr W. L. Newman in 1887. The truth is that, at the time of its appearance the earlier part of this volume had been printed off, and the publishers did not see their way either to issue this part (pp. 1—460) separately, as I personally should have preferred, or to incur the heavy expense of cancelling the printed sheets. Some valuable annotations of Mr Newman's, however, which I should have been glad to incorporate in the proper place, receive a brief recognition in the Addenda.

I have further to add that I began to print before Professor Susemihl had collected into a permanent form his first set of Quaestiones Aristoteleae I—VII, and that for greater clearness I refer to the invaluable pamphlet issued by him in 1886, in which the main results of the seven Quaestiones are combined, as Quaestiones criticae collectae, although the last word collectae forms no part of the title proper.

My best thanks are here duly tendered to my friends Mr William Wyse, late Professor of Greek in University College, London, for valuable suggestions and criticisms, and numerous additional references, particularly in all that bears upon Greek Antiquities; Miss Alice Zimmern, author of Home Life of the Greeks, Mr Hartmann W. Just, sometime scholar of C. C. C., Oxford, and Mr H. J. Wolstenholme, for timely assistance in the laborious task of translating from the German; further, to my brother-in-law, Mr T. L. Heath, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, who read most of the earlier proof-sheets. Occasional notes of his and one by Mr H. W. Just bear the authors' initials. To guard against all misapprehension I should add that the excursus on Greek Music was already printed off before the Provost of Oriel's recent work on that subject reached me.

The want of an index, which renders this instalment of the work much less useful than it might otherwise have been, will be remedied when the remaining three books are published.

ON REFERENCES TO THE POLITICS BY BOOKS, CHAPTERS, SECTIONS, PAGES.

THE text of this edition with its double numbering of certain books, its double system of chapters and sections, and of marginal pages, may well perplex an unfamiliar reader unless a word or two be added as to the origin of this aggravated confusion and the various methods by which any given passage may be cited.

The manuscripts exhibit the eight books in the old order, viz. A B Γ Δ E Z H Θ according to the left heading of each page (not in the order of this edition which is A B Γ H Θ Δ Z E). There is no subdivision of the books in the Aldines and other early printed editions, any more than in the MSS. The Latin translations had been subdivided before this into chapters and sections, a division almost inevitable when the continuity of the text is disturbed by paraphrase and commentary. Thus the second edition of Victorius (Florence 1576) presents the text in a series of short sections, although these are never numbered or otherwise utilized for purposes of reference.

The system of chapters here adopted, as cited in the head lines and on the left hand of the pages of this volume, is that most widely known through its adoption by Immanuel Bekker in the great edition of the Berlin Academy (quarto 1831), and by Hermann Bonitz in the Index Aristotelicus to the same edition (1870). It may be traced back to the editions of Zwinger (1582), Sylburg (1587), Casaubon (1590). It seems that Zwinger merely modified another arrangement into chapters, derived from the Latin Aristotle (e.g. the edition of Bagolinus), and found in the third Basel edition (1550) of Conrad Gesner, also in Giphanius (1608). Sylburg (1587) and Conring (1656) give both schemes, calling Gesner's "vulgo." In this now obsolete arrangement Book I. made eight chapters, not thirteen, Book II., ten, not twelve, Book III., twelve, not eighteen.

The sections into which Bekker's chapters are divided are taken from the Oxford reprint of Bekker in ten octavo volumes (1837), in which unfortunately Bekker's pages and lines are wholly ignored. These sections have been retained in this volume because Liddell and Scott's Greek Lexicon, and some other authorities, cite the Politics by them. They are numbered on the left side of the page with § prefixed.

The chapters (in Roman figures) and sections on the right side of the page are these introduced by J. Gottlob Schneider in his valuable edition of 1809. Schneider broke with all his predecessors by adopting longer chapters and fewer of them, e.g. 5 in Book I., 9 in Book II. He was followed amongst subsequent editors by Götting

But the tendency in modern times has been not to employ for citation either the sections of Bekker or the chapters and sections of Schneider, but rather the chapter, page, column, and line of the quarto of the Berlin Academy above mentioned. In this edition of all Aristotle the Politics occupies pages 1252—1342. The quarto volume is printed in double columns, cited as column a, column b. For example, 1252 a 18, 1276 b 4 (or in the Index Aristotelicus 1252^a18, 1276^b4) are used to denote, the one, line 18 of the left column of page 1252, the other, line 4 of the right column of page 1276. The closer definition which this method of citation by lines secures is a great recommendation, but it is balanced by one drawback, viz. that to be quite sure of finding a passage the Berlin Aristotle is required, and after sixty years the supremacy of even this edition no longer remains unquestioned. In the present volume the pages and lines of Bekker's quarto are cited on the left hand side of the page, while in the heading over the right hand page the whole extent of the text on both left and right pages is recorded : (e.g. 1263 b 23—1264 a 4 for the text upon pp. 238 and 239 of this volume).

Lastly, there are a few writers, Bernays and Oncken among them, who prefer to quote passages by the page and line, not of the Berlin quarto, but of the octavo reprint of it issued a little later, of which a third edition came out in 1855 and a fourth edition in 1878. For comparison, this system of pages has been recorded on the right hand margin, the reference being enclosed in a bracket, thus : (p. 31).

For an example of these rival methods of citation take the sentence δέῃ δὲ μηδὲ τοῦτο ἀγνοεῖν ὅτι χρὴ προσέχειν τῷ πολλῷ χρόνῳ upon p. 239 of this edition. The reference (i) in the Index Aristotelicus would be IIβ5, 1264 a 1 sq.; we prefer to cite it as (ii) Book II, c. 5 § 16 (or II. 5. 16) by Bekker's chapters and sections : or dropping the book and chapter (which are really superfluous) as (iii) 1264 a 1, 2 by Bekker's pages, columns and lines. No references in this English edition are given by Schneider's chapters and sections, which were followed in Susemihl's German edition of 1879 : but on that method the passage could be cited as (iv) Book II c. ii § 10. Lastly, Bernays or Oncken would refer to it as (v) p. 31, 1 f.

INTRODUCTION.

I. MANUSCRIPTS AND EDITIONS OF THE POLITICS.

ARISTOTLE'S Politics has come down to us in manuscripts for the most part of the fifteenth century; there are indeed two, P³ and P² (Bekker's I^b), which date from the fourteenth century, but none earlier. There is the Latin version by Lionardo Bruni of Arezzo (Leonardus Aretinus), made from the first manuscript brought into Italy from Greece in the fifteenth century, a manuscript now lost, which was probably older than the fifteenth century¹. There is further an older translation, word for word into barbarous Latin, made in the thirteenth century, before A.D. 1274², by the Dominican monk William of Moerbeke. Its lost original was a Greek codex³ which we will call Γ; written, at the latest, in the early part of the thirteenth or latter part of the twelfth century, and probably of not much older date⁴. This translation⁵ primarily, together with four of the existing Greek manuscripts, three at Paris P¹.^{2.3}, one at Milan M^s, is now the critical basis for the text. All that the remaining manuscripts or the translation of Aretinus can claim is to supply confirmatory evidence in isolated passages: Aretinus, in particular, is much too free and arbitrary in his rendering, so that it is often impossible to infer, at least with any certainty, the reading of his Greek codex; hence many peculiarities of his translation must be passed over or regarded as merely his own conjectures.

Thomas Aquinas twice quotes it in the Summa contra Gentiles, writing probably A.D. 1261—1265. TR.]

³ The best manuscript of this 'Old Translation' expressly states it. See Susemihl op. cit. XXXIV. See also below p. 49 n. 2, p. 71 ff.

⁵ With the text restored from manuscripts and old printed editions in my edition above mentioned.

All these sources of the text fall into two families or recensions. One of them, on the whole the better, but often the worse in particular points, seems to be derived from a codex of the sixth or seventh century¹, although in the quotations of single passages in Julian and even as early as Alexander of Aphrodisias the readings peculiar to this recension are partially, but only partially, found. Besides Γ the only manuscripts which belong, in the main, to this family are the following two :

M^s = Mediolanensis Ambrosianus B. 105² (in the Ambrosian Library at Milan), of the second half of the fifteenth century, much corrected by the copyist himself and in a few passages by a later hand ; collated by R. Schöll and Studemund :

P^1 = Parisinus 2023 (in the Bibliothèque nationale at Paris), written by Demetrios Chalkondylas at the end of the fifteenth century, and then much corrected with a paler ink from a manuscript of the other family. Corrections of this sort are hereafter denoted by p^1 , those made in the same black ink as the original text by (corr.¹), corrections which do not belong to either of these classes, or at all events are not with certainty to be reckoned with one or the other, are quoted simply as (corr.). In regard to this and all the other manuscripts, it is distinctly stated when any correction stands in the margin. P^1 was last collated by Dahms and Patzig.

Just as in P^1 the two families are blended³, so conversely traces of the better recension are met with even in some manuscripts which belong, in the main, to the other family. This is true of many corrections and most of the glosses which are found in P^2 , the principal manuscript of this second family⁴; still more frequently of the readings, corrections, and variants in P^4 ; so also of Aretinus' translation and especially of P^5 ; to a less extent of the corrections by a later hand in some other manuscripts, and hardly ever of their original readings. The few excerpts from

Aristotle's Politics in Codex Paris. 963, of the sixteenth century, are also derived from the better recension.

Subject to these exceptions, all other manuscripts but those above-mentioned are to be reckoned with the second family, the text of which may be called the vulgate. They may be further subdivided into two classes, a better and a worse, and the latter again into three different groups: an intermediate position between the two is taken up by the translation of Aretinus and in a different way by C⁴. A more precise statement is afforded by the following summary.

I. Better class : II².

P² = Coislin. 161 (brought originally from Athos: now with the rest of the Coislinian collection in the Bibliothèque nationale at Paris), of the 14th century; Bekker's 1^b; last collated by Susemihl. The corrections and variants are written partly (1) in the same ink as the original text, partly (2) in darker ink, partly (3) in paler, yellower, partly (4) in red ink: these are indicated hereafter by (corr.¹), (corr.²), (corr.³) and p³ respectively: where the ink appears to be wholly different, or cannot be brought with certainty under any of these classes, the sign will be (corr.⁴). But all without exception, and the glosses as well, are in the same handwriting as the codex.

P³ = Paris. 2026 of the beginning of the 14th century, for the greater part written by the same scribe, but finished by another hand; the oldest manuscript that we have, but not so good as P², especially in its original form before it had been corrected by a third and later hand and thereby made still more like P² than it was at first. It is true that most of these later corrections were subsequently scratched out again or wiped off, yet even then they remain legible enough. P³, like P², was last collated by Susemihl.

II. Worse class : II³.

1. First group.

P⁴ = Paris. 2025 of the 15th century, much corrected but, with the exception of a single passage, only by the scribe himself, with various readings in the margin; last collated by Susemihl.

P⁶ = Paris. 1857, written in the year 1492 in Rome by Johannes Rhosos, a priest from Crete; last collated by Patzig for the first four chapters of Book I. Statements as to the readings of this manuscript in other single passages come from Bekker, from Barthélemy St Hilaire, and in particular from Patzig.

Q = Marcianus Venetus 200 (in the library of St Mark at Venice), also written by Johannes Rhosos, but as early as 1457: collated by Bekker for Book I, and since then afresh for the first four chapters of that book, as above, by R. Schöll and E. Rohde.

M^b = Marcianus Venetus 213, of the beginning of the 15th century, collated by Bekker for I. c. 1—c. 6 § 8 and again by Rohde for I. cc. 1—4.

U^b = Marcianus Venetus, append. iv. 3, written in Rome in the year 1494, collated by Bekker for II. cc. 1—7; III. 2 § 3 (1275 b 32—34), 14 §§ 2—10; VI (IV). 3 § 8—4 § 3, 7 § 2—8 § 4; VIII (V). 3 § 5—4 § 10, and by Rohde for I. cc. 1—4.

L^s = Lipsiensis (bibliothecae Paulinae) 1335, in the University library at Leipzig, of the fifteenth or the beginning of the sixteenth century, most closely related to U^b, collated by Patzig for I. 1—4 and other single passages. We have information about readings in other parts of Books I. II. and V (VIII). from Stahr and Schneider.

C^c denotes the codex used by Camerarius.

Ar. = Aretinus, who must have used for his translation a codex of a very peculiar kind in which the two recensions were blended. For the translation is often in remarkable agreement with the manuscripts of this group; though often, too, with the better class. Not seldom again it agrees with the first family: lastly, it here and there shows peculiarities belonging exclusively to itself which can hardly be all set down to mere conjecture or arbitrariness on the part of the translator.

2. Second group.

C⁴ = Florentinus Castiglioneensis (in the Laurentian library at Florence) iv. (Acquisti nuovo), of the fifteenth century, collated by R. Schöll for I. 1—4; II. 1—2 § 3; VI (IV). 1: in the opening chapters it is more in agreement with the better class.

Q^b = Laurentianus 81, 5 (in the Laurentian library at Florence), of the fifteenth century, collated by R. Schöll for I. 1—4 and single passages elsewhere, by Bekker for Books II. III. VI (IV).

R^b = Laurentianus 81, 6, written by Johannes Thetталos in the year 1494 at Florence, collated by Schöll for the same opening part and for isolated passages elsewhere, by Bekker for Books VII (VI). VIII (V). It bears a great resemblance to Q^b, particularly to the corrections of Q^b in a later hand: but it has some peculiarities of its own.

S^b = Laurentianus 81, 21, of the fifteenth century, written more probably before than after Q^b, to which it bears an extraordinary resemblance; collated by Bekker for Books I. IV (VII). V (VIII), and again by Schöll for the first four chapters of Bk. I, and for single passages elsewhere.

T^b = Urbinas 46 (transferred from Urbino to the Vatican library at Rome), of the fifteenth century, collated by Bekker for the first three books and for Bk. V (VIII), then again by Hinck for Bk. I. 1—4 and for detached passages by Schöll. It seems to be more nearly related to V^b than to Q^b, R^b, S^b.

V^b = Vaticano-Palatinus 160 (transferred from the Palatine library to the Vatican), also written by Johannes Thettalos in the fifteenth century, collated by Bekker for Bks. IV (VII). VI (IV). VIII (V), by Hinck for Bk. I. 1—4, and by Schöll for several single passages. The corrections by a later hand in the opening paragraph (Bk. I. 1—4) are in striking agreement with C⁴.

3. Third group, more nearly related to the first group, in particular to U^b L⁵, than to the second.

W^b = Reginensis 125 (Christinae reginae—in the Vatican library), collated by Bekker for Bk. VIII (VI), by Hinck for Bk. I. 1—4, by Schöll for several single passages. This manuscript will have to be wholly neglected for the future, because, as I learn from communications made to me by Von Wilamowitz-Möllendorff, it is no earlier than the sixteenth or perhaps the seventeenth century, and was undoubtedly copied from the Aldine edition.

Ald. = Aldina, the first edition of Aristotle published by Aldus Manutius, Venice, 1498, last collated for Bk. I. 1—4 and for numerous single passages by Susemihl.

Lastly an unique position amongst the manuscripts is taken by P⁵ = Paris. 1858 or Colbert. 2401, dating from the sixteenth century. On the one hand this codex must be one of the worse manuscripts of the second family, although it cannot be exclusively assigned to any one of the three groups into which they fall¹. On the other hand it frequently agrees with the first family, and not seldom alone of all the manuscripts that have come down to us it agrees with the old translation of William of Moerbeke: here and there it presents single readings, good or at least deserving of attention, which are to be found nowhere else, although it may very well be that they are not derived from earlier sources, but are, wholly or in part, mere conjectures of the scribe himself or of other scholars of that time. The manuscript now contains only Bk. VIII (v). from c. 6 § 9 onwards, Bk. VII (vi). Bk. IV (vii). and Bk. V (viii), the preceding part having been torn away; the corrections are all by the scribe himself, except a few which are divided between two later hands. It was last collated by Susemihl¹.

From all this it may be seen that, leaving out detached passages, the manuscripts collated, besides Γ M^s P^{1.2.3.4} Ar., are :

for I. 1—4:	P ⁶ C ⁴ Q M ^b Q ^b R ^b S ^b T ^b U ^b V ^b W ^b L ^s Ald.
I. 4—6 § 8:	Q M ^b S ^b T ^b .	for VI (IV). 1: C ⁴ Q ^b V ^b .
I. 6 § 9—13 § 16 (end):	Q S ^b T ^b .	VI (IV). 2—3 § 7: Q ^b V ^b .
II. 1, 2:	C ⁴ Q ^b T ^b U ^b .	VI (IV). 3 § 8—4 § 4: Q ^b U ^b V ^b .
II. 3—7 § 21:	Q ^b T ^b U ^b .	VI (IV). 4 § 4—7 § 1: Q ^b V ^b .
II. 8—III. 2 § 3:	Q ^b T ^b .	VI (IV). 7 § 2—8 § 6: Q ^b U ^b V ^b .
III. 2 § 3:	Q ^b T ^b U ^b .	VI (IV). 8 § 6—16 § 8 (end): Q ^b V ^b .
III. 2 § 3—14 § 1:	Q ^b T ^b .	VII (VI): P ⁵ R ^b W ^b .
III. 14 §§ 2—10:	Q ^b T ^b U ^b .	VIII (v). 1—3 § 5: R ^b V ^b .
III. 14 § 10—18 § 2 (end):	Q ^b T ^b .	VIII (v). 3 § 5—4 § 10: R ^b U ^b V ^b .
IV (VII):	P ⁵ S ^b V ^b .	VIII (v). 4 § 11—6 § 8: R ^b V ^b .
V (VIII):	P ⁵ S ^b T ^b .	VIII (v). 6 § 9—12 § 18 (end): P ⁵ R ^b V ^b .

In addition some readings of three late and bad Paris manuscripts, 2041, 2042, 2043, containing only fragments of the work, have been made known by Barthélemy St Hilaire.

II denotes the agreement of all the manuscripts we have,

II¹ that of all the manuscripts of the first family (or at least their first hand), including Γ , II² that of all the manuscripts of the second family (and the Aldine edition), excluding P⁵, II³ that of all the worse manuscripts of this second family (i. e. all the MSS. known except Γ M^s P¹ P² P³ P⁵), so far as they have been collated, and the Aldine edition.

Bas.^{1.2.3} denotes the three Basel editions of the years 1531, 1539, 1550, the first complete editions of Aristotle published after the Aldine. Only the third is important, since in it the first use was made of the old Latin translation, and a great number of mistakes of preceding printed editions thereby corrected. The text so formed remained essentially, though of course with numerous alterations, the basis for succeeding editors (who consulted new manuscripts but sparingly and, if at all, for single passages only), until Götting's time. He first used collations, but very insufficient ones, of P^{1.2.3.4.5} and of a few leaves of M^s, which had been made by Hase; and Bekker, while completely ignoring P^{1.3} M^s and almost completely P^{4.5}, founded his edition with undue arbitrary eclecticism either upon P² (Bekker's I^b) or upon that text which preceding editions had made the textus receptus. There was no collection of critical apparatus at once sufficiently complete and trustworthy before my critical edition, which rests so far as possible upon II¹, the consensus of the mss. of the first family, viz. I, M^s, P¹: failing that, upon P^{2.3}. There is less need then in a work, where the basis is the same, to give more than a mere selection of the most important and valuable readings. I shall, however, quote in full those which are found in Stobaeus' extract (Ecl. eth. II. p. 322 foll.), and in the few citations of single passages in ancient writers, as Alexander of Aphrodisias, Julian, Pseudo-Plutarch περὶ εὐγενείας, etc.¹

But however methodically we turn to account all these authorities we only obtain a text abounding in errors and defects of every kind. Accordingly a long series of editors, translators, and commentators from Sepulveda onwards have not failed to suggest numerous emendations and attempts at emendation, of which all the more important will be found recorded in the present edition. The following is a list in chronological order of the scholars to whose conjectures an improved text is due.

Camot. The fourth complete edition of Aristotle, Aldina minor or Camotiana; Venice, 1552. 8vo.

Vettori (Victorius). First edition of the Politics; Florence, 1552. 4: a second edition with commentary; Florence, 1576 fol. In the copy of the first edition now belonging to the Munich Library, there are marginal notes in Vettori's own handwriting, which have been used by me. Where necessary the two editions are distinguished as Vettori¹, Vettori².

Morel. Edition, Paris, 1556. 4; closely following the first edition of Vettori.

Lambin. Latin translation; first edition, Paris, 1567. 4.

Camerarius. Politiconum et Oeconomicorum Aristotelis interpretationes et explicationes; Frankfurt, 1581. 4.

Zwinger. Edition of the Politics; Basel 1582 fol.; closely following Vettori's 2nd ed.

References to these citations will be found in Clarendon type in the critical notes.

Sylburg. Edition of the whole of Aristotle; Frankfurt, 1587. 4.

M. Casaubon. Edition of the whole of Aristotle; Lyon, 1590. fol.

Montecatino. Latin translation and commentary on the first three books of the Politics; Ferrara, 1587 (Bk. I), 1594 (Bk. II), 1598 (Bk. III), fol. (3 vols.). See Schneider's edition, II. p. v.

Ramus (Pierre de la Ramée). Edition and Latin translation of the Politics; Frankfurt, 1601. 8.

Giphanius (Van Giffen). Commentarii in politicum opus Aristotelis; Frankfurt, 1608. 8. A posthumous work: wanting the whole of Bk. V (VIII). and Bk. IV (VII). from c. 7 § 5 to the end.

Scaliger. See Scaligerana published by Oncken in Eos I. 1864. 410 ff.

Piccart. In Politicos Aristotelis libros commentarius; Leipzig, 1615. 8.

D. Heinsius. Edition of the Politics; Leyden, 1621. 8.

Reiske and Gurlitt. In the addenda to Schneider's edition, II. 471 ff.

Reiz. Edition of IV (VII). 17 and the whole of V (VIII), περὶ τῆς πόλεως μακαρίας κτλ, Leipzig, 1776. 8.

J. G. Schlosser. German translation of the Politics and Oeconomics; Lübeck and Leipzig, 1798. 8 (3 vols.). The notes appended are in every respect of great interest for the reader even now, and have proved especially valuable. The memory of this excellent man should ever be cherished in Germany.

Garve. A German translation of the Politics edited by Fülleborn; Leipzig, 1799. 1802. 8 (2 vols.).

J. G. Schneider. Edition of the Politics; Frankfurt on the Oder, 1809. 8 (2 vols.).

Koraes. Edition, Paris, 1821. 8.

F. Thurot. French translation of the Ethics and Politics; Paris, 1823. 8.

Göttling. Edition of the Politics; Jena, 1824. 8. To this must be added the short dissertations: Commentariolum de Arist. Politicorum loco (II. 6. 20); Jena, 1855. 4. De machaera Delphica quae est ap. Arist. (I. 2. 3); Jena, 1858. 4. De loco quodam Arist. (I. 2. 9); Jena, 1858. 4. (In his collected writings Opusc. acad. ed. Cuno Fischer, Jena, 1869. 8. 274 ff.)

Barthélemy St Hilaire. Edition of the Politics with French translation; Paris, 1837. 8. A second edition of the translation appeared, Paris, 1848. 8.

A. Stahr. Edition with German translation; Leipzig, 1839. 4. To this should be added the German trans. by C. Stahr and A. Stahr; Stuttgart, 1860. 16.

Lindau. German translation (Oels, 1843. 8), unfortunately not accessible to me for my critical edition.

Spengel. Ueber die Politik des Aristoteles, in the phil. Abhandl. der Münchner Akad. v. 1 ff. Aristotelische Studien III. (ib. XI. 55 ff.); Munich, 1868. 4. Compare Arist. Stud. II. (ib. X. 626 ff.); Munich, 1865. 4. 44 ff.

II. THE COMPILATION AND SUBSEQUENT HISTORY OF THE TREATISE.

In recent times critics seem more and more disposed to agree that the systematic writings of Aristotle, that is to say, most of the works that have come down to us together with others that have perished, were never actually published by their author himself¹. At the end of the fifteenth chapter of the Poetics he contrasts the exposition there given with that contained in his published works, to which upon certain points the student is referred, εἶρηται δὲ περὶ αὐτῶν ἐν τοῖς ἐκδεδομένοις λόγοις ἱκανῶς, the reference being undoubtedly to one of his own dialogues, that namely *On Poets*². Of the works which had thus been given to the world some information may be gathered, as that they chiefly comprised popular writings like the dialogues, adapted to the intelligence of a wider public; perhaps also descriptive works on natural science, ‘histories’ of plants and animals. But not the Poetics, nor indeed any of the similar treatises strictly philosophical and systematic which make up “our Aristotle,” to use Grote’s phrase: we may safely conclude that they were none of them in circulation at the time. It has indeed been doubted whether they were primarily written with a view to publication. They had their origin in the oral lectures of the Stagirite, and stood in the closest connexion with his activity as a teacher; this much is clear, but the precise nature of the connexion has been sorely disputed. The materials of these works may have been on the one hand Aristotle’s own notes; either sketches drawn up beforehand for his lectures; or, which is more likely, reproductions of them freely revised and enlarged for subsequent study in the school. Or, again, they may have been merely lecture-notes taken down by pupils at the time. The former supposition is favoured by the analogy of Aristotle’s master, Plato, who takes this view of his strictly philosophical writings in the famous passage in the *Phaedrus*³. Nor is there any reason to distrust the evidence that shortly after his master’s death Theophrastos had Aristotle's autograph of the Physics in his possession¹. Something similar may be inferred for other works if it be true that Eudemos edited the *Metaphysics*², and that Theophrastos (probably also Eudemos) supplemented modified and commented upon the Prior and Posterior Analytics in writings of his own bearing the same titles³: this is at any rate precisely the relation in which the Physics and Ethics of Eudemos stood to those of his master. The writings of Aristotle then were designed to serve as aids to the further study of his pupils: they were the text-books of the Aristotelian school.

In support of the other hypothesis has been adduced a number of passages which contrast decidedly with the immediate context by unusual vivacity or sustained style, or by especially prominent allusions to an audience as if present. Here the readiest explanation is that the editors have actually made use of notes taken down by pupils. Such passages have been collected by Oncken from the *Nicomachean Ethics*⁴; the latter part of Politics IV (VII). c. 1, and the conclusion, if genuine, of De Soph. Elench. are further instances. It should be remembered also that in one catalogue of the Aristotelian writings the Politics appears as πολιτικὴ ἀκρόασις⁵, while φυσικὴ ἀκρόασις is still the title borne by the Physics in our manuscripts. All these circumstances however can be satisfactorily explained in other ways, partly upon the former hypothesis, partly by assuming a merely occasional use to have been made of pupils' lecture-notes as subsidiary sources:—an assumption which it is hardly possible to disprove⁶.

In the Aristotelian writings we find a great diversity of treatment and language; at one time the briefest and most compressed style carried to the extreme of harshness, at another numerous needless redundancies, and often literal repetitions. The careless familiar expressions natural in oral discourse alternate with long artistic periods absolutely free from anacoluthia; at times the composition of one and the same book appears strangely unequal, as if the material which at first flowed abundantly had suddenly become scanty. Such peculiarities however generally admit of more than one explanation; even where the same question is treated independently two or three times over (unless indeed one of the versions is to be regarded as the paraphrase of a Peripatetic) the inference may be either that different drafts of Aristotle's own have been incorporated side by side¹, or that a pupil has supplemented the notes which he had actually taken by a statement in his own words of their substance. Yet at other times the contrast is unmistakeable, as when we compare the Posterior with the Prior Analytics, or the third book of the Psychology with the two preceding books: we seem to have before us nothing but disjointed notes or rough drafts badly pieced together. Such imperfection in whole works can hardly be referred to any one but Aristotle². If some treatises, again, or at least considerable portions of them, prove upon examination so far advanced that the author's last touches hardly seem wanting, the inference is irresistible that, granted they arose at first out of Aristotle's oral lectures, with such fulness of details and elaboration they must have been intended for ultimate publication, whether in the author's lifetime or subsequently. Thence it is easy to pass on to the provisional assumption that Aristotle intended to bring his entire Encyclopaedia to the same degree of completeness, but was prevented by death from executing his design. As it is, we seem justified in concluding that the unfinished works were brought out by his immediate pupils from a combination of the materials above mentioned, pieced together and supplemented by not inconsiderable additions: much in the same way (to use Bernays' instructive analogy) as most of Hegel's works for the first time saw the light in the complete edition made by his pupils after his death.

There is a further circumstance which must be taken into account. From this edition, of which comparatively few copies were ever made or in circulation³, the works as they have come down to us must be allowed to deviate considerably. Our present text can be traced back in the main to the revised edition of Andronikos of Rhodes, a contemporary of Cicero⁴. This edition is known to have differed as to order and arrangement from the former one; besides, in the intervening 250 years the text had received considerable damage. Thus may be explained the appearance of numerous Peripatetic interpolations; also cases where a series of fragments represents the original work, as in Bk. VII of the Nicomachean Ethics, and in some measure in the *Poetics*¹; or where excerpts from another work are inserted, e.g. from the Physics in the latter part of Bk. XI (K) of the Metaphysics and in part of what is now Bk. V (Δ) of the same work².

² In the Physics, Bk. VII, Metaphysics, Nicomachean Ethics, are other instances only less striking than those named.

Only by such a combination of assumptions is it possible satisfactorily to interpret the present condition of the Politics, where traces of its mode of compilation may clearly be discerned in interpolations, glosses incorporated in the text, abrupt transitions, inequalities of execution, frequent lacunae, transpositions and double recensions. Yet the whole is pervaded by an organic plan well considered even to the finest details³, and beyond all doubt the actual execution is mainly based upon written materials from Aristotle's own hand⁴. There is only one

² The hypotheses above noticed may thus be recapitulated. Aristotle did not himself publish his scientific works. They may have been edited primarily

(i) from Aristotle's own drafts as revised after his lectures for the use of his pupils: supplemented by the use, as

(ii) subsidiary sources, of

(a) Aristotle's own sketches, prepared for use at his lectures:

(β) lecture-notes taken by pupils (with or without supplements of their own):

(γ) passages from works by his pupils:

(δ) additions by editors: very rarely

(ε) excerpts from his own works.

³ Sober criticism will not be deterred from attributing the plan to Aristotle simply because at the beginning of Bk. III there is no δὲ in the received text to correspond to a preceding μὲν οὖν, or because a connecting δὲ is sought in vain in II¹ at the opening of Bk. II, and should at least be altered to γάρ, if this opening and the close of Bk. I are to be kept side by side. Such twofold transitions from one book to another are found in the Nicomachean Ethics between IV and V, VII and VIII, IX and X; while between VIII and IX Grant has good ground for suspecting the words περὶ μὲν οὖν τούτων ἐπὶ τοσούτων ἐλήσθω 1163 b 27. [On the transition from Metaph. VI (E) to VII (Z) see Bonitz II 294.]

⁴ That the work in its present shape is as late as Cicero's time is the opinion of Krohn Zur Kritik aristotelischen Schriften I 29 ff. (Brandenburg 1872. 4), and Polenaar Tirocinia critica in Aristotelis Politica (Leyden 1873. 8), and in one sense they are not far wrong; cp. the introduction to my edition of the Poetics, 4 n. (1). They suppose the compiler or compilers to have had mere fragments of Aristotle's own composition before them, which they arranged and pieced together for themselves into a whole full of contradictions by borrowing from the writings of Theophrastus and other Peripatetics, or, as Polenaar thinks, by additions of their own. Polenaar's arguments, however, rest almost entirely on misapprehensions, and this is partly true of Krohn's, while others do not in the remotest degree suffice to establish such sweeping assertions. Krohn does indeed allow that the first book is by Aristotle; but from 13 § 15 he infers that it was originally an independent work, not reflecting that, when taken in connexion with 3 § 1, this passage proves just the opposite; that further the first chapter has no sense except as an introduction to the whole of the Politics, of which we have also an express anticipation at the commencement of c. 3, where there is no trace of a change by another editor. The greater part of Bk. II, in which only "isolated pillars" of Aristotle's structure have been left passage of any length, IV (VII). 1, where we seem to catch the tones of the more animated oral lecture in such marked contrast to all the rest of the work as forcibly to suggest the idea that here we have the lecture-notes of a pupil¹. But the parts executed are often unequal; they never grew to the dimensions of a book actually fit for publication; and when such a work made its appearance after the master's death the editors did not refrain from adding a good deal of foreign matter contradictory of the spirit and interdependence of the work². Here and there, again, we find a twofold discussion of the standing, he assigns to Theophrastos; c. 6, he says, is wholly spurious and of very late origin, c. 5 defective and largely interpolated: and that there is much to offend us in both these chapters is undeniable: see below p. 33 n. (4). The third book he seems to regard as a medley taken from Theophrastos, and various writers of his school, and from other Peripatetics: c. 14 in particular as an excerpt from Theophrastos, Περὶ βασιλείας: cp. p. 18 n. (7) and n. on III. 14. 9 (624). In the principal part of Bk. IV (VII) he finds "fragmentary sketches"; he agrees with Niebuhr (Röm. Alterth. 578 Isler) in deciding that the second and larger part, if not the whole, of Bk. V (VIII) was not written by Aristotle, any more than a considerable part of Bk. VI (IV), of which c. 15 together with VII (VI). 8 is an excerpt from a work by Theophrastos on magistracies; while the greater part of Bk. VIII (V) probably consists of excerpts and pieces retouched from Theophrastos, Περὶ καρῶν: comp. nn. on III. 14. 9 (624) and VIII (V). 11. 9 (1720*). There are some resemblances to the Areopagitikos of Isocrates: see on III. 3 § 2, § 9, 6 § 10, 7 § 1, 11 § 20, IV (VII). 4 § 5, VI (IV). 9 § 7, VII (VI). 5 § 10, VIII (V). 1 § 2. Yet Spengel's assertion "totum Isocratis Areopagiticum in usum suum Aristoteles vertit, tam multi sunt loci, qui eadem tradunt" (Aristotelische Studien III. 59) is a gross exaggeration, as unproved as it is impossible to prove. But why Aristotle should not be credited with them, why we must follow Krohn in rejecting as spurious all the passages where they occur, is simply inexplicable. Compare further my review of Krohn in Philol. Anzeiger v. 1873. 676—680. The most material objection which he raises to the genuineness of Bk. V (VIII) is that ἐνθουσιάζειν, ἐνθουσιᾶν are elsewhere only found in spurious or semi-spurious Aristotelian writings,—ἐνθουσιαστικός only in the Problems, ἐνθουσιασμός only in the dialogue On Philosophy,—whereas Theophrastos paid great attention to this morbid state of ecstasy or delirium.

² To start from the internal connexion of a work as a whole is the only safe mode of procedure in all so-called higher criticism. By discarding this principle Krohn and Polenaar lose all solid footing, preferring, as they do, to regard mere unconnected fragments as the genuine kernel of the work: Sussemihl loc. cit. 679. Not every contradiction is sufficient proof of diversity of authorship; however small the dimensions within which this genuine Aristotelian kernel is reduced, we shall never succeed in eliminating from it all discrepancies of doctrine. Nay, Krohn justly reminds us that "even this original kernel can only be understood on the assumption of a gradual advance in the great thinker's development." After we have detected interpolations, and restored by their excision the connexion which they restored, only an accumulation of difficulties, or such contradictions as strike at the very heart of the system, need be taken into account. Further it must be admitted that no hard and fast line can be drawn here, so that at times the decision is doubtful. Upon such considerations a list of spurious or suspected passages (without reckoning glosses of later introduction and other smaller matters) might be drawn up, in partial agreement with Krohn, as follows:

same topic¹; either both were found amongst Aristotle's materials and then included that nothing might be lost, or else only one was written by Aristotle and the other was derived from a pupil's notes. The work is disfigured by numerous lacunae of greater or less extent: entire sections of some length are wanting altogether². The right order has often been disturbed³. The two grossest instances are that Books VII and VIII should come before Bk. IV, and Bk. VI before Bk. V (counting the books in the order in which they have come down to us)⁴. No scruple has been felt about restoring the proper sequence in this edition, though the dislocation was unquestionably very ancient⁵. For to all appearance

But when the asterisks are removed the lacunae are still plain enough if the critic has the eye to see them. Cp. my critical edition p. LII.

⁴ The one transposition was first made by Nicolas Oresme (died 1382) in his French translation, not published until long afterwards (Paris 1489): and again by Segni in his Italian translation (Florence 1549). A more detailed proof of its correctness was undertaken by Scaino da Salo Quinque Quaestiones ad octo libros de republica (Rome 1577), Conring, Barthélemy St Hilaire, Spengel Ueber die Politik Transactions of the Munich Acad. v. 1 ff. Arist. Studien II. 44 ff. (Munich 1865), Nicks De Arist. Politicorum libris (Bonn 1851), Brandis in his history Griech-Röm. Philos. II ii 1666 ff., 1679 ff. and by others. It has been disputed without success, amongst others by Woltmann in the Rheinisches Museum (New Series) I. 1842. 321—354, Forchhammer in Philologus XVI. 1861. 50—68, Bendixen in Philologus XIII. 1858. 264 ff., XIV. 332 ff., XVI. 408 ff. and in Der alte Staat des Aristoteles (Hamburg 1868. 4to), by Krohn op. c. 30, and Diebitsch De rerum conexu in Arist. libris de re publica (Breslau 1875).

The other transposition was very nearly assumed by Conring; the first who actually made it and tried to demonstrate it was St Hilaire. He was followed by Spengel and even by Woltmann, but was opposed not merely by Bendixen, Forchhammer, Krohn, and Diebitsch, but even by Hildenbrand Geschichte und System der Rechts- und Staatsphilosophie I (Leipzig 1860) 371 f., and by Zeller op. cit. II ii 672 f. n. (2), although they have accepted the first transposition, Hildenbrand under certain conditions and Zeller unreservedly. See below p. 58 n. 2.

even the epitome in Stobaeus¹ presents the traditional arrangement²: and this epitome was taken from a more comprehensive work by Areios Didymos of Alexandria, the friend of Augustus and of Maecenas³. Didymos naturally followed the new recension, the work, beyond all doubt, of his contemporary Andronikos of Rhodes, in which, as has been said⁴, the text of the Politics has come down to us. Yet, as we shall see⁵, in the incomplete sentence with which the third book breaks off sufficiently clear and certain evidence remains that in the older edition Bk. iv (vii) still stood in its right place after Bk. iii.

But there is another circumstance which makes it very questionable to start with, whether the work ever existed in a more complete form. There was a Politics in the Alexandrian library attributed by some to Aristotle, by others to Theophrastos⁶; consisting, it would seem, of exactly eight books; a numerical correspondence not easy to ascribe to mere accident. This fact we learn from the catalogue of Aristotle's writings in Diogenes of Laerte⁷ and in the Anonymus of Ménage⁸. The catalogue goes back to the biographies of Hermippos of Smyrna, a pupil of Callimachus, as its ultimate authority; and no doubt that author followed closely what he found in the Alexandrian library⁹. Before this the Peripatetic philosopher Hieronymos of Rhodes appears to have used the Aristotelian *Politics*¹⁰; even Eudemos may possibly betray an earlier acquaintance with the treatise¹¹. And it is highly improbable, to say the least, that in the century (200 B.C.—101 B.C.) which elapsed between Hermippos and Apellikon of Teos, the precursor of Tyrannion and Andronikos¹, this older edition should have been so completely lost that the new editors had not a single copy of it at their disposal², while it is equally incredible that they should intentionally have declined to use it. The exact agreement in the number of the books would undoubtedly render it a far more reasonable conclusion that—except for the transposition, to which we have now no clue—the new edition of this work differed much less from the old than was the case with some other Aristotelian writings.

The first distinct traces of actual use of the treatise are next to be found in Cicero³. It is true he did not use it directly⁴ and the new recension of Andronikos was not at the time in existence. Yet we are not obliged to assume that he drew from an earlier writer who availed himself of the former edition⁵: it is quite as conceivable that Tyrannion, with whom he was in frequent intercourse, may have provided him with extracts from the work suitable for his purpose, and these may have been his sources⁶. Even when the new edition appeared, it found but few readers; the traces of its use are extremely scanty⁷, and it is in

In his critical edition, p. XLIV and note (82), Susemihl wrongly followed Spengel Arist. Stud. II. 57 n. (4) in maintaining that everything which Dionysios relates l. c. v. 73 f. exactly agrees with Aristotle III. 14 f., and consequently that Theophrastos περὶ βασιλείας is borrowed altogether from Aristotle. Meanwhile Krohn, op. c. 47, pointed out certain essential differences, and Henkel, op. c. 3 note 1, has more accurately explained where Theophrastos' line of thought diverges and becomes original. Hence what Dionysios has here borrowed from Theophrastos could not have been derived from Aristotle. But this only keeping with their infrequency that we do not possess a single ms. of the Politics of earlier date than the fourteenth century. Amongst the Arabs it remained quite neglected. To the reading public of the west in the Christian middle age it was introduced by the Latin translation of the Dominican monk William of Moerbeke¹: on the basis of his version Albert the Great and Thomas Aquinas wrote commentaries to the work².

III. GENERAL ESTIMATE.

At the time when the Politics was first made known to mediæval students, and for some centuries afterwards, the ground was not prepared for a due appreciation of it. It was only by degrees, as the development of the modern state went on, that the treatise began to be rightly understood³, until at last even in its present incomplete and fragmentary condition we have learnt to recognise in it 'the richest and greatest contribution of antiquity, or, allowing for the difference of the times, perhaps the greatest of all the works we have upon political science'⁴. There is certainly no second work to be named in this field of enquiry which in a like degree displays the rare combination of statesmanlike intellect, a scholar's acquaintance with history, and the observation of a man of science, with the philosopher's systematic arrangement of phenomena and keen penetration into their inmost nature⁵. Marvellous student of human nature that he was, Aristotle, although never actually engaged in public affairs, has observed with all a statesman's shrewd sense the complicated political and social relations increases the improbability of Krohn's assertion mentioned p. 15 n. above, for which these two passages are his sole authority,—that Pol. III. 14 is an excerpt from that very work of Theophrastos. Compare the note on III. 14. 9 (624).

² That of the two Thomas wrote his earlier than his master Albert, between 1261 and 1269, was the view of Jourdain Recherches critiques sur les anciennes traductions d'Aristote 393 f., 456 (Paris 1819). Nearly the whole text of the old Latin version was incorporated in the commentary of Albert, who in this work imitated the method of his pupil. Cp. my critical edition VI nn. (4) & (5). [Von Hertling in Rh. Mus. XXXIX. 1884. 446—457 argues that the question of relative priority cannot be decided, but that S. Thomas left his commentary unfinished at his death in 1274. ⁴ Zeller op. c. II ii 753 f. Compare Bradley's admirable exposition in Hellenica (Oxford, 1880) 181—183. Lang is certainly not far wrong when he remarks in the Introductory Essays to Bolland's translation of Bks. I. III. IV (VII) p. 15 (London 1877. 8), 'Indeed, when we come to analyse his method we find three incongruous elements, really scientific enquiry, aristocratic prejudice, and the dreams of a metaphysic which literally sublimi ferit sidera vertice, and listens for the eternal harmonies of Nature'. This thought is worked out more fully by Grant Aristotle 117 ff.

of his nation, and in part of other nations. He has analysed them with the cool indifference of the biologist, with the same unwearied calm and caution which characterize his treatises on natural science. The astonishing store of information which he had amassed upon history in general and the special history of nearly all the Greek communities is here turned to the best account. At the same time there is diffused throughout the work a warm genial breath of philosophic and moral idealism, which, however closely allied to some of its defects, nevertheless reconciles us to certain harsh traits in it. From the writer's peculiar point of view however this very tendency to idealism, so far from softening such traits, serves only to bring them into stronger relief: so that every now and then we see the shrewd thinker, elsewhere so strictly logical, entangle himself in a network of contradictions.

The peculiarity of his point of view and therewith the distinctive importance of the work, historically and for all time to come, consists in this, that Aristotle alone with full and complete success has given expression in theory to the whole import of the Greek state and of Greek political life in all its bearings. The only limitation to this is the decided repugnance he manifests to certain political and social ideas, the outcome of that development of democracy, whereby we may fairly admit the Greek state to have been, so to speak, carried beyond itself. This success deserves to be all the more highly estimated in proportion as his position is in this respect unique. Certainly even before he wrote, not to mention Plato's trenchant dialogues, there was a literature—it may be a tolerably large literature—upon political, legal and social questions, as may be learnt from his own¹ and Plato's² cursory notices, although we know next to nothing else about these writers³. The passages quoted show how many ideas deserving of consideration they had disclosed, but at the same time how far they fell short of the goal which Aristotle attained. Here again his dependence on Plato is evident; a dependence far greater than was once imagined or than might be expected from the severity of his polemical criticism, which is frequently, nay in most cases, successful. For firstly, Aristotle's criticism touches what are merely external excrescences of the two pattern states sketched by Plato in the Republic and the Laws; enough of common ground still remains on which to raise his own design of an absolutely best constitution side by side with them¹. Further, the Laws proves Plato by no means deficient in exact knowledge of Athenian public life; while above all, his descriptions in the Republic of other constitutions besides the 'only perfect state', i.e. of the actually existing forms of government, suffice to show 'that he did not lack experience or penetration for judging of political conditions'². In short Aristotle is indebted to his master for numerous ideas in every department of political speculation³. But it should not be forgotten how often these ideas in Plato are mere germs which only received a fruitful development at the hands of his disciple; or random statements which require to be demonstrated and expanded by Aristotle, and to be fitted into their place in the whole framework of his system, before their full scope is attained. When all has been deducted that can in any way be regarded as an inheritance from Plato, quite enough remains which Aristotle can claim for his very own. One great difference in the works of these two men is most characteristically presented. When Plato comes to deal with existing forms of government he depicts them in a rough and ready way; whereas Aristotle bestows the most affectionate care on explaining and reproducing their minutest details; it is evident that he lingers over them involuntarily, as if they were his own peculiar province, with far greater pleasure and patience, in spite of his theories, than when he is treating of his own ideal state.

From the point of view which has just been characterized the horizon is to Aristotle necessarily limited. Here, too, it is to the limitation that he owes most of what he has in common with Plato upon this subject. In both, the close connexion of Politics with Ethics has a beneficial effect; in both, it is a weakness that this connexion becomes, in genuine Greek fashion, too much like entire unity. Each of them recognises in the state itself the school of morality in the Greek sense of the word, as the harmonious development of all the powers with which individuals in different kind and degree have been endowed; the preparation, therefore, for true human happiness. Only from this point can we explain the peculiar assumption, common to these two thinkers, of a pattern state to be specially constructed in contrast to all actually existing constitutions; a state only possible amongst Hellenes as the most highly gifted race; in which the perfect citizen is also the perfect man¹. Further, these two philosophers have no higher or more comprehensive conception of the state than as merely a Greek city-community, a canton with hamlets and villages: hence their ideal of a perfect state never really emerges from this narrow setting². Nay more, it is saddled with all the conditions of a small Greek city-state: slavery in the first place; depreciation of labour; contempt for commerce, industry, and trade; and the peculiarly Greek conception that leisure, to be devoted to the exclusive pursuit of the affairs of the state, and to the intellectual and moral culture of himself and his fellow-citizens, free from all compulsion to trouble about a living, is the only thing worthy of a true freeman; a conception that to our present view savours strongly of idleness. Lastly this makes it necessary that the minority, consisting of an exclusive body of full citizens, should have a secure capital guaranteed to them³.

But there is this vast difference between Aristotle and Plato. By the latter this very limitation of the Greek city-community is carried to the n. (19b), II. 2. 3 (132), III. 3. 4 (460). Wilamowitz on the other hand endeavours to show, op. c. 110—113, that the Athenian state of Cleisthenes and Pericles, as it actually existed, was not really subject to this limitation.

extreme, and the state as it were forced back into the family, becoming under the ideal constitution nothing but an expanded family. The former on the other hand gives all prominence to the conception of the state, so far as the above limitation allows; he is careful to draw the sharpest distinction between the state and the family at the very time when he is demonstrating the true significance of the latter in relation to the former. This is made the starting-point not simply of his whole exposition, wherein at the outset he assumes a hostile attitude to Plato¹, but in II. 2 § 2, § 7, of his attack upon Plato's ideal state in particular². By exploring, in all directions farther than did his master, the nature of the Hellenic state, he has penetrated to the inmost essence of the state in general, of which this Hellenic state was at any rate an important embodiment. He has thus succeeded in discovering for all succeeding times a series of the most important laws of political and social life. Here first, for example, not in Plato, do we find the outlines of Political Economy. At the same time in this limitation of his point of view must be sought the reason why from the soundest premisses, from observations of fact most striking and profound, he not unfrequently deduces the most mistaken conclusions.

IV. ECONOMIC (O'IKONOMIKH)—SLAVERY AND THE THEORY OF WEALTH³.

The opening chapters, Bk. I. cc. 1, 2, form the introduction to the work, and here we follow our author with undivided assent. In opposition to Plato he traces the origin of the family to a process of organic natural growth, and next shows how the state arises out of the family through the intermediate step of the clan-village⁴. At the same time he states what is the specific difference between the state and the family, and characterizes the former as the product of no arbitrary convention, but rather of a necessity arising from man's inner nature. He proclaims a truth as novel as it was important⁵ that man, and properly speaking he alone of all creatures upon the earth, is a being destined by nature for political society. Nevertheless the actual combination to form the state appears (see 2 § 15) to be man's own spontaneous act¹, quite as much as the actual formation of poetry out of its germs in man's inner nature and the first rude attempts to develop them².

The expositions which form the first main division of the work, the theory of the household or family as the basis of the state (οἰκονομική I. cc. 3—13), make a mixed impression upon the reader: especially is this true of the account of slavery c. 4. ff.

Besides (1) the view of those in favour of simple adherence to custom, who would maintain the existing slavery due to birth, purchase, or war, as perfectly justified, and (2) the more moderate view accepted by Plato, which pronounced against the extension of slavery to Hellenes³, Aristotle found a third theory already in the field which rejected all slavery as contrary to nature. However true in itself, this last-named theory was many centuries in advance of the age⁴; and beyond all doubt its defenders had lightly passed over what was the main point, the possibility namely of making their principle a living reality at the time⁵. Either Plato was unacquainted with this view or he considered that it did not require to be refuted; in any case it was an axiom with him, that within the limits assigned slavery was justified. Thus Aristotle deserves unqualified approval for having been the first to appreciate the

the proposition is just as true now as when Aristotle wrote it.

⁴ Even in the time of the Roman empire voices like Seneca's remained unsupported. The whole order of ancient society was once for all established on the basis of slavery, and even Christianity, although it contained in itself the principle which must lead to its extinction, could make no alteration for the time being. The primitive Christian Church may have indirectly prepared for the abolition of slavery (see Lecky History of Rationalism II. 258 ff.), but it was directly hostile to such a change. See for proof and elucidation of this statement L. Schiller Die Lehre des Aristoteles von der Sklaverei 3 ff. (Erlangen 1847. 4) and Oncken op. cit. II. 60—74. It should be remembered that even now all the traces of slavery have not as yet disappeared amongst Christian nations, one of the most important having only been destroyed by the recent civil war in North America; that serfdom was but lately abolished in Russia, and the last remnants of it in Germany were not removed until the present century. [If the status of slavery is not tolerated openly in Christendom, there is much analogy to it in the position of uncivilized tribes in relation to European peoples in colonial settlements, e.g. that of the South-African natives to the Boers, under the guise of indenture. But the system of labour recruiting in the Western Pacific for Queensland and Fiji, even assuming that no irregularities occur, and the coolie traffic generally (whether in English, French, or Spanish possessions) have equally the effect of placing ignorant and unprotected natives entirely at the mercy of their employers, and that, too, in a strange country. H. W. J.]

difficulties of the question in their full extent. But a successful solution of it was for him impossible. With a clear and true insight he saw that the theory referred to could not practically be carried out in the Greek state; a higher conception of the state, as we have said, he neither did nor could possess. It was inevitable that this insight should mislead him into the belief that the view itself was theoretically incorrect: that he should honestly endeavour to find scientific grounds for this belief of his, is entirely to his credit. It was just as inevitable that the attempt merely involved him in self-contradictions, and indeed resulted in the proof of the exact opposite¹. In substance he decides in favour of a view similar to Plato's, which he more exactly determines and modifies by saying that there are certain slaves by nature who are to be sought for amongst non-Hellenes, and that none but these ought actually to be enslaved². 'The thought that slavery is incompatible with 'the dignity of man' has occurred to him as well as to the unconditional opponents of the institution, but not as yet 'the thought of the universality of man's dignity'³. In contradiction to his own psychological principles he makes the difference between the most perfect and the least perfect of men as great as that between man and beast, and thinks that thereby he has theoretically discovered his slaves by nature. But he has himself to admit that there is no certain practical criterion by which to distinguish these men from others. It is quite possible that a slave's soul may dwell in a nobly formed body, and the soul of one of nature's freemen in an ignoble frame; furthermore men of truly free and noble mind may be born amongst the non-Hellenes, or men of servile nature amongst the Hellenes. The consequence is that the criterion of Hellenic birth, to which on the whole Aristotle adheres, ought not to serve as an unconditional protection against well deserved slavery⁴. These, he thinks, are only exceptions to the rule; but he cannot deny that these exceptions are numerous; and yet he does not observe, that therefore of necessity there must be many cases where slavery as it actually exists is in perpetual conflict with the law of nature, even as laid down by himself. His remarks on the need of domestic servants for the house, and on the natural antithesis of ruler and subject pervading all relations of existence are clear and striking; but they by no means warrant the conclusion that these servants must at the same time be slaves or serfs⁵. Yet in all fairness it ought to be borne in mind not merely that the Fathers of the early Church used arguments in favour of slavery which are no better¹, but that in all ages attempts have been made to justify serfdom or slavery by similar fallacies². Nay more, Aristotle's arguments, when properly qualified, are well suited to become the subject of grave consideration even in our own day; to make us aware of contradictions in our present views; and thus to suggest some modest restraint upon a too vehement criticism of the great thinker of antiquity. Or does the conviction, which is forced upon us by experience, that whole races of men lack the capacity for civilization, so readily accord with our belief, no less well founded, in the dignity of human nature everywhere? And does the interval between the lowest individual of such a race and the greatest spirits of humanity really fall far short of that which separates man from the animals? If lastly it is not to be denied, that even within the pale of civilized nations Providence ensures the necessary distinction between some men adapted to physical toil and others who are suited to intellectual exertion, should we not be as perplexed as Aristotle if we were required to set up a valid criterion between the two sorts of natures? As a matter of fact he who has to live by the labour of his hands will always be debarred from that complete participation in political life which constitutes the citizen proper. Even the educated man of our own day is so fully occupied with the discharge of his professional duties that frequently he has no time to take that share in politics which the modern state, if it is to prosper, is obliged to demand from him³.

The more general discussions on production and property⁴ which follow the investigation into slavery, I. 8—11, cannot be said to be attached to it 'in a fairly systematic manner'⁵, but on the contrary quite loosely and lightly⁶. It is open to question, however, whether the passage which we must in all probability assume to be lost a little further on (I. 12. 1) did not originally supplement and complete the requisite organic connexion of these discussions with the theory of the family as a whole⁷.

However that may be, certain it is that the principle of exclusive slave labour, which Aristotle has adopted, has robbed his economic theory of precisely that which must be taken to be the soul of the modern science, the conception of economic labour. It has already been remarked that he cannot help sharing to the full the national prejudice of Greece against all industrial labour as something degrading and servile. As Oncken in particular has excellently pointed out¹, his sort of distinction between direct or natural production and indirect acquisition by means of exchange, and further between the subdivisions of the two species, derives its peculiar colouring from this defect. 'The axiom 'that man must consider himself the born proprietor of all the treasures 'of the earth, we also hold to be true'; and the proposition, which Aristotle is fond of repeating and which we meet with once more here, that nature makes nothing in vain, should continue to be respected in spite of the thorough-going or half-and-half materialism of our times. But one essential side of man's relation to his planet and to the rest of its productions and inhabitants has escaped Aristotle altogether: of the important part borne by labour in determining this relation he knows nothing: in common with all the ancients he lacked the idea of the gradual acquisition of command over nature and of the gradual unfolding of human culture which accompanies it step by step. Hence it is that he has no presentiment of the epoch-making importance of agriculture as the transition to a settled life; he sets this occupation completely on a level with that of the nomad, the hunter, or the fisherman. He does not separate settled cattle-breeding from the pastoral life of the herdsman who wanders without a home; nor does he bring it into inseparable connexion, as he should do, with agriculture². Agriculture moreover, he thinks, can be carried on by slaves just like other trades³, and 'the owner of a piece of ground tilled in this way stands to the 'fruits of the earth in much the same relation as the herdsman, the 'hunter and fisherman. He gets them ready made into his hands, and 'with even less trouble than they do: thus the notion of individual 'labour, of personal acquisition in agriculture, falls into the background 'in Aristotle's view. And this explains the gross inexactitude in his 'notion of property, which is disclosed when he treats plunder as a 'further natural species of production standing on the same footing with 'the former species.' Besides, in so doing he overlooks the fact that plunder by its very nature cannot possibly be included, as it is by him, with direct appropriation of the gifts of nature as distinct from sale and barter, that is, from every kind of voluntary exchange: for it is nothing else than the transfer of property in the rudest form by violence and without compensation. Whoever then regards the most violent form of this transfer as natural would be bound in all fairness to hold the same of its milder forms, fraud and theft. Nothing but personal labour creates a valid and incontestable right to property, and such a right over the soil can only be won by the plough. Thus Aristotle can make an excellent defence of the utility of property against Plato and can set it in its true light; but missing the conception of economic labour he misses therewith the full and logically clear notion of property. His notion too of what is natural must under such circumstances lose all definiteness when it comes to be applied to civilized nations in advanced stages of development. He certainly never intended to concede to plunder a place in his model state; but he is exposed to the charge of inconsistency, when he nevertheless declares it to be something natural on the ground that it undoubtedly is so to men in a state of nature, without seeing that what is natural for men in a state of nature is not natural for civilized men¹. Indeed he has in general no sort of insight into the nature of historical development; for in history he discerns, not the reign of general laws, but merely the action of individual men, free or even capricious, although often wrecked on circumstances.

When he comes to treat of exchange, not merely do we find Adam Smith's distinction between value in use and value in exchange already anticipated², but the whole discussion is evidence 'how acutely Aristotle 'has thought out a subject which Hellenic philosophy before him 'seems at the best to have barely touched. The successive steps in 'the rise of commerce and the origin of money could not be exhibited 'with more of truth to fact or of historical accuracy than has been here 'accomplished in a style of unerring precision, piercing to the heart of 'the subject to reproduce it with classic brevity and definiteness, yet so 'exhaustively that modern science has found nothing to alter or to 'add.' Besides admitting that exchange of commodities is not contrary to nature he goes on to show how from it buying and selling necessarily arose, and from that again a new mode of acquisition, trade in merchandise. Apparently he would further allow exchange to be carried on through a coined medium, so long as it is merely to relieve indispensable barter and not as a business of its own. But here comes in again his want of clearness and that inconsistency which leads him to see an ever increasing degeneracy and departure from the paths of nature¹ in what he himself recognises as a necessary development: 'starting with the most accurate views on the nature and necessity of monetary exchange he is led in the end actually to reject all commerce and all practical trading with capital.' He rightly sees how essential it is that the article chosen as the medium of exchange should be useful in itself², but at the same time as the determinate value of each coin is regulated by law and convention he is misled into the belief that nothing but pure caprice has a hand in this convention: that it was by mere chance that metals have been selected out of all useful articles, and in particular that amongst all the more highly civilized nations gold and silver are exclusively employed for coining into money, at all events for foreign trade. Once for all he states the case in such a way that it might easily be believed he has come, a few lines further on, in contradiction to himself, to hold that coined money no longer current loses even its value as a metal³.

Further, while correctly explaining the origin of money, 'he nevertheless fails to recognise to the full extent the way in which its introduction must naturally react upon the value of natural products: how they are all without exception thereby turned into wares, whose value is regulated by their market-price, so that anything which finds no market, or no sale in the market, possesses no more value than heaps of gold on a desert island; the richest harvest of the productions of nature, if its abundance does not attract a purchaser, being just as useless rubbish as the wealth called into existence by Midas⁴. After the later stage of a monetary system has been attained Aristotle makes the vain attempt to preserve in his conceptions the primitive economy of nature, which has come to an end simply because it has become impossible. In the business of the merchant he sees no more than what lies on the surface, speculation, money-making, the accumulation of capital: accordingly he condemns it as a purely artificial and unnatural pursuit. There too he overlooks the mental labour, the economic service which trade renders, not by any means exclusively to benefit the purses of those engaged in it.' The insatiate nature of unscrupulous avarice he opposes in most forcible language, but it is in vain that 'he endeavours to restrict productive labour in domestic economy within any other limits than those which are set by the powers and conscience of the individual⁵. Of industry as

'understood in Political Economy he has no more conception than 'of labour.' Having failed to recognise the importance of agriculture in human development he now mistakes still more the benefits introduced by property, which money first made really capable of transfer, 'that 'second great victory in the struggle between human labour and the 'forces of nature'. To this great democratic revolution it is impossible 'to accommodate' his thoroughly aristocratic economic theory, which, at the expense of toiling slaves and resident aliens, guarantees in true Hellenic fashion to the handful of privileged citizens their leisure and the secure provision of their subsistence from their family estates, so that in fact they need take no trouble to increase their possessions. 'Aristotle's freeholder,' in Oncken's words, 'is not a producer at all, but 'consumes what is given by nature. Aristotle has no insight into the 'true natural law of economic development, the aim of which is to 'overcome nature by freeing industrial life from the vicissitudes of her 'smile and frown.' Of the importance herein attaching to capital antiquity generally and the middle age never had an inkling; as little did they perceive that to receive interest on capital is not really different from selling the produce of labour. On the perverse view which Aristotle took of money² it is intelligible, that in accord with all ancient philosophy and the whole of the middle age³, he declares lending money upon interest to be the most shameful of all modes of gain; yet it is certainly true on the other hand that 'the free community of antiquity 'was in reality nothing but an association of capitalists who lived on 'the interest of the capital they had invested in their slaves.'

Lastly, it is interesting to see how inconsistent this whole economic theory becomes when it passes over to the 'practical part'. What is here (I. II §§ 1, 2) described as the most natural mode of life is nothing but cattle-raising and tillage pure and simple on a large scale, which is impossible without considerable capital, an industrial spirit and a knowledge of the market. Consequently 'the separation which Aristotle has 'made between artificial and natural modes of life cannot be strictly 'maintained even in the case of those who rear cattle and till the soil, 'for whom nature herself, in the strictest sense of the word, provides a 'field of labour. He proves in his own case the truth of his profound 'remark made in this same connexion: that in all such matters, while 'speculation is free, practice has its necessary restrictions.' It is no less noteworthy that in his economic theory he completely loses sight of that essential distinction between the family and the state upon which he insists so much elsewhere. Several times in these discussions he mentions the πολιτικός who controls the finances of a state as well as the οἰκονόμος who manages the property of a household, and that too in a way which forces the reader 'to assume that the task and the procedure in both cases are completely similar': I. 8 §§ 13—15, IO §§ 1—3, II § 11. With this agrees the decided irony¹ with which he speaks of those statesmen whose whole political wisdom lies in their financial devices, while these devices amount to nothing but keeping the state coffers constantly filled by all kinds of monopolies. And yet 'the great revolution caused by the necessity of exchange he has deduced with perfect correctness from the fact that entirely new conditions of life and of production arise as soon as ever a single family develops into a circle of several families (I. 9. 5). What changes then are to be anticipated when small communities coalesce into a political unity; when intercourse springs up between different political bodies and reacts in a modifying and transforming manner upon the internal condition of each of them! Had Aristotle gone into this question the untenableness of his economic theory would have been made even more glaringly manifest than is at present the case.'

In the last chapter of the first book, when Aristotle comes to enquire into the treatment of the slave and his capacity for virtue, his peculiar view of natural slavery involves him in an awkward dilemma, from which he cannot be said to have escaped very happily. The slave by nature to a certain extent remains a human being, and yet again to a certain extent he has, properly speaking, ceased to be one. On the one hand Aristotle demands that there should be a specific difference, and not merely one of degree, between the virtue (ἀρετή) of the man, the woman, the child, and the slave (e.g. 13 §§ 4, 5). On the other, his own subsequent elaborate enquiry into ethical virtue², as soon as the question is started, wherein consists the distinction between the virtue which commands and the virtue which obeys, tends far more to a mere quantitative variation than to really distinct species³—to say nothing of the further question, wherein the obedience of the wife differs from that of the child, and both from that of the slave. And this is not the only defect which this enquiry displays⁴.

V. THE REVIEW OF PRECEDING THEORIES AND APPROVED CONSTITUTIONS.

With the second book we come at once to the theory of the state properly so called; divided, according to Aristotle's own statement, into two parts which treat (1) of the constitution, and (2) of legislation. From two passages in the later books, III. 15 § 2, VI (IV). 1 §§ 9, 10, it is unquestionable¹ that the philosopher intended to treat of both in his work; but in the form in which it has come down to us it has not advanced beyond the former, and even of this considerable sections are wanting.

The second book more especially constitutes the critical part, the remainder of the work the positive or dogmatic part, of the theory of the constitution. In the former is contained an examination of the model constitutions proposed by other theorists, Plato, Phaleas, and Hippodamos, as well as of the best amongst the forms of government actually established, Sparta, Crete, Carthage, and the Solonian constitution; a criticism which of course gives us glimpses² of many of the positive features of Aristotle's own ideal of a constitution. His attack upon the polity of pure reason, as it claims to be, in Plato's Republic ranks among the most successful parts of the whole work. In a higher degree perhaps than anywhere else is here displayed 'the philosopher's practical sense, his clear eye open to the conditions 'and laws of the actual, his profound comprehension of human 'nature and of political and domestic life³.' Against every form of socialism and communism it remains unrivalled in cogency up to the present day. All the well meaning attempts that have been made to defend Plato against this criticism⁴ have disclosed very little that will stand proof; nor have the charges of sophistry brought against it been to any extent successfully made out¹. Only this much is true, that however forcible this criticism is in general it nevertheless contains misapprehensions in particulars; some of which are very serious²; and its author had not the power, if indeed he ever had the will, to transfer himself to the innermost groove of Plato's thought³.

These defects stand out far more forcibly when in the following chapter he treats of the state described in Plato's Laws. Upon this criticism we cannot pronounce a judgment by any means so favourable: indeed it contains some things which are all but incomprehensible⁴. Even the refutation of community of goods has not altogether that full cogency, derived from the essential nature of the case, which is apparent in the refutation of community of wives and children⁵. As we see from this criticism, and yet more clearly from that upon Phaleas, 7 § 6 f, Aristotle is himself in favour of considerable restrictions upon the rights of property⁶. Every difference of principle in this respect between his own ideal state and Plato's in the Laws disappears: when all things are taken into account Aristotle is no further removed from Plato's first ideal state in the one than Plato himself in the other⁷. Here, therefore, Aristotle's criticism can only affect what are relatively subordinate points, and under these circumstances it frequently assumes a petty and generally unfair character⁸. The refutation of ⁴ Even Zeller and Oncken do not seem as yet to have observed this difference. It was fully recognised by Van der Rest op. c. 108 ff., 121 ff., 221 ff., 348 ff.: but he did not investigate its causes, and in one particular he should be corrected by the notes on II. 5. 25. It would be quite possible to suspect with Krohn (see p. 14 n. 4) that, wholly or in part, c. 6 is not genuine. But it is hard to see who but Aristotle could have written §§ 10—15, and scarcely anywhere are the difficulties greater. See the notes on these sections.

⁵ See on II. 5. 5.

⁶ See on II. 5 § 7 n. (158), § 15 n. (166), 7 § 6 n. (236 b). How Van der Rest op. c. 349 can blame Aristotle for requiring the public education to aim at creating such a spirit of fraternity that we willingly grant our fellow-citizens a share in the enjoyment of our own possessions, is incomprehensible.

Phaleas, again, is enriched with the fruits of extensive observation of mankind; but, like the review of Plato's Laws, it leaves untouched the kernel of the matter, the inalienability and indivisibility of the equal portions of land allotted to the citizens. Furthermore Aristotle sees with keen perception that if this measure is to be carried out, a normal number of births and deaths must be calculated and the surplus population, on the basis of this calculation, removed by a resort to abortion, in order that the number of citizens may always remain the same. Nor has he any scruples about recommending this horrible measure and thus invading far more than Phaleas, or Plato in the Laws, the sanctities of marriage and family life¹. What he further insists upon in reply to Phaleas is the same thing which he had already insisted upon when criticizing Plato (c. 5 § 15), namely that uniformity of education of the right kind is the main point, while all the other institutions have only a subsidiary importance².

We may admit then with Oncken³ that Aristotle belonged to the few privileged spirits of antiquity who were the pioneers of progress towards that richer and riper humanity which remained foreign to the heathen world at large. In defending the natural law of marriage and private property he first discovered the fundamental laws of the independent life of the community: the position which he assigns to women goes far beyond the Hellenic point of view: and he was the first who, by adjustment of the unity of the state to the freedom of its citizens, at least attempted to determine the limits of the state's activity. But we must also bring out more forcibly than Oncken has done how far, even in Aristotle, all these great conceptions fall short of attaining their clear full logical development to important results. And the review of Hippodamos shows us how little, after all, he was disposed, or even qualified, to follow ideas even then not unknown to Greek antiquity, the tendency of which was by a sharper limitation of the field of law and justice so to break the omnipotence of the state that its legislation should be confined to the maintenance of justice within these limits; this, rather than education, being made its function⁴. Here, as in the defence of slavery, we see that along with the excesses of democracy Aristotle rejected many just conceptions which had grown out of it⁵. However much to the purpose the objections which he brings against Hippodamos with regard to his division of the civic body¹, they are defective from the jurist's point of view²; while he makes not a single attempt to refute what is the real foundation of the whole scheme, the need for the restriction upon legislation described above. Evidently he thinks it not worth while to do so, just as in a later passage (III. 9. 8) he treats every opinion on the function of the state which implies such a mode of regarding legislation as ipso facto disproved.

The review of the political institutions of Sparta, Crete, and Carthage is primarily of great historical value for our knowledge of their constitutions³: indeed apart from it we should know next to

thor, but only that the work was first published after his death with additions by the editor. For the genuineness of the groundwork at least has been sufficiently made out by Heitz and by Bergk Zur Aristotelischen Politie der Athener (On a fragment of the Politics found lately, treating of Athens, in the Rhein. Mus. xxxvi. 1881. 87—115: cp. Susemihl in Bursian's Jahresber. xxx. 1882. 20—22. If the matter rested thus Gilbert would be completely refuted. But leaving the correctness of these dates an open question, it is not very probable, to say the least, that Aristotle should have published thus early a work like the Πολιτεῖαι based upon such comprehensive studies. On another side Oncken op. c. II p. 330 f, by the help of fragments of this work which we still possess on the Polity of Lacedaemon, has tried to prove that Aristotle, quite independently of Ephoros, was the first to investigate Spartan constitutional history in true scientific spirit; that he probably visited Sparta himself for this purpose and drew information there from living oral tradition. The difficulties in connexion with this hypothesis are patent, and with reference to Crete at any rate the coincidence between Aristotle and Ephoros is of such a kind that in accordance with the line of argument above Aristotle must have used either Ephoros or his authority: see the notes on II. 10 § 1 (351), § 2 (352, 354), § 5 (359), § 6 (360). Even with reference to Sparta hardly any other conclusion seems possible: see the notes on II. 9 § 17 (310); 10 § 1, § 2 (352, 354), § 5 (359): VIII (v). I § 10 (1498), 7 § 2 (1592), 11 § 3 (1710), 12 § 12 (1771), and compare Rose op. cit. 398, 490. Only we are not to infer from this that Ephoros was Aristotle's only authority nothing of the Carthaginian constitution : moreover we are bound on the whole to subscribe to Aristotle's estimate of them¹. We shall not venture however to rank his merits quite so highly as Oncken has done. Certainly there never was before so mercilessly destructive and yet so just a criticism upon that Spartan state which up till then had been, most unwarrantably, the idol of all aristocratic and oligarchical circles. Yet on the one hand we must remember that close as were his relations with those circles, and although in essentials his own pattern-states were based upon similar foundations, Plato had been by no means blind to the defects of the Cretan and Spartan constitutions. Indeed in important particulars, and even in those of the greatest importance, Aristotle can but repeat the censure pronounced by his master². On the other hand it is really necessary to reflect how, after so crushing a criticism which leaves scarcely anything untouched, Aristotle can possibly still be content, like Plato, to pronounce the Cretan and here. On the contrary while it is more than doubtful whether he has Ephoros in view when he quotes certain opinions and statements (see on II. 6. 17, II. 9. 11), it is quite certain that in regard to both states Aristotle diverges considerably in details from Ephoros, partly indeed from all other authorities. This divergence must be due to another source, and here and there to one which he alone has utilized : see on II. 10 § 6 (360), § 10 (369) : VI (IV). 11 § 15 (1301).

banefulness ? And the procedure which Trieber commends only deserves to be praised because in fact even in historical matters we are fully entitled to argue from consequences to their causes, from the end to the beginning. Whoever considers the facts collected in the note on II. 9. 37 (350) will hardly find the suggestion of Trieber and others—that the readiness of the Spartan ephors and senators to receive bribes only belongs to later times—particularly credible ; but first of all he will enquire, with what date these later times ought rightly to commence. Fülleborn in a note to Garve's translation II p. 242 says most sensibly : ' Aristotle's 'remarks are very strangely contradicted 'by all the famous anecdotes of the heroism and chastity of the Spartan women. 'But different periods must be distinguished in Spartan history.....and it 'should be borne in mind that Aristotle 'after all deserves more credit than 'scattered anecdotes of such a kind.' But should not this consideration be extended to other cases ? Where Aristotle assumes that Spartan institutions were always thus and thus, while later writers contradict him and even claim to know the names of those who introduced the change, should we directly and unhesitatingly pronounce these later authorities right ? See the notes on II. 9 § 14 (299, 300), § 15 (303).

² Of what is really the main point Aristotle says this himself II. 9 § 34 (cp. note). See further the notes on II. 9 § 5 (283), § 11 (295 b), § 20 (318), § 23 (324), § 25 (330), § 27 (335), § 31 (341).

Spartan constitutions (with the addition merely of the Carthaginian) to be the next best after his own model state, and thus himself to sacrifice to the idol he has just destroyed. As to the socialist elements in those constitutions, they certainly do not go too far for him, but on the contrary not far enough; like his master, he is far more rigidly logical. The social principles of Aristotle's model state are as strictly deduced as those of Plato's.

It would be quite incredible that, amongst the best approved constitutions actually established, Aristotle should not have mentioned Solon's as well as the other three. For this reason alone it is hardly conceivable that the section in which it is discussed should not be genuine: rather is it matter of surprise that the subject is dismissed so briefly. But the mere list of legislators, with which the second book ends, is certainly a foreign interpolation which contradicts the clearly expressed purpose of the book¹.

VI. THE LEADING PROPOSITIONS OF POLITICAL SCIENCE.

We might naturally expect the exposition of Aristotle's own model constitution to follow directly upon this criticism of those which claim that title. But here again, with that characteristic unlikeness to Plato which was before remarked², our philosopher declines to regard as comparatively unimportant everything else in political theory except the perfect state. The positive or constructive side of the theory of the constitution, to which we now come, includes two parts, one general, the other special. The former³ and much shorter portion, III. CC. I—13, treats of the fundamental conditions of the healthy working of constitutions, which, as such, apply equally to the best form of state and to all others⁴. More explicitly, this portion falls into two main divisions: the first (A), cc. 1—5, while touching here and there by anticipation⁵ upon the classification of separate constitutions, for the most part merely prepares for this by a discussion of the fundamental political conceptions which must be assumed for all of them: the true citizens cc. 1,

⁴ Hildenbrand, op. c. 408 f. He rightly points out another reason why Bk. III should follow closely on Bk. II; 'the latter, at its very outset, along with its task of criticism attempts a positive

'solution of the problem'—of the utmost importance for all constitutions and intimately connected with the subject of Bk. I—'whether and to what extent the family and private property, institutions subserving individual interests, have any right to continue in the presence of the state, the organization for the common weal.'

2 : the essential identity of a state c. 3 : the relation between the virtue of the good citizen and that of the good man cc. 4, 5. Now this relation will vary under different constitutions and thus determine their nature and comparative merit. The subject of the remaining chapters (B), cc. 6—13, is, firstly, a definition of constitution (πολιτεία) in general, and a preliminary classification of the several forms of the state (πολιτεῖαι). As we are told in Bk. 1, the end of the state is Happiness, the true well-being and common weal of the citizens. All constitutions which make the interest of the governed the end of government are normal constitutions (ὀρθαὶ πολιτεῖαι) : those which exist for the interest of the governors are corruptions or degenerate varieties (παρεκβάσεις) c. 6. Then, by a merely numerical standard, the normal constitutions are provisionally divided into Monarchy, True Aristocracy and Polity (Πολιτεία proper); the corrupt forms into Tyranny (τυραννίς), Oligarchy, Democracy; according as one man, a minority, or the majority respectively rule (c. 7). We pass on (c. 8) to consider secondly a series of difficult problems (ἀπορίαι). From the discussion of the first of these it appears that it is merely an accident of Oligarchy and Democracy that a minority governs in the one, a majority in the other. It is essentially the selfish government of the rich by the poor which constitutes Democracy, the selfish government of the poor by the rich which constitutes Oligarchy (c. 8). The remaining discussions treat at greater length three separate inquiries : (α) in c. 9, (β) in cc. 10, 11, (γ) in cc. 12, 13¹. From the definitions just framed the first (α) draws the inference that in reality the true end of the state is not adequately secured upon the democratic principle—equal political privileges to all citizens who are equal in respect of free birth : nor yet upon the principle of oligarchy ; for the state is no joint-stock trading company : the aristocratical principle of intelligence, virtue, and merit is alone sufficient

- (A) First main division : cc. 1—5
 - (α) Who is the true citizen? cc. 1, 2
 - (β) What constitutes the identity of a state? c. 3
 - (γ) Is the virtue of the good citizen the same with the virtue of the good man? cc. 4, 5.
- (B) Second main division : cc. 6—13
 - (I) Constitution defined ; preliminary classification of constitutions : cc. 6, 7.
 - (II) Discussion of difficult problems (ἀπορίαι) : cc. 8—13

More precise definitions of Democracy and Oligarchy : c. 8

The comparative merit of constitutions : cc. 9—13

- (α) the aristocratical principle preferable to that of democracy and of oligarchy : c. 9
- (β) the mass of the citizens and the laws in what sense sovereign on an aristocratical principle : cc. 10, 11
- (γ) the claims of the better citizens and of the mass how best accommodated on this principle, and the varieties (monarchy, pure aristocracy, polity) thence resulting : cc. 12, 13.

(c. 9). This is followed by the inference (β) that the higher the capacity of a body of citizens, and consequently of a state, the more as a rule does the worth of eminent individuals fall short of that of the great mass of other citizens taken collectively, just as the wealth of the richest individuals amongst them is outweighed by the total property belonging to the remainder. Hence, even on an aristocratical principle, sovereignty belongs to the whole body. Yet this many-headed sovereign, besides being restrained by the laws, must always in the direct exercise of its powers be confined to the election of magistrates ($\alpha\rho\chiαιρειςιαι$) and to the scrutiny of their conduct, when, at the expiry of their term of office, they render an account of their stewardship ($\epsilonϋθυνα$). All the details of state affairs will be entrusted to the magistrates elected by such a competent civic body from amongst its ablest members.

A marvellously profound thought this, marking its author's essential independence of Plato¹, and proving how powerfully he had been influenced by democracy and the Athenian polity. However distinctly he, like Plato, disapproves of its unrestrained development in Athens and elsewhere subsequently to the time of Pericles², he has nevertheless laid down for all time the justification of the democratic element in political life³, and has done something at least to set a proper limitation to it. Moreover this thought has a far wider bearing. A true constitutional state combining freedom and order, whether under a monarchy or a republic, whether prince or people is sovereign within it, is only conceivable if the sovereign has definite limitations imposed by law upon the direct exercise of his sovereignty, in keeping with the true

² For this reason Oncken's assertion L. c. 172, that the exposition given II §§ 15, 16 is borrowed from observation of the Attic democracy, as it was even after Pericles' time, is not correct.

³ Whether Trendelenburg in Natur-

recht p. 463 ff (Leipzig 1860. 8) has really shown "the fallacy of his analogies" as Henkel thinks l. c., may be seen from the note on III. II. 2 (565 b). Zeller (op. cit. II ii 717) on the other hand finds them to the point, and Henkel himself continues; 'However, as Spengel remarks Arist. Stud. II. 56 n. 1, "even Aristotle is not disposed to allow the public "a correct judgment on that which is "strictly scientific. But of that which "concerns mankind at large—what the "Greeks denote by κοιναι ερωται—every "one can judge, and the multitude "often judges more correctly than a specialist; who is often prejudiced without knowing it." Or as Goethe in "one passage expresses it, "There is no "doubt this public, so much honoured and "despised, is almost always wrong in "particulars, hardly ever in its broad "views." That Aristotle's confidence goes somewhat too far is shown in the note on III. 15. 8.

external and internal relations of power. No doubt the restraints imposed by a constitutional state of large size in modern times are very different from those devised by Aristotle for his Greek canton-state, and suggested by the forms most suited to his purpose amongst those in actual existence. Yet after all, although the idea was foreign to him and to all antiquity, it is upon just this principle that representative government rests. Now-a-days the people does not elect the magistrates, unless it be the president of a republic, the borrowed monarchical head of the whole state: they are nominated by the monarch or his republican fac-simile, and there is no popular court to which they are directly accountable. Legislation again, the settlement of the state revenue and expenditure, and all that is included therein, are no longer directly in the hands of the entire body of the citizens. But even under a strict constitutional monarchy, where the monarch is the only recognized sovereign, the people have a most substantial share of political privilege, in that through their representatives they take part indirectly in legislation, in voting the budget, the ratification of treaties and the control of the administration. Even the most conservative modern statesman no longer overlooks the fact that the strange phenomenon, changeable as the wind, called public opinion¹, may in certain circumstances be consolidated into a firm, enduring, real popular will, which even under the most absolute monarchy gradually becomes the most powerful and irresistible of all political forces; and that thus the so-called sovereignty of the people, which as a legal principle is more than doubtful, yet in fact indirectly and ultimately ever prevails. No one knows better than Aristotle that nothing is more foolish than the masses: but he is quite as well aware, that again there is nothing wiser. Where the one quality ceases and the other begins he has not attempted to determine and perhaps this is an attempt which no mortal man can make with success. He is 'far too well-trained a realist,' to fall into the error of those who treat that Proteus, the public, as if it did not exist, or who do not know how to reckon with such a force². He was, so far as we know, the first to expound, prove, sift, and limit this thought which up till then had only been thrown out by democratic party leaders³; the first who, while accepting it not with interested views merely but from full conviction, yet considers it impartially in the spirit 'of the true statesman 'who has in view only the welfare of all, and of the psychologist who 'has an understanding for the instincts of a great people. He believes

'the individual can be ennobled through the common feeling of the body corporate to which he belongs; that his powers and intelligence can be multiplied, his good instincts raised, his bad ones corrected through being merged in a higher unity; and this is the only ethical point of view, under which an intrinsic right to political elevation can be ascribed to the people. Aristotle uses an example here (c. 11 § 3) which contains in itself a great concession. The capacity of the public for judging in matters of artistic taste he touches upon as a truth which needs no proof; and yet on this very field the right of the masses to decide is much more disputed and much more disputable than on that of public life, where the weal and woe of each individual is in question and the healthy instinct frequently sees further than all the intelligence of the experts'. Plato is of quite another opinion (Laws III. 700 E ff.)², and 'nothing is easier than by resolving the public into its elements to show that it really consists of mere cyphers³: but it is impossible to do away with the fact that the poet or artist is nothing without this public, which he must conquer in order to rule, and that the judgments of this court have a force with which the view of the experts, who are seldom agreed, can never be matched⁴'. Spengel⁵ is undoubtedly right: these chapters (III. cc. 9—13) contain doctrines more important than any to be found elsewhere in the work, doctrines 'which deserve to be written in letters of gold.'

This section ends with the remark (III. 11. 20) that all this does not as yet inform us what kind of laws there ought to be, but simply that those made in the spirit of the right constitution are the right ones. In other words, the order of merit of the normal constitutions, and in its complete form that of the degenerate varieties⁶, is not yet decided. We

(1) Aristotle did not recognize Polity as standing on an equality with the other two forms of government, VI (IV). 8. 1; and (2) no greater rights are granted to the people in a Polity than in an aristocracy or a moderate democracy, VI (IV). 14. §§ 10, 14. And when Oncken made the assertion (II. 174) that Aristotle invariably subordinated to the law and the popular decree the wisdom and virtue of even the best individual citizen, he must surely have forgotten the substance of III. c. 13, c. 17 §§ 5—8.

⁶ In general the result of the preceding statements is that Democracy is preferable to Oligarchy, and the latter preferable to a Tyranny; but whether and how far a moderate oligarchy deserves to rank before an unrestrained democracy has not yet been decided.

naturally expect the remaining discussion (γ), cc. 12, 13, to give at least the outlines of such a decision, bringing the whole exposition into real organic connexion with the previous classification of forms of government, and thus concluding the general theory of the constitution. But at first sight this expectation would seem to be wholly disappointed. Schlosser¹ was the first to find fault, not without reason. So much of the previous discussion (cc. 8—11) is repeated in cc. 12, 13 that he conjectured, not very happily, that these chapters had been transposed. After him Bernays² declared cc. 12, 13 to be simply another version of cc. 9—11 and cc. 16, 17. This view requires careful examination. Against it may be urged that the subject of cc. 14, 15 (indeed the whole discussion περὶ βασιλείας, cc. 14—17) is quite as closely connected by its contents with c. 11 as it is with the latter half of c. 13 (§§ 13—25), and much more so than it is with cc. 12, 13 §§ 1—12; and as it most naturally follows upon c. 13³, there would be a tremendous gap, in accordance with the remark above made, between the end of c. 11 and the discussion on Monarchy at the beginning of c. 14, which on Bernays' view would directly follow. Notwithstanding this, cc. 12, 13 §§ 1—12 might well pass for another version of cc. 9—11, lacking only the important second question as to the limits to the sovereignty of a competent body of citizens. In that case, however, the editor must have made more than a slight change in the passage to adapt it to its present place. For though the reference in 13 § 1 to c. 9 ff. as preceding might be cut out as a loose addition, that contained in 13 § 2 is firmly embedded in the context⁴. On the other hand, the latter part of c. 13 (§§ 13—25), which is really devoid of all connexion with the earlier part as it at present stands⁵, might conveniently come immediately after c. 11 as an exception to the rule there set forth, thus: 'if however an individual man is superior to all the 'citizens together, then in the best state he stands above the law 'as absolute king and ruler.' The question of 11 § 20 noticed above⁶ would then remain unanswered, but it might be urged that it belongs to the theory of the special constitutions to provide the answer. But graver considerations remain. From 11 § 8 it would tioned. But surely it is enough that in 13 § 20 the mention of them as opposed to the corrupt forms serves to introduce the whole of the succeeding exposition, although at last this stops short (§ 24) merely at the antithesis of the best constitution and the corrupt forms.

follow, in contradiction to Aristotle's view, that even in the best state the magistrates might be elected from men of a definite census only¹. Further there is one short sentence in c. 13, in its traditional place entirely unconnected with what precedes or follows, § 6, which however would be quite in place immediately before § 13. The close of § 12 has no counterpart at present in the previous chapters, yet it cannot be separated from its immediately preceding context; and it is evident that the subsidiary question here raised,—‘Are the best laws to be made for the advantage of the better citizens or of the majority?’—stands in the closest connexion with the main question at 11 § 20²; but no less evident that the answer to it here given is incomplete³. There is then in any case a lacuna after 13 § 12: we can easily imagine something to fill it, after which what in our present order stands as § 6 followed quite naturally⁴.

If therefore we really have two versions of the same subject-matter before us, then the older one contained in cc. 12, 13 has been handed down to us in worse condition and is the more incomplete; the later version, cc. 9—11, must have been left unfinished. In any case there is no redundancy noticeable here, but rather a lamentable deficiency. But on the other hand, the inquiry as to which is the most normal and best of the normal constitutions (11 § 20) can only be conducted by a more exact determination and modification of the previous result with regard to the most legitimate holder of sovereign power; and this consideration seems to render necessary a certain review of all the political factors, whatever their justification. It was further stated expressly, 11 § 1, that all the cases except that in which the sovereignty of the people is justified are to be afterwards discussed. Now it cannot be denied that c. 12 does make a start in this direction by first deciding universally which factors really can lay claim to political rule and thereby granting at the outset that wealth (and therefore Oligarchy) has a certain justification⁵. The diffuseness of the repetition is not commendable⁶, but in such works as those of Aristotle's which have been preserved it has simply to be accepted in silence. The main point is that in the lacuna following 13 § 12, before § 6 (the proper place of which is between § 12 and § 13), a convenient place presented itself for a discussion declaring the true Aristocracy to be an unlimited democracy of none but competent men and ranking it above Polity (Πολιτεία)¹; as in the latter the inferior capacity of the body of citizens leads to the introduction of a property qualification to ensure the election of none but men of special excellence as magistrates. Lastly, it is clear from cc. 14—17, that in the developed Greek state there is only one case where Aristotle admits monarchy, namely, when the monarch is superior in ability to all the rest taken together; and he assumes that only the citizens of the best state, all men of ability themselves, will accept such a monarchy. It becomes doubly difficult then, nay almost impossible, that such a case should ever occur. Still it remains just conceivable, and as long as this condition of things lasts the best state, instead of being an aristocracy, is, in this exceptional case, the only true monarchy: this then is the absolutely best constitution, superior even to Aristocracy².

VII. MONARCHY AND THE BEST STATE.

If the foregoing arguments are sound, the special theory of the constitution falls into three parts; the theory (i) of monarchy, (ii) of the best constitution, (iii) of the remaining constitutions. The first comprises Bk. III cc. 14—17, the second Bks. IV and V. (in the old order VII, VIII), the third the remaining three books.

Aristotle's conception of monarchy as explained above not unnaturally determines the very character of his discussion of it. This discussion has indeed come down to us in the utmost confusion, and appears somewhat defective: but even after a clear order of thought has been attained by means of various transpositions, the impression it makes upon us is, from the standing of our own political development and experience, highly unsatisfactory. The cause of this is not far to seek. The only true and proper monarchy which Aristotle from his point of view can recognise, is absolute monarchy: we may for the most part entirely concur in his objections to this form, and yet consider that, treated thus far, the subject has been by no means exhausted.

* In Aristotle's time the sole monarchies of any note which history had produced, except the Greek tyrannies, were despotism, as found in the huge empires of the east, and the so-called patriarchal kingship of the heroic age—the rule of a chief over a small clan and territory, over a Phœnician or Hellenic city-state or canton in prehistoric centuries. Even the rule of the Macedonian kings was, by him at least, regarded in no other light. For the small Greek state, which he keeps solely in view, monarchy is hardly deserving of much more consideration than as the imperfect historical starting-point of all subsequent development¹. In the organism of the large modern state, absolute monarchy, where it has rightly understood its task, has actually helped to educate men for a reign of law under a constitutional monarchy. Nowhere else could this latter arise. The ancient state had not got so far as its very first condition, which is representation; and like all other political thinkers of antiquity even Aristotle, as was remarked above (p. 40), was as yet far removed from the faintest idea of this kind². It was his too one-sided conception of the state as the exclusive means of educating men to mental and moral excellence that gave rise to his ideal state, and made him set ideal monarchy in it above ideal aristocracy, thereby declaring the form of government proper for intellectual minors to be the highest form for the most enlightened,—although, this being so, he can scarcely hide from himself its impossibility³. This however did not hinder him from seeking, by the adjustment of opposite forces, a further practical ideal amongst the degenerate constitutions in Polity (Πολιτεία) and so-called aristocracy. Here he has rightly pursued the thought of elevating the authority of the state above the strife of divergent interests; yet from the circumstances, the most effective realization of this thought in limited monarchy never came under his ken. He can finely describe the functions of the king⁴, but the real significance of this form of government is concealed from him: he gets no farther

¹ Spengel Arist. Stud. II. 57: “Βασιλεία is to Aristotle a historical tradition rather than a form with any further capacity for life in the mental development of his own nation;—and like all Greek philosophers and political writers he rarely notices any other. Thus he is careful to set forth in various ἀποφαι the difficulties involved in the practicability and proper limits of this government.” Our astonishment at this defective method of treatment, which first surprised Schlosser, hereupon ceases. Spengel put the question Ueb. Arist. Pol. 16—² Did Aristotle conceive the theory of monarchy to be complete with the discussions of cc. 14—16? The way kings govern, their inner life, their influence on the people is quite lost sight of.’ This must be answered in the affirmative with one exception, to be afterwards mentioned p. 46, for which we can easily account. The ideal king, the preeminently best man, can have no instructions given him (c. 13 § 14, c. 17 § 2).

than to base it exclusively upon personal merits¹, so that no place is left for it in the practical ideal of mixed constitutions². This inevitably causes an internal inconsistency in the work. According to his plan, the last three books ought to have treated exclusively of the remaining constitutions other than monarchy and pure aristocracy. But on the historical ground of revolutions and their prevention he cannot help treating of monarchy over again in Bk. VIII (v).

It is abundantly clear from the foregoing that nothing can be a greater mistake than the assertion, sometimes made of late, that in his ideal king Aristotle had his own pupil, Alexander, before his mind³. It may be surprising that the philosopher's relations with the court of Macedon failed so completely to influence his political theory, that he had no apprehension that he was living right at the close of Hellenic history, with its political development, its system of great and small states; but on the contrary saw nothing impossible in such a new development of a Greek city-state as his ideal constitution would present. But the fact that it is so cannot be altered by our astonishment and inability, with the means at our disposal, satisfactorily to explain it. This ideal of Aristotle's is in reality a small Hellenic city and not a large state like Macedon, which ceases to be a state (πόλις) in his sense of the term, and is no more than a race or nationality (ἔθνος), carrying out a policy of conquest and not, as he requires, a policy of peace. If then the ideal king is to arise only in the ideal state, he cannot be an Alexander. Once no doubt the thought flashes forth, IV (VII). 7. 3, that the Greeks united in one could conquer the whole world⁴. But to Aristotle the end of the state is, as we said, not the conquest of the world but something quite different; no longing for such a state of united Hellas, which would contradict all the rest of the Politics, is in the least discoverable in this passage.

Wilamowitz in a review of Hug (Deutsche Literaturzeitung 1882, col. 1081 f.) has already somewhat modified his position: see Jahresber. l.c. 18 f., where I have also explained why the passage IV (VII). 2. 11 (cp. the note) is still important for this question although the whole chapter, to which it belongs, is spurious.

On the subject of historical science Aristotle's notions are very defective: he is in truth still far removed from that 'which we ourselves have only learned to know within the last century, that which 'Turgot and Lessing intended by the improvement and education 'of humanity, and Hegel defined as its organic development.' He altogether mistook the true importance of labour, 'the mightiest lever 'in this process.' Yet it would be going too far to deny him all insight into the course of development of the Greek nation from the state of nature to the state of civilization, and from one grade of civilization to another, or into the features of this progress stamped upon the history of the Greek constitutions¹. We are set right on this point by a brief but especially interesting part of the discussion on monarchy (III. 15 §§ 10—13), when taken in connexion with similar passages further on². 'Aristotle has not simply observed for himself the career of the 'separate states; he knows that they have also a common constitutional 'history: that a definite order of polity belongs to an entire period: 'that the same development of mental culture, of social and military 'organisation, is accomplished all through a group of connected states 'and causes their political relations to assume an homogeneous form. 'And so he depicts with a few masterly strokes the chief stages of 'development through which the political world of Hellas passed³. The first development embraces the normal constitutions as far as Polity: the second, in another order, the degenerate forms as far as democracy: the former carrying us to restrained, and the latter to unrestrained, popular supremacy. The main character of both periods is republican. In the first of them Monarchy is only a starting-point, as has been said, for Aristocracy and Polity; in the second Tyranny is only a stage in the transition to Democracy⁴.

Any one who has followed the order of our work up to this point will be bound to admit that the description of the ideal Aristocracy, or the normal and absolutely best constitution, can now no longer be deferred. If so, then the two books containing it, which have come down to us as the seventh and eighth, should according to Aristotle's design follow directly as the fourth and fifth. Now the last chapter of Book III, c. 18, forms an immediate transition to this description, breaking off with an unfinished sentence, which is repeated in another form at the beginning of the seventh book of the old order¹, but with an apodosis here added and the sense complete as follows: 'He who would investigate wherein the best constitution consists must first determine what is the best life,'—since on Aristotle's view of the end of the state the one serves as an aid to the other². And this circumstance loses none of its weight by the fact that this transition can hardly be by Aristotle himself, but by the author of the older edition. For even then it shows (see above, p. 17) that he at all events found the seventh and eighth books still arranged correctly as the fourth and fifth.

It can hardly be maintained that the discussion contained in the first chapter of the seventh or, more correctly, the fourth book, as to where that best and most desirable life, the life of happiness, is to be sought, is not by Aristotle: but while appropriate to his oral lectures, as was remarked above (p. 12), it is to all appearance very foreign to this written work³. And this is no less true of the treatment of a second preliminary question which follows in close connexion, in cc. 2 and 3 and the beginning of c. 4; namely, whether capacity in war or in peace is more desirable for the state, and in particular whether the active life of the practical statesman or the contemplative life of the scientific inquirer is the happier for the individual. Further, the way in which this subject is settled or rather left unsettled is quite unlike Aristotle⁴. To the genuine Aristotle this is no preliminary question, but the really fundamental problem of his whole ideal of the state. The one side of it he has himself settled with the most desirable clearness when describing his ideal, IV (VII). 14. 10 ff., in such a way that he at the same time lays down the principles for the solution of the second and much more difficult question, which is really the cardinal problem of his whole practical philosophy. For here no less than in what follows⁵, as in the Ethics and *Metaphysics*⁶, he ranks the theoretical life above the life of practical politics, and yet he considers the individual to be merely one living member of that corporate body the state: and the reconciliation of this antithesis can only be found in a political life which itself regards the promotion of art and science as its highest and ultimate aim⁷. This is really the fundamental thought of Aristotle's ideal state, but we nowhere find it worked out; nor could the editor to whom we must attribute the section in question, cc. 2, 3. He would not else have attempted in his clumsy manner, unlike Aristotle's¹, to solve the problem and fill up the lacuna which he had rightly perceived to exist. This circumstance shows then, either that Aristotle stopped short on the very threshold of his description of the ideal state, or else that his continuation of it, which has not come down to us, had disappeared remarkably early.

With the fourth chapter the outline of this best constitution really begins. Aristotle sets out with the external conditions, treating first of the natural conditions, of the land and the people (cc. 4—7); then of the social and socio-political conditions, the exclusion of the citizens from all work for a livelihood, the proper division of the soil, the proper qualifications and position of the cultivators, the regulations for the building of the city, its small towns and villages (cc. 9—12). Here at length begins the internal development of the best constitution: yet by the end of Bk. v (VIII). it has advanced no further than its first stage, the education of the boys, in the middle of which it comes to a dead stop, so that the third of the three questions proposed in the last chapter—namely whether melody or rhythm is of greater importance for the purposes of musical instruction—is never discussed at all, and the question what sorts of time are to be employed for the same purposes remains undecided². We may at all events be thankful to fate for sparing us a section of the work, which is rich in interest for the science of education in all ages, though it fails to satisfy our curiosity as to the further organisation of the ideal state. Some compensation for the deficiency in this direction is afforded by many observations not merely, as has been said before, in Bk. II, but also in Bk. III. Thus in the latter we learn how this or that ought to be regulated in the state, or sometimes even how it should be in the best state or the best constitution, or in the Aristocracy³. And Aristotle's many previous intimations⁴,

When we consider the very high mission of culture with which Aristotle's ideal state is entrusted in the promotion of the sciences, and the preference which Aristotle expressly concedes to the education of the intellect over that of the character¹, it is surprising that he takes up the whole of early education until the twenty-first year with gymnastic and military exercises, so as to leave no more than three years, from the fourteenth to the seventeenth, for all the other subjects of instruction². Moreover one of them, music, is so limited that an influence upon the formation of character, or very little else, is all that is left to it³. Besides this, only reading, writing, numeration, and drawing are noticed; and this short course of three years will be wholly taken up with them. Hence we cannot look for more advanced scientific instruction, and even poetry can scarcely be employed for anything further than learning to read and write, or getting by heart lyric pieces to sing⁴. The exclusion of comedy, moreover, and of all connected kinds of poetry, from the domain of youth is expressly mentioned IV (VII). 17. 11; and the same holds of all music with a 'cathartic' effect, V (VIII). 7. 3 ff.⁵. On this analogy it can scarcely be doubted that the exclusion must be assumed to apply in general to all the kinds of poetry to which solely this sort of effect is ascribed by Aristotle, that is, to epos and tragedy⁶ as well as to comedy: and that Aristotle wished to restrict attendance at the theatre and the recitals of the rhapsodes to grown-up persons, or at any rate not to allow them to young men until after their seventeenth year. Thus the use made of poetry for the education of the young in Aristotle's ideal state could hardly go beyond a mere chrestomathy from Homer, Hesiod, perhaps also from a few tragedies and easy prose writers, in learning to read and write. But Aristotle states, IV (VII). 15. 9, V (VIII). 3. 13, that the education of the body must form the commencement, while the moral education must advance within the soul, from "which we indirectly learn that a chapter on

'scientific education was intended to follow'¹. And the question, how far the 'higher' sciences are to be considered for educational purposes, is assuredly not proposed, v (VIII). 2. 2, in order to remain unanswered. Lastly, in v (VIII). 3. 10, a later investigation is expressly announced to decide whether one or more subjects should belong to the more refined training which aims at the highest intellectual satisfaction: but in the account which has come down to us we seek in vain for the fulfilment of this promise. On the other hand every direct influence in this direction is expressly excluded from the boys' education up to their twenty-first year, v (VIII). 5. 4. Hence we may infer from his own words that Aristotle, like Plato², intended a later training in the higher sciences for state purposes to follow this lower educational course³; and this would furnish the solution of the riddle⁴. Even as to the subjects of this higher instruction Aristotle can hardly have thought differently from Plato, except that perhaps he added poetry; Pure Mathematics, however, Astronomy, the Theory of Music, and lastly, for natures most scientifically endowed, Philosophy proper, were certainly the means of instruction enjoined. There is ample time for them, as the active duties of full citizens do not begin until military service is over, iv (VII). 9 § 5 f, 14 § 5; and no one will be eligible for a civil magistracy much before his fiftieth year, even if he enters the popular assembly earlier, 9 § 9 n. Thus their service in the army leaves the younger man leisure for scientific studies. Only Aristotle must have maintained, in opposition to Plato, that this extended course should be different for practical minds and for those whose bent is more towards theory; in order to make of the former officials for the state, and of the latter its men of science, who in other respects may, and indeed ought to rest satisfied with the fulfilment of their general civic duties⁵. In this particular Aristotle approached the modern idea of the state more nearly than any other ancient thinker. Yet when looked at in the light of his own premisses this solution of the problem cannot be said to be altogether happy. If in the best state the best man is to be at the same time the best citizen and statesman⁶; if moreover scientific activity

218 f. He does not see that it is only in the instruction in practical music and in gymnastic that Aristotle maintains a mean which must not be exceeded; he never says a word to the effect that in the sciences also one can learn too much: see Exc. I at the end of Bk. v (VIII).

is to be the higher, moral and practical excellence the lower, part of human virtue; then the only logical consequence is Plato's government by philosophers—which, taken in itself, Aristotle rightly rejects, II. 5. 25¹.

The chapters on the education of the boys are incomplete: this theory of the subsequent higher training of our future citizens, as well as the discussion on female education which was expressly promised I. 13. 15 (cp. II. 9 §§ 5, 6)², is wanting. We lack too the entire regulations for the external life of children and adults whether men or women,—or in other words the whole of civic discipline; for Aristotle no less than Plato conceived the state to be an educational institution. As a necessary consequence, he took this discipline and moral guidance through the whole of life to be simply a continued course of education³, and both alike to be the proper field of state-activity. Almost all the other intimations of Aristotle, to which we find nothing corresponding in the execution, relate to this comprehensive subject. One special division which he mentions IV (VII). 16 §§ 12, 13, 17 § 12 (comp. 17 §§ 5, 7, 10), is the superintendence of the morals of the boys and their education under Inspectors (παιδονόμοι), officers appointed on the Spartan precedent⁴. They are to have their official quarters near the gymnasium for the young, IV (VII). 12. 5: to take care that no stories unseemly to their age are told to children even under five years of age, c. 17 § 5; and that they have as little as possible to do with the slaves, § 7. They have also to take precautions that no improper statues or pictures are exposed to view within sight of the children (§ 10), from whom even the paintings of a Pauson with their comical and satirical exhibitions of what is low and hateful must be kept at a distance: V (VIII). 5. 21⁵. In this part of the work too we were to have been more precisely informed what habit of body in the parents is best adapted to give them healthy offspring⁶; whether comedies should be exhibited, and the recital of satirical poems (e.g. ἰαμβοί) allowed, and in what manner; perhaps also how far drinking parties of adults are to be countenanced, IV (VII). 17. 12¹. Inspectors for the women (γυναικονόμοι) are also mentioned along with the inspectors of boys as officials in aristocracies, VI (IV). 15. 13, VII (VI). 8. 23: they certainly ought not to be absent from the true Aristocracy². We can hardly be wrong in assuming that on the decision of these two boards of officers the exposure or rearing of new-born infants depended³; and that for the purpose of maintaining the same fixed number of citizens they were authorized, nay were bound, to enforce abortion if necessary; II. 6. 10 ff., IV (VII). 16. § 15, § 17⁴.

This unalterable number of citizens is bound up with the equally unalterable number of inalienable and indivisible family properties, IV (VII). 10. 11, of which, as in Plato's *Laws*⁵, each citizen holds two, one near the town, and one further off in the country towards the boundaries of the territory. This indicates a second treatment of the same subject, comprising the more accurate discussion of property in general and of national wealth which was expressly promised, IV (VII). 5. 2; and here the propriety of the provisional definition of national wealth adopted in the passage just cited should have been submitted to a second and more detailed examination⁶. Here also a place would no doubt be found for explaining more fully the reasons promised IV (VII). 10 § 10, § 14, why Aristotle was induced to adopt συσσῆτια; why it is better to promise and grant freedom to serfs and slaves as a reward for good conduct; together with the discussion of their general treatment announced in this passage⁷; also the consideration of the question postponed in II. 10. 9, as to what means it may be expedient to tolerate in order to prevent an increase of population beyond the limits fixed⁸.

But there is an explicit proof, that even the political organization of the ideal state was to be treated in detail. In one passage, II. 8. 25, the more precise solution of the question whether and under what conditions and at whose instance changes in the established laws are admissible is left over for further consideration⁹. What sort of restrictions Aristotle wished to introduce in this respect we cannot tell: it is only certain that, while he did not allow the popular assembly the initiative, he yet made every new law dependent upon their consent¹⁰.

Moreover, the powers of the popular assembly were but limited even in this best of all communities, composed of men not under thirty-five¹ nor yet over seventy years of age. Apart from the election of magistrates they were not to extend much beyond the acceptance or rejection, without further debate or amendment, of treaties, and of peace or war, as previously determined upon and proposed by the senate and the highest magistrates². Yet on the other hand popular courts of justice on the Athenian model were to decide charges brought against magistrates during the time of their accountability³. Equal in birth, in landed estate, in immunity from all remunerative or productive labour⁴, and in respect of a public education from their seventh year⁵, all citizens of this state enjoy equal rights. Any qualified citizen may, it seems, vote for any other for any magistracy, such a civic body being credited with the intelligence and good will to nominate to each branch of the government the persons most suitable on the ground of the distinctions in capacity and training which, in spite of equal circumstances, have manifested themselves⁶. But Aristotle certainly did not intend to leave undecided at what precise age the entrance upon full citizenship was to take place; nor again at what age men were superannuated, and upon retiring became priests, IV (VII). 9. 9, whereby almost entire leisure for science was secured to them in their old age⁷. The figures 50 and 70 which have been tentatively assumed will at least be not far removed from his view; and thus this governing civic body will be considerably in the minority when compared with the total number of citizens superannuated or not yet fully qualified, the boys, younger men, and the aged of the citizen order⁸. Only foreigners and resident aliens are allowed to engage in trade, industry, or manual labour: a prohibition which strikes a severe blow at the cultivation of the imitative arts, that is, at the fine arts¹. The soil is to be cultivated by serfs who are not free, or at all events by vassals of non-Hellenic descent who are but half free².

But, while emphatically not a conquering military power any more than a trading community, this state with its one aim of culture³ makes the largest concessions possible in both these directions. It is to be a maritime state, IV (VII). 6. 1 ff.⁴, as well as, like Athens, Sparta, and Thebes, to exercise an hegemony; that is, to stand at the head of a more or less dependent confederation, in which union has been achieved, if necessary, with the edge of the sword⁵. In this way Aristotle thinks that the peculiar spirit and core of Athenian social and political life, that wonderfully noble union of manliness with culture, has been best preserved and promoted by a partial fusion with Spartan forms. He may even have counted on the tribute of the allies to fill the treasury. Otherwise it is not easy to see why, after the wise regulation that only a part of the soil should be broken up into family properties, the rest being reserved as domain land, only the expenditure upon public worship and the common messes, not that upon any other state function, is taken into account when he comes to deal with the revenue from this domain land, IV (VII). 9. 7. 'The messes (συσσίτια) 'are with Aristotle, as they were at Sparta⁶, at once common meals 'and military unions. Some of them are to be held in the guard-'houses inside the city wall⁷. All boards of officials have their messes, 'each in its own official quarters: so, too, the priests; even the 'rangers and field-patrols in the country⁸. The rule of a common mess-'table is binding on all collective members of the political body corpo-'rate⁹.' In particular from them springs that voluntary communism which Aristotle praises in the Spartans¹⁰, and the entry into them was undoubtedly to begin with enlistment amongst the recruits at the age of seventeen¹¹. Later on, but yet hardly before the training of these recruits is completed¹² with their twenty-first year¹³, they are also permitted to attend drinking-parties¹ and there to sing,—which under all other circumstances is strictly prohibited to adults²; further to visit the theatre and musical and poetical entertainments of all kinds³.

From the foregoing it is also clear now that the passages to which we are referred in II. 6 §§ 12, 13, are still extant⁴, but that more precise explanations ought to follow. Similarly the promise of future discussions upon the size of the town and the question whether it is essential that the citizens should be of the same descent, III. 3 § 6, is fulfilled as far as the first part is concerned in IV (VII). c. 4; but the second part was scarcely to be dismissed with merely the subsequent remark VIII (V). 3 § 11 f.; it was no doubt to be more thoroughly discussed in the examination of the absolutely best constitution⁵.

It appears to us, it was remarked before (p. 46), not so easy to understand how the resident alien of Stagira, the great realist, the friend of the Macedonian kings under whose spear the last energies of Greek life were bleeding away, was still Greek and Athenian enough to dream of the possibility that the 'nobility of mankind,' the Greek nation, had yet to wait for the future to produce its noblest race, who alone would be one day capable of creating this pattern state, IV (VII). c. 7. More intelligible, but all the more repulsive, is it to note how Aristotle sets about the propagation of this noblest of civic bodies, in true Spartan or Platonic fashion⁶, by tyrannical marriage-laws and matrimonial supervision and inhuman exposure of children, as if he were raising a breed of race-horses: to see the successful defender of the family and of property, who investigates with admirable profundity the moral nature of marriage⁶, at the same time hampering and almost stifling the free use of property and of the mental faculties, and destroying the healthy vital atmosphere of marriage. And this by measures which, as we have said (p. 34), go far beyond those of Plato in the Laws, by fixing a normal number of children which the whole body of citizens are permitted to have and sanctioning abortion in order to secure that the number is never exceeded.

description of the ideal state. The task of Politics, we read, is not simply confined to an examination of the absolutely (ἀπλῶς) best constitution. It equally includes the determination of what is best on the average (ταῖς πλείοταις πόλεσι); and of the best constitution under the given circumstances (ἐκ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων), or in other words the best for a given people or a given population. If finally it happens that even this last is out of the question, political science has to treat of the best possible form of some worse constitution; and hence must investigate all possible species and even sub-species of constitutions. The third book, for example, spoke of democracy and oligarchy; this is now corrected by the statement that there are several subordinate varieties of both. But while those fundamental distinctions of the third book are again resumed, we are expressly told in c. 2 that the first problem has already been solved by an account of the absolutely best constitution, or, what is the same thing, of monarchy and aristocracy proper; thus only the remaining normal constitutions and their corruptions have still to be discussed. The order in which these stand is as follows: mixed or so-called Aristocracies¹, Polity (Πολιτεία), Democracy, Oligarchy, Tyranny². The problems to be solved are as follows; to determine (1) how many subordinate kinds of constitutions there are; (2) what is on the average the best constitution; (3) for what different sorts of people the different forms are adapted; (4) how we ought to set to work in regulating each form of democracy and of oligarchy; and, last of all, (5) what are the causes which overthrow and the means to preserve the various constitutions. Thus, first of all, we here find from Aristotle himself an express corroboration of the view that the seventh and eighth books (old order) came fourth and fifth in the work as he wrote it: and in c. 7 § 2, he once more repeats the same declaration, that the absolutely best constitution discussed in those books alone deserves to be called Aristocracy in the strict sense of the word; just as the interpolator of c. 3 § 4, refers to this part of the work under the name of the "discussions on Aristocracy" (ἐν τοῖς περὶ τὴν ἀριστοκρατίαν), and so must still have had the original order before him. In the next place the order given in the above arrangement is adhered to most strictly in the exposition which follows.

For setting aside c. 3 and c. 4 §§ 1—19, which certainly do not contradict this procedure, but, as was just remarked, can hardly³ be by

Aristotle himself, there is, first, an enumeration (1) in c. 4 §§ 20—31 of the four varieties of Democracy and at the beginning of c. 5, §§ 1—3, of the four varieties of Oligarchy passing from one resembling Polity to one which approaches Tyranny; then, c. 6, it is shown why there can only be four varieties for each of these two constitutions: next follows a discussion of mixed or spurious Aristocracy in its two varieties, when mixed with democratic and oligarchical, or merely with democratic elements, c. 7; cc. 8, 9, treat of the constitution most nearly allied to this last, Polity (Πολιτεία) or equal combination of Oligarchy and Democracy; and c. 10 of Tyranny and the forms in which it blends with Monarchy. Then (2) c. 11 presents Πολιτεία in its character as the rule of the well-to-do middle class, as the best constitution on the average. The next investigation (3) breaks off unfinished in § 5 of c. 12¹: the passage which follows (12 § 6, 13 § 1—11), i.e. all the following chapter except § 12, does not belong to this subject but to the regulation of Polity: had it been more correctly edited it would have been worked into c. 9 to which I would transpose it. Only one circumstance is out of harmony: in the order which has come down to us, (5) the theory of revolutions and the safeguards of constitutions does not come last of all, but takes up the whole of (old) Bk. v, while (4) the regulation of the different forms of Democracy and Aristocracy does not appear till the first four chapters of (old) Bk. vi. The last three chapters of (old) Bk. iv, cc. 14—16, are taken up with fundamental considerations of a general kind on the regulation and organization of all possible constitutions, except Monarchy, Tyranny, and true Aristocracy, according to each of the three authorities in the state. Thus the deliberative or decreeing body is treated in c. 14, the administrative body or the organisation of the officials and magistrates in c. 15, the judicial power in c. 16. In accordance with this it has been proposed to transpose the (old) Sixth Book before the (old) Fifth, so that the former becomes the (new) Seventh and the latter the (new) Eighth: and this order has been followed in the text². If it is right

interlace questions (4) and (5) directly contradicts Aristotle's express announcement above, makes this whole announcement refer only to the contents of Books IV and V of the old order: in these two books Aristotle, as he thinks, gives a complete discussion of the theory of the imperfect constitutions with regard to their general underlying principles; in the (old) Book VI he adds a more special exposition. I have explained in the Jahrb. f. Philol. CI. 1870. 343—346, 349 f. why it must certainly be assumed that the four references back to the (old) Fifth Book which we find in the (old) Sixth do not, at least in their present form, belong to Aristotle, but at the earliest to the author of the later edition which has come down to us. One of them, VII (VI). 4. 15, is in fact so little suited to its context that it at once proclaims itself to be a spurious insertion¹. Two of the others, VII (VI). 1 § 1 and 1 § 10, may be removed, at least without much harm, on the same grounds². But the fourth, VII (VI). 5. 2, is so firmly embedded in the context that there is no resource but to assume that the interpolator has changed the future, which Aristotle himself used here, into the past³; an assumption quite as possible for the third passage as that of an interpolation⁴. The two parts of the work thus moved into immediate proximity—the three concluding chapters of Bk. VI (IV) and the first seven chapters of Bk. VII (VI)—then become the general and particular parts of the same discussion⁵. But we miss the account, promised at the beginning of Bk. VII (VI), of the possible combinations which may arise when in one and the same state the several political authorities are regulated according to the principles of different constitutions, VII (VI). 1. 3 f.⁶ Nor is this the only defect. In the eighth and last chapter of Bk. VII (VI) the theory of the organization of the executive still remains a rough sketch, not yet worked out in detail. It certainly brings to a real solution a part of the questions merely proposed or mentioned provisionally in VI (IV). c. 16⁷: but it contributes hardly anything towards a more thorough solution of a problem expressly mentioned there VI (IV). 15 § 14, as not yet satisfactorily solved; namely a discussion of the differences between magistrates in different constitutions; while it omits altogether any mention of the influence of the various departments of public business on the mode of election to different offices, which was also expressly promised there, VI (IV). 15. § 22⁸. But these are inconsiderable defects, and if on the transposition

I cannot accept this solution: the main points of my explanation will be found with some modifications in the notes on VI (IV). 2 § 5 (1143), § 6 (1144).

² Only in the latter passage the δὲ which follows must be changed into δὴ, or else the whole of the following clause νυνὶ δὲ τὰ ἀξιώματα...λέγωμεν expunged.

³ See the note there, and Spengel Ueber die Politik 36 ff.

⁴ In that case the change of δὲ into δὴ, slight as it is, will be unnecessary.

⁵ See the note on VI (IV). 2. 6 (1144).

Oncken, op. c. II. 253, thinks these seven chapters contain nothing but repetitions of propositions enlarged upon long before; but this statement is not proved, and is quite incorrect.

⁷ Cp. upon this point the more precise explanation in the note on VI (IV). 15. 1 (1343).

⁸ Oncken l. c. complains of the way in which this sketch, modelled in its main features on the organization of the Attic proposed this book, VII (VI), no longer forms the conclusion of the discussion on imperfect forms of the state it will be most obvious to treat them like other spaces left blank in the course of, and not at the end of, principal sections: where we have more reason to conjecture subsequent losses than to infer that the execution on Aristotle's own part was deficient.

For the highly artistic construction of Book VIII (V) it will be sufficient to refer to the Analysis; on the transpositions necessary even in this book, as well as on the spurious passages in all the books, to the *Commentary*¹. It would be superfluous to commend to the thoughtful reader the ripe political wisdom shown in the account of the forms of government actually established; and this eighth book in particular preeminently reveals the statesman². In his picture of the despot of the shrewder type who skilfully copies the genuine king, VIII (V). 11. 17—34, it really looks as if he had anticipated with prophetic eye the second French Empire and the third Napoleon. Can these precepts on despotism (τυραννίς) have actually been read by the latter and turned to account? That question no one perhaps is in a position to answer.

There is yet another fact which quite apart from this may be emphasized here. As Teichmüller especially has shown³, Aristotle recognised even in his day the importance of the influence which the mode of life and the social relations of a nation exercise upon the form of its political development and of its constitution. Yet Zeller's remarks⁴, that he nevertheless does not speak of civil society as distinct from the state, and that the different principles of classification which he assigns for the forms of government will not quite blend into a unity, appear to be by no means completely answered by Teichmüller's explanations. It is true that in III. 5. 9 ff., IV (VII). 7 f., Aristotle draws a definite distinction between social relations and the political relations proper which government, follows without any introduction upon what precedes. This is quite true, but he appears to overlook ἅμα τε περὶ ἐκείνων εἶ τι λοιπόν, οὐ χεῖρον ἐπισκέψασθαι in the announcement of the contents VII (VI). 1. 1, which points to a supplement with such additions; since in the execution it is the first four chapters that answer to the following words καὶ τὸν οἰκεῖον καὶ τὸν συμφέροντα τρόπον ἀποδοῦναι πρὸς ἐκάστην, but in reverse order. That the whole book is 'a regular medley of 'motley elements, which, although per-haps of the same date, certainly never 'stood in the same original connexion' is therefore (see p. 59 n. 5) an ungrounded assertion. See the note on VIII (VI). 1. 2 (1379 b).

in various ways depend upon them: VI (IV). 4 §§ 20—22, 6 §§ 1—3, 12 § 2; VII (VI). 4 §§ 1—3, 8—14; cp. III. 12 § 7 f.; IV (VII). cc. 8, 9; VI (IV). cc. 3, 4. But he nowhere attributes to the former independent importance, or a separate province of their own: they are generally regarded only as the condition which is requisite in order that the life of the state may take this or that form. But this leaves the distinction imperfect. In general, where Aristotle discovers a new conception he also coins his own term for it, or at any rate remarks that there is as yet no appropriate word for it in Greek. But here, in keeping with this imperfection, there is no such remark with reference to civil society; but, as Teichmüller¹ himself quite rightly observes, the word 'city' or 'state' (πόλις) is sometimes used in a narrower sense to exclude the merely social elements, sometimes with a wider meaning to include them. Further, the distinction of Monarchy, Aristocracy and Polity, and so also amongst the degenerate forms, that of Tyranny, Oligarchy and Democracy, merely according to the number of the rulers (III. 7. 2 f.), is certainly only provisional. Immediately afterwards (III c. 8, see above p. 38) it is described as something merely accidental in the case of Democracy and Oligarchy, which in the extreme case might even be absent, the real ground of the distinction being poverty and wealth. Indeed later on the mere distinction in number is, in the case of Aristocracy and Polity, completely abandoned. Even in the ideal Aristocracy the whole civic body rules itself; and although here, as was remarked above (p. 54), the real governing body of fully qualified citizens forms a minority of the whole number, yet one can see no reason why in a spurious Aristocracy the actual civic body must necessarily be a smaller number than in a Polity. Thus the only normal constitutions proper that remain are ideal Monarchy and ideal Aristocracy, see VI (IV). 7 § 2, 8 § 1; spurious Aristocracies and Polity only occupy the place of intermediate or transitional forms between the normal constitutions and their corruptions. The so-called Aristocracies are said to be mixed forms combining aristocratic with democratic elements or both with Oligarchy, VI (IV). 7 § 4, 8 § 9; why there should not also be among them combinations of aristocratic and oligarchical elements² without democratic admixture, is not quite clear. Polity appears as a mixture of Oligarchy and Democracy: if this is the case, both these extremes, to which it is intermediate, must be considered to be perverted forms of it, instead of Oligarchy being a corruption of Aristocracy and Democracy of Polity, as was said at first (III. 7. 1 foll.) and again repeated VI (IV). 8. 1. There are however even later passages

in which Oligarchy is defined as a corruption of Aristocracy; and his qualification of prevailing views, that it is the rule of the rich rather than of the minority, is in some measure ignored VIII (v). 7. 1.¹ In Polity then no aristocratic element is recognised; for the principle of Aristocracy is virtue or superior excellence², while the only excellence discoverable in Polity is superiority in war; III. 7. 4, comp. VI (IV). 13. 7 foll.³ This is just what Aristotle censures in Sparta, II. 9. 34 f., IV (VII) 14 § 15 ff. (cp. 2 § 9); and consequently he ought not to have reckoned the Spartan constitution, as he does, with spurious aristocracies, but with Polities. But on the other hand how should Polities be counted amongst normal constitutions of even the second rank unless a certain excellence of the citizens was also required in them? Or is the public education, for which Sparta is praised, v (VIII). 1. 4⁴, to make the difference? But there was nothing of the sort at Carthage, and yet Aristotle classes the constitution there with aristocracies and not with Polities⁵. Again, the rule of the majority and of the minority is represented as quite indispensable to the notions of oligarchy and democracy, VI (IV). 4 §§ 5, 6; while in VIII (v). 7 §§ 5—9, VI (IV). 7 § 4, 8 § 3 ff., Aristotle is made to adopt—at one moment to adopt and then at the next to contradict—a view which is altogether incompatible with such definitions, viz. that the mixed constitutions which incline more to democracy should be called Polities, and those which incline more to oligarchy, Aristocracies⁶. Such inconsistencies would certainly be too glaring even for a far less able thinker. They are not made a whit more intelligible by the fact that the conception of Oligarchy oscillates somewhat between a government of wealth, of birth, and of a minority: on the contrary they bear the clearest marks of interpolation⁷. But further: the best of the four varieties of democracy is a departure from Aristotle's conception of democracy, the government of the rich by the poor, for it represents both as sharing the government equally, VI (IV). 4. 22. Even the conception of a degenerate constitution as government in the interest of the governors is not at all applicable here, if we follow the description given in VII (VI). 4 §§ 1—7, nor yet in the case of the best and most moderate oligarchy. Thus both should be reckoned

⁵ VI (IV). 7 § 4. 11, VIII (v). 7 § 4 and also perhaps 12 § 15. In II. 11 § 5 the expression is more hesitating.

amongst the normal constitutions of the second class: and even the second and third varieties of oligarchy would have to be included with them as forming the lowest types of normal constitutions; since they are still governed by the laws, and so are constitutional, not arbitrary, governments¹. It is surprising how Teichmüller² could overlook the fact that on his own showing, the social element—whether the predominating employment is agriculture and cattle-rearing, or trade and industry, or something intermediate, the pursuit of both equally—only suffices to distinguish three varieties of democracy, so that Aristotle is obliged to take other points of view in order to make out four. In the case of oligarchy the distinction, which Aristotle certainly makes, between the rich nobles and merchants or manufacturers who have made money, does not come into consideration to mark the distinction which he draws between the four varieties of this constitution. In place of it we have merely the ever increasing growth of wealth and its accumulation in fewer and fewer hands, and here again in the account which Teichmüller³ himself gives of these varieties this is precisely the case. In the whole scheme of the successive grades of constitutions from the Ideal Monarchy downwards, through the genuine and spurious Aristocracies, Polity, first Democracy, first Oligarchy, &c., down to the most extreme Democracy, then the most extreme Oligarchy (government by Dynasts)⁴, and finally Tyranny, this being the ultimate stage of development⁵, there is no place where the historical forms of the monarchy could be fitted in. Lastly, from what precedes it is seen that the early and provisional statement of the relation of the constitutions to one another, III. c. 7, has not simply been modified by the further course of the discussions, but that in the end hardly any part of it is left standing; so that it may well be asked whether under these circumstances Aristotle was justified in putting it forward even provisionally. No doubt all these vacillations, inequalities, and contradictions, affect the husk rather than the core of Aristotle's political theory: indeed a certain portion of them are by no means to be regarded as actual mistakes. The main supports of this political system are, that the unqualified principle of democracy and the absolute principle of oligarchy, the latter more even than the former, introduce the same sort of arbitrary government, which comes to a head in Tyranny—that a good middle class is the foundation of a healthy political life: and

their strength has outlasted the storms of centuries. Poets like Phocylides and Euripides (the latter with a political intention), had, it is true, sung the praise of the middle class¹; 'but Aristotle is the first thinker who makes the functions of the middle class in society and in politics the foundation of his practical political theories, and of his explanation of political history. His love of the mean in all things is nowhere so systematically and so consistently carried out as here².' He forcibly depicts the equalizing force of the well-to-do middle class and the permanence of the constitution where it is most strongly represented, that is, Πολιτεία. The next best condition is one where it is at least as strong as one of the two contending extremes, rich and poor, and thereby is enabled to stave off the decisive victory of either. Even then it is possible to maintain, according to circumstances, either another Polity, or at least a law-abiding and moderate Democracy or Oligarchy, as the case may be. But where the middle class is weaker than either separately a perpetual struggle prevails between the two extremes, with never-ending revolutions, 'and the end is the fatal exhaustion of both: while Tyranny succeeds to their inheritance³.'

But the more essential the part played by Polity in the philosopher's political system, the more surprising does it appear that his remarks on this form of government cannot be combined in all their details into a consistent whole, a complete picture which shall be quite distinct. At one time he represents it as being in accordance with an aristocracy and a 'polity' to fill all offices by election, without a property qualification; in the case of polity, therefore, by no higher qualification than is generally requisite here for actual citizenship VI (IV). 9. 5. At another time however the application of the lot, either alone or accompanied by election with restriction of the right of voting or being voted for, VI (14). 15 § 19 f, is said to be characteristic of Polity. This contradiction may not be so important perhaps as at first sight appears⁴; yet we are all the more surprised to find in the same chapter the restriction of the popular assembly to the mere election of the council and the magistrates represented as characteristic of Polity, VI (IV). 14 § 10⁵, and then to hear (§ 15) that usually in Politics the resolutions of the popular assembly may be annulled by the council and the questions which they affect brought before the former assembly again and again, until it passes a resolution conformably⁶. In the same place exactly the opposite procedure is recommended as more just, and that, too, for Democracy:

thus then the latter, by adopting it, would become even better than the ordinary Polities. Must we here recognise another of those additions whereby the school obscured the master's work¹? Who again can fail to be surprised at the great concession which is made to unqualified popular rule and paid democracy, VI (IV) 9 § 2, 13 § 5, when Aristotle states that the combination of the two measures, payment of the poor for attendance in the popular assembly the council and the law-courts, and punishment of the rich for their non-attendance, is appropriate to Polity? It may be that he is thinking only of those Polities in which the middle class is not numerous enough to maintain a decided preponderance as compared with the two extreme parties, where consequently its deficiency must be artificially made good in this way². But this, to say the least, has never been expressly mentioned by Aristotle³, and there is all the more reason to hold⁴, that in the end he has approximated, much more than he himself believes, to unqualified government by the people, and that his Πολιτεία is nothing but Attic democracy without its unfavourable side. Aristotle himself remarks, III. 15. 13, that when once states have grown more populous and cities increased in size it is not easy to call into life any constitution except a democracy; and in VII (VI). 5 §§ 5, 6, that since then even the older moderate patriarchal democracy of peasant proprietors has come to an end. It is a result that he laments, but he is aware that it is unalterable. All that remains is so to shape the most advanced democracy itself that it may lose as far as may be its arbitrary, despotic character and wear the appearance of something like Πολιτεία. This may be done by regulating for the advantage of all the system of payment, which cannot be altogether avoided here, and by checking the demagogues in their practices of vexatious accusations. The detailed proposals which Aristotle makes in this direction VII (VI), 5 §§ 3—8, 6 § 4; VIII (V). 8. 15 ff, 9 §§ 5—11 ff, prove his lively interest in this question. Oncken⁵ has well said: "Either renounce freedom and equality, that is, the essential nature of the constitutional state in Hellas, and give up the community to the despotic rule of violent oligarchs; or make the whole civic body legislators and judges, summon the rich to take honorary magistracies, compensate the poor for the service of watching over them. IX. DATE OF THE WORK AND ITS ASSUMED CONNEXION WITH THE NICOMACHEAN ETHICS.

“There are notices in the Politics of the Sacred War, VIII. (v). 4. 7, “as of something in the past ; of Phalaecus’ expedition to Crete, which “took place at the end of it, Ol. 108, 3 (B.C. 346)², as a recent event, “νεωστὶ πόλεμος ξενικὸς διαβέβηκεν εἰς τὴν νῆσον, II. 10. 16 : lastly, of “the assassination of Philip (B.C. 336), VIII. (v). 10. 16³, without any “intimation that it had but very lately happened⁴.” On the other hand the passage II. 10. 16 appears to have been written before B.C. 333⁵.
 The Politics as a whole must have been written later than the Nico- machean Ethics, which is quoted six times, II. 2 § 4 ; III. 9 § 3, 12 § 1 ; IV (VII). 13 §§ 5, 7 ; VI (IV). 11. 3⁶, and earlier than the Poetics which is announced as to follow in V (VIII). 7. 3⁷.

Heitz’ objection (in Die verlorenen Schriften 99 ff.) there mentioned in n. 2 on p. 12 has in the meantime been answered in detail by Vahlen Sitzungsber. der Wiener Akad. LXVII. 1874. 293—298 : he has made it tolerably certain that the chapter on κἀθαρσις in question, which is now lost,

It must indeed be admitted, and has already occasionally been pointed out above, that a part of the inconsistencies in the work were, from Aristotle's general position, inevitable, nay even characteristic; that on the most careful revision he would never have detected them. Others again are such as might easily have escaped his notice. Yet after all, enough inconsistencies repetitions and other discrepancies remain¹ to compel the inference that not only did Aristotle never give the finishing touches to this work, but that he must have been a long time over it, taking it up at intervals and with many interruptions through other works. In consequence of this he had altered his views on many points, and had not always the details of the earlier portions fully present to his mind when he came to write the later ones. The view here taken would be materially confirmed if the larger sections which are wanting were never really written, the work never having been completed as a whole.

It will be hardly possible to substantiate a well-grounded objection to the Aristotelian origin of the six citations of the *Ethics*², and yet that work itself³ calls the theory developed in it not Ethics but Politics, and the same title is confirmed by passages of the Poetics and *Rhetoric*⁴. For the intermediate expression of the Rhetoric (I. 4. 5, 1359 b 10 f.), ἡ περὶ τὰ ἥθη πολιτική, is here our guide, by making Ethics and Politics in the narrower sense appear as parts of Politics in the wider sense. The matter is thus stated with perfect correctness by the author of the Magna Moralia at the commencement of his work⁵, and Aristotle himself explains in the last chapter of the Ethics that a full realization of the principles laid down in it can only be expected from political education and legislation.

To regard the Ethics and Politics however as forming the first and second parts of one and the same work, as has now and then been done, is certainly not correct¹. Yet this view is undoubtedly very old. For it must even have been adopted by the writer who at the close of the Ethics appended that introduction to the Politics now to be read there which may be translated somewhat as follows²: "Since then
 "previous writers have omitted to make legislation the subject of their "enquiries, it might perhaps be as well that we should ourselves take
 "this subject into consideration together with the theory of the consti"tution generally, in order that the philosophy of Man may be as far as "possible brought to a conclusion. First then let us try to review
 "whatever has been rightly stated at various times by our predecessors;
 "next from a comparison of the constitutions to investigate what it is
 "which preserves and destroys states and individual constitutions, and "from what causes some are ordered well and others ill. For when
 "this has been considered we should perhaps be more likely to gain a "comprehensive view not only of what constitution is absolutely the "best, but also how each separate constitution should be regulated, and "what laws and customs it must adopt (in order to be the best of its "kind). Let us begin then with our discussion."

Schlosser long since, with good reason, doubted the genuineness of this patchwork in the forcible and cogent remark³: "there is no coherence between the close of this passage and the beginning of the Politics, and Aristotle does not follow the plan here marked out." The opening of the Politics is only intelligible when regarded as belonging to an independent work which starts from the notion of its own subject-matter, the state. We are not told that something similar was stated rather differently at the commencement of the Ethics; the state is here first constructed as the all-comprehensive association which has the highest good for its end: nor is there the least intimation that for the realization of unimpeded virtuous activity, the full meaning of this highest good, we were referred in the last chapter of the Ethics to the Politics. The supposed transition then is pure fancy with nothing here to support it. In keeping with the announcement contained in it Aristotle should rather have begun with the second book¹, making what is contained in Bk. VIII (v). come next, and then developing the contents of IV (VII), V (VIII), and lastly of VI (IV). and VII (VI). What must be understood by a 'comparison of constitutions' we see clearly from X 9 §§ 20, 21, 1181 a 16, 17, b 7²; at the same time we also see how much the interpolator has misunderstood the expression he borrows. There it denotes the combination of different laws and elements of different constitutions into a new constitution and new legislation: here it can only denote an accumulation of information on the constitutions of as many different states as possible and on the history of their development, because only from that can we gather what is here intended to be gathered from this 'comparison'³. That before Aristotle no scientific enquiry into legislation existed is palpably untrue; and had the absence of such enquiry been the only inducement to the composition of his work, how could this have sufficed to make him lay down "the theory of the constitution generally"? That no writers had been found to elaborate this is not asserted even here; on the contrary we are promised an exposition and estimate of all the facts already discovered by earlier enquirers. Even the words καὶ ὅλως δὲ περὶ πολιτείας contain an un-Aristotelian idea, for they imply that Legislation must be a part of the theory of the Constitution, while to Aristotle, we have seen, both are parts of Politics proper. Of the incredible mode of expression in the concluding words from καὶ ποία πολιτεία ἀρίστη onwards we will say nothing: it is sufficient to remark that the interpolator has left out just what is most important, which in the translation above has been added within brackets. In short, to whatever period this interpolation belongs its author did not himself know what he was about, and it would be for the most part lost labour to seek to discover "method in his madness."

That in spite of their close connexion⁴ the Ethics and the Politics are regarded by Aristotle as two independent works, is sufficiently shown by the way in which the one is quoted in the other. Until sufficient reason

² οὐδ' ἂν ᾤοντο (sc. οἱ σοφισταὶ) ῥᾷδιον εἶναι τὸ νομοθετῆσαι συναγαγόντι τοὺς εὐδοκμοῦντας τῶν νόμων, and τῶν νόμων καὶ
ω

τῶν πολιτειῶν αἱ συναγωγαί, where the expression certainly tends to pass over into the meaning put upon it by the interpolator, but goes no farther.

is adduced for transferring the first chapter of Bk. IV (VII). from Aristotle to Theophrastos or some one else¹, the yet more unequivocal mention of Ethics there (§ 13) as 'another study,' ἐτέρας...σχολῆς², has the most decisive importance: although the term 'another study' would mean no more when so applied than it does in the case of the Prior or Pure and Posterior or Applied Analytics, for example. Yet no one has tried to show from the close connexion between them that these latter treatises are merely parts of one and the same work. In fact Politics in Aristotle's sense, so far as the state according to its idea is a means of training to human virtue and therefore to happiness, is nothing but Applied Ethics: the problem of Pure Ethics being to show wherein virtue and happiness consist. But since this idea of the state could only be truly realized in the absolutely best state, which does not as yet exist, which even if it did exist would only be one state amongst many—since therefore the virtue of the citizen is dissociated from the virtue of the man—Ethics has to deal with the moral activity of the individual, Politics with that of the state³.

In Aristotle's classification of the sciences, both studies, in common with Poetics, have a somewhat uncertain place and worth assigned them, as Zeller⁴ and Walter⁵ have shown: nor does it appear that Aristotle cleared this up sufficiently to himself, or even tried to do so. It is a peculiar weakness of his Ethics that it has no purely scientific importance for him; it merely serves as an introduction to practical morality⁶: but again, as he himself explains, the direct value of mere theoretical instruction for this purpose is very slight, nay, quite insignificant⁷. Yet practical insight (φρόνησις), without which there is no moral virtue⁸, can be materially promoted by Ethics⁹, although it does not by any means coincide with Ethics in subject-matter¹⁰. So too the practical insight of the leading statesman in political life can exist in a purely empirical manner without a comprehensive theory of politics; but on the other hand there is much to learn from such a theory, and the great practical statesman will be all the greater the more he has appropriated it to himself. That the main value of πολιτικὴ consists in affording this important contribution to the education of capable statesmen is stated by Aristotle III. 1. 1; VI (IV). c. 1; VII (VI). 5. 1; IV (VII). 13. 5, and in other passages, and this fully agrees with his analogous view about Ethics. But his inconsistency with himself does not go so far here as before; rather he demands of political theory III. 8. 1 (cp. VI [IV]. 13. 5), that it should exhaust all conceivable cases, even those of which it can be foreseen that they will seldom or never actually occur¹.

¹⁰ As Zeller thinks, op. c. II. ii 608 n.; he has been refuted by Walter p. 151. There is no doubt that the passage of the Nic. Eth. adduced by Zeller, VI. 8 §§ 1—4 1141 b 23—1142 a 11, is not by Aristotle, as was long ago shown by Fischer Fritzsche and Rassow.

[X. THE MOST RECENT CRITICISM OF THE TEXT.

The comparative worth of the Manuscripts.

This question, of which some notice will be found above², has recently been raised anew by Busse in an excellent dissertation *De praesidiis emendandi Aristotelis Politica*³. By a minute analysis of the old Latin version, Busse proves beyond all doubt that it has been over-estimated by Vettori and Schneider, and even by Susemihl, and is by no means so strictly literal or correct as they supposed⁴.

To begin with, William of Moerbeke's ignorance of Greek was something deplorable⁵. He renders περὶ τῶν ἀποφνημαζμένων περὶ κτλ., de pronunciatis de optima civitate; πρὸς δὲ τοῖς ἄλλοις apud alios; ἐπιτίθεσθαι praeferrī; ἐπιδημεῖν praefectum populi esse; evidently arriving at the meaning of a compound by the most rudimentary analysis, as *τὰ ἀγαθὰ τὰ περιμάχῃτα bona quae circa res bellicas*⁶. But mere ignorance whether of the meaning of words or of the construction—and it would seem as if, in II. 12. 8, he made Ὀλυμπίασιν an accusative after τοῦ νικήσαντος *qui vicit Olimpiasem*⁷; at any rate he gives super tecta for

[Here Prof. Susemihl's own Introduction ends. The following section is mainly an attempt to present succinctly some results of his critical labours; but for its form, and for occasional divergences of opinion, he is not responsible. TR.

⁴ Susemihl however in the large critical edition (1872) p. xxxiii f. had already pointed out inaccuracies and inconsistencies in William's translation and the need of caution in inferences from it to the original. See also the edition of 1879, e.g. I p. 204 n. 1, 210 n. 2.

⁶ Busse op. cit. p. 36 f. Space permits only a few typical instances to be selected from his stock.

ἀνὰ δώματα in v (VIII). 3. 9¹—does less to obscure the readings of his original than a fatal inconsistency and fluctuation in the choice of renderings. The prepositions are changed or confused on almost every page. So likewise the particles: γὰρ autem in ἔστι γὰρ II. 9. 18, ἵσως γὰρ IV (VII). 17. 13, δεῖ γὰρ v (VIII). 1. 2²; γὰρ igitur, III. 7. 5; δὲ enim I. 2. 1; οὖν enim I. 8. 6³, etc.: not to speak of the stock renderings καὶ...δὲ et...etiam, καὶ τοι et quidem. Sometimes he omits particles (μὲν, γάρ, δέ, οὔτε); sometimes, e.g. II. 5. 9 δικαίως et iuste, he inserts them. They are most frequently inserted to avoid asyndeton, as in II. 3. 7 φράτορα φυλέτην fratruelem aut contribulem, etc.⁴ He is careless of the order of words; thus II. 4. 6 καὶ γενέσθαι ἐκ δύο ὄντων ἀμφοτέρους ἕνα et ambos fieri unum ex duobus existentibus; IV (VII). 3. 8 κυρίως καὶ et dominos (i.e. καὶ κυρίου)⁵. His carelessness leads him repeatedly to translate the adjectives ἀριστοκρατικὴ, ὀλιγαρχικὴ by the nouns *aristocratia, oligarchia*⁶.

This being the ordinary style of his translation, when he comes to passages where his Greek original was defective, it is only occasionally that he transmits the defect faithfully: as in VIII (v). 6. 3 ἐν θω (for ἔνθα) in tho, which he took for a proper name; III. 11. 3 κρίης (for κρίνουσι, so M^s) Kries; II. 9. 30 φιλίτια (so M^s) amicabilia; v (VIII). 1 § 4 M^s αὐτ' ipsorum (he has read the compendium αὐτῶν); 6 § 9 M^s ὁ αὐτός (for αὐλός) *id ipsum*⁷. More frequently he tries to get some sort of sense by putting in a word or phrase suggested by the context, or by a parallel passage in the Politics. Take for instance VIII (v). 1. 3: P¹ gives ἀνίσους ἐ. τι ὄντας, with space for one letter; M^s has slurred over this defect of the archetype by reading ἔτι; not so William; from the immediately preceding ἐκ τοῦ ἵσους ὅτι οὖν ὄντας he derives inaequales in quocunque existentes. Similarly with natura for δύναμις in IV (VII). 11. 4 (from the adjoining φύσιν), alia quidem esse eadem for τὸ πᾶσι μετεῖναι VI (IV). 4. 25 (from the following τᾶλλα μὲν εἶναι ταῦτά): see also III. 16 § 5 universale borrowed from c. 15 § 4 τὸ καθόλου, IV (VII). 1 § 4 quae circa prudentiam se habent, neque enim beatificant, IV (VII). 11 § 1 si ad votum oportet adipisci positionem borrowed from 5 § 3 τὴν θέσιν εἰ χρή ποιεῖν κατ' εὐχὴν; etc.⁸ Thus the defects and false readings of his original, which must have resembled M^s though not so corrupt, are made worse by alterations and superficial remedies. In IV (VII). 14. 22 Γ had the same hiatus as M^s has now, through the homoeoteleuton σπονδ-άζειν, σχολ-άζειν: William does what he can to conceal this by translating ἔνεκεν τάξῃ καὶ τῆς εἰρήνης gratia ordinis et pacis, as if he had read τάξεως. In VI (IV). 4. II M^s gives τῶν ἀδυνάτων ἢ instead of τῶν ἀδυνάτων ἡ; so too Γ, for William renders <minus> quam to make sense. Similarly V (VIII). 6. II M^s has ἦποντο for ἡποντο; William sequebantur; which must be his attempt to make sense out of ἦποντο¹.

Another source of divergence between the codices and William's Latin must also be kept in view, viz. the freedom with which he sometimes translates. Thus in II. 9. 20 δημαγωγεῖν αὐτοὺς ἡναγκάζοντο καὶ οἱ βασιλεῖς regere populum se ipsos (he read αὐτοὺς) cogebant reges, he may perhaps have simply exchanged the passive construction for the active. This is a not uncommon resource with him: see VII (VI). 7 § 5 προσκείσθαι arponere, 8 § 1 διηρησθαι dividere etc.; and for the converse II. 7 § 6 δέειξαι ostendatur, 8 § 5 γράφειν scribatur, VIII (V). 8. 9 παρειληφέναι comprehendantur, etc.² Though he hardly ever appears to omit words from Γ, it can be shown that he sometimes adds: e.g. I. 5. 8 ἔπερ τοῖς εἰρημένοις si quidem et dictis <creditur>, II. 9. 3 κεκτημένας περὶ οἴκους (so M^s for περιούκους) possidentibus <praedia> circa domus, etc.³ Yet additions may be due to glosses, like videro fugientem proelio, (?) ἀπάνευθε μάχης νοήσω in the margin of P¹, etc.⁴ Lastly, how much caution is needed in handling this translation may be judged from a few characteristic blunders taken almost at random: I. 9. 1 οὔτε πόρρω ἐκείνης neque longe <posita>; II. 8. 13 οὐ καλῶς δὲ οὐδ' ὁ περὶ τῆς κρίσεως ἔχει νόμος, τὸ κρίνειν ἀξιοῦν κτλ non bene autem neque de iudicio habet lex iudificare dignificans, though here one might suppose he had ὁ κρίνειν ἀξίων before him⁵: II. II § 14 ἕκαστον ἀποτελεῖται τῶν αὐτῶν *unum quodque perficitur ab eisdem*⁶: C. II § 15 τῷ πλουτεῖν, αἰεὶ τι τοῦ δήμου μέρος ἐκέμποντες ἐπὶ τὰς πόλεις inditando semper aliquam populi partem emittentes super urbes, suggested perhaps by ποιούσιν εὐπόρους in VII (VI). 5. 9⁷: III. 3 § 2 ἔπερ οὖν δημοκρατοῦνται si quidem igitur in democratiam versae fuerant quaedam: 13 § 2 οἴκοι habetur: IV (VII). 16. 14 πρὸς θεῶν ἀποθεραπείαν τῶν εἰληχότων τὴν περὶ τῆς γενέσεως τιμὴν ad deorum reverentiam hiis, quae sortitae sunt cum qui de generatione honorem (as if ταῖς εἰληχύiais were read)⁸.

From this examination of the old translation Busse concludes that it is a less trustworthy representative of the better recension (II¹ i. e. Γ P¹ M) than P¹, the codex of Demetrios Chalkondylas. Its lost original was slightly better than the very corrupt Ambrosian manuscript

M^s, but closely resembled it; the common archetype of the two being itself very corrupt, with numerous omissions through homoeoteleuta and one or two glosses inserted in the text¹. And it was from this Latin translation and not from another manuscript, he thinks, that the scribe of P⁵ derived those readings wherein he departs from the second or worse family².

These conclusions however are by no means warranted³. The ignorance and uncritical spirit of William of Moerbeke render it all the more certain that in the majority of the right readings which are due solely to his translation he must have followed a codex considerably better (as it was also older) than the archetype of P¹ or of M^s. When all deductions have been made for variants arising from conjectures and mistranslations, the old translation presents the correct reading 18 times unsupported: 7 times in conjunction with P⁵ only: once in conjunction with P² only: 3 times with P¹ (or its corrections) only; once with Aretinus only: 5 times in conjunction with more than one of the inferior manuscripts⁴. To these may be added some 12 other passages where the evidence, though good, is less convincing⁵. Whereas the correct reading is due to P¹ alone 11 times, to P¹ in conjunction with inferior authorities (Ar., P² margin, P³) 5 times: and several of these are such changes as Demetrios or Aretinus could

There is nothing new in this observation. Compare Susemihl's large critical edition (1872) p. easily make for themselves¹. In 4, or perhaps 5, places P² has alone preserved the right reading: it is difficult to find a single passage where it is due to M^s or to P³ alone². From P⁵ and from Aretinus unsupported a greater number of such cases is derived; but the uncertainty, whether we are dealing with a genuine reading of a manuscript or merely with conjecture, proportionately increases. The latter is more probable not only for P⁵, but for the few occasional good readings of the worst manuscripts³.

Further it must be noticed that while M^s Γ are often found alone supporting a variant against P¹, M^s P¹ are less frequently (the number of such cases being about $\frac{3}{5}$) alone in agreement against Γ, and it is very seldom indeed that P¹ Γ alone support any reading against M^s. What is the right inference to draw from this state of things? Evidently that Γ and M^s go back to one common archetype, and P¹ to another (from which also must be derived the traces of the better recension in P⁴ P²): only the immediate ancestor of M^s had been corrected by the latter, while this was not the case with Γ or the authorities from which it is derived⁴. The genuine readings of the family Π¹ will be found to have been preserved sometimes in the one archetype (of M^s Γ), sometimes in the other (of P¹ and of the corrections in P² P⁴): and the relationship between the members of the family may be represented by the following tree.

¹ P¹ alone 1259 a 13 ἐλαιουργείων, the right order of 1278 a 36 f. Few of the readings common to M^s P¹ or of those common to Γ M^s have much to recommend them. Yet this is far from proving P¹ to be our best authority. Against such a view may be urged (1) the number of mistakes with which, no less than Γ or M^s, it abounds: (2) the futile attempts at correction which it sometimes exhibits, e.g. III. 13. 15 ταύτας γὰρ δεῖ διώκειν for αὐται γὰρ δὴ δοκοῦσι διώκειν (δοκοῦσι having been omitted in the archetype of Π¹): (3) the fact that, as just shown, Γ, solely or with inferior manuscripts, furnishes the true reading at least 34 (perhaps 46) times; whereas P¹, alone or with inferior manuscripts, does the same only 16 times. These considerations are not to be set aside by an isolated passage like III. 9. 8, where P¹ διακόπουσι is a trifle nearer right than M^s διακονοῦσι Will. *ministrant*¹.

All existing manuscripts of the Politics, when compared even with those of the Ethics, are late and bad. Still there are degrees of badness: and if to follow Γ M^s, other things being equal, in preference to P¹ sometimes leads an editor away from the true reading of Π¹, he would yet oftener go astray if he followed P¹ against Γ M^s. The relationship between the two families is itself obscure. In some respects Π² is the better of the two, particularly where it preserves words omitted in Π¹: in such cases it is seldom Π² that has a gloss inserted, nearly always it is Π¹ that is mutilated². Yet as a general rule Π¹ should be followed in preference to Π².

Coming now to Busse's view about P⁵, we must admit that this manuscript presents most remarkable variants. Take v (VIII). 2 § 5 ff. (1337 b 17 ff.):

	πρὸς ἀκριβείαν	ad perfectionem	πρὸς τὸ τέλειον

In some of these instances the discrepancy has nothing to do with

² The manuscripts of the Nicomachean Ethics show an equally perplexing discrepancy between K^bM^b and L^bO^b in some parts of the treatise, K^bO^b and L^bM^b in others.

the old translation: and this is still more plain from the following variants of P⁵: 1330 a 32 χρῆ for δεῖ c. c.¹; 1333 b 2 δὲ καὶ τὰ χρήσιμα for καὶ τὰ χρήσιμα δὲ (Π¹ omit δὲ); 1335 b 23 παιδοποιίας for τεκνοποιίας; 1336 b 5 γὰρ τοῦ for τοῦ γὰρ, 1339 a 16 χάριν for ἔνεκα, 1340 a 8 δῆλον for φανερόν; 9 ἄλλων for ἐτέρων; 1342 a 6 ἀπάσαις for πάσαις; 1309 a 18 οὐ for μή. But at the same time this corrupt carelessly written book has some readings agreeing with P¹ and M^s against the old translation, and others which no Latin version would ever have suggested. Thus 1338 b 27 λειπομένους M^s P⁵ deficientes William, 1318 b 31 τιμημάτων τὰς μείζους ἀπὸ omitted by M^s P⁵ translated by Will.; 1326 b 4 μὲν τοῖς M^s P^{1.5} Ald., τοῖς μὲν Π²; 1332 b 1 μεταβάλλειν M^s P^{1.5} μεταβαλεῖν Π²; 1334 b 2 τε untranslated by Will., τὰ P^{1.5}; 1335 a 16 τὸ c. c. τοὺς M^s P⁵; 1337 a 18 βέλτιον M^s P⁵ Ar., βέλτιστον c. c. optimus Will.; 1319 b 24 καὶ τὰ P^{1.5} and in the margin of P⁴, κατὰ c. c. in Will.; 27 αἱ πρότεροι Π¹ P⁵ and the corrector of P¹, αἱ πρότερον Π²; 1322 a 22 τοῖς εἰρημένοις M^s and P^{1.5} (1st hand), τῆς εἰρημένης c. c. dicto Will.; 1306 a 22 ἐγχειρίσωμεν ceteri, ἐγχειρήσωσιν M^s, ἐγχειρήσουσιν P⁵ manus iniicerint Will.; 1313 b 2 φρόνημά τε P^{1.5} R^b, φρονήματά τε c. c. sapientiae Will.; 1316 a 32 τῶν c. c. τοῦ P^{1.5} Ar., in Γ M^s a hiatus. Take even the suspected passage 1334 a 28, 29 δεῖ δικαιοσύνης καὶ πολλῆς σωφροσύνης τοὺς ἄριστα δοκοῦντας πράττειν καὶ πάντων τῶν μακαριζομένων ἀπολαύοντας c. c., indigent iustitia et multa temperantia qui optime videntur agere et omnibus beatis frui Will. Any one correcting the text from the Latin version would surely have written ἀπολαύειν; but P⁵ has δεόνται.....οἱ ἄριστα δοκοῦντες.....ἀπολαύοντες. Or again, 1311 b 7 διὰ τὸ εἰς τὸ σῶμα αἰσχῦναι (αἰσχύναι M^s P¹ αἰσχύνεσθαι Π²); propterea quod aliqui monarcharum in corpus verecundiam fecerunt would have suggested αἰσχῦναι, not αἰσχύνειν which is what we find in P⁵. So again had the scribe wished to emend the corrupt ὀπλίτην of 1321 a 12, William's armativam would have suggested ὀπλιτικὴν or ὀπλίτιν, not ὀπλιτικόν which is the reading of P⁵. Far more probable is it that here traces of the archetype still remain. Similarly in 1320 b 3 the right reading ἀφιεμένους seems to have come down in P⁵ as well as in P¹: it is at least unlikely that William's respuentes suggested it. Even in viii (v) 8. 2, the passage which Busse thinks conclusive, but for the reminiscence of a phrase in Plato it is by no means clear that παραδνομένη should supersede ὑπεισδύουσα².

² Bekker, who took P² of the second or worse family as the foundation of his text, often adopted readings from P⁵: in some cases even, e.g. 1336 b 18, 1337 b 16 f., 34 f., where M^sP¹ have a better reading. See p. 76.

Dislocations and double recensions.

The text of the Politics, when put into the more coherent shape which to the German editor most nearly reproduces Aristotle's intention¹, is seen to depart from the order of the manuscripts not merely in the two great instances of the arrangement of the books², but also in a large number of other cases. It will be useful here to review, at greater length than can be done in the critical footnotes, the difficulties for which transposition seems to be suggested as a natural remedy, especially as the fullest account of these suggestions has often to be sought in monographs or magazine articles not always readily accessible.

(1) Bk. I. 11 §§ 5, 6. Montecatino, p. 422 of his Commentary on Bk. I., was the first to enquire what is the connexion between § 6, εἰσὶ δὲ τεχνικώταται μὲν τῶν ἐργασιῶν ὅπου ἐλάχιστον τύχης, βαναυσόταται δ' ἐν αἷς τὰ σώματα λωβῶνται μάλιστα, δουλικώταται δ' ὅπου τοῦ σώματος πλείσται χρήσεις, ἀγεννέσταται δὲ ὅπου ἐλάχιστον προσδεῖ ἀρετῆς, and the context. Piccart, p. 140, proposed to remove it to follow τῷ σώματι μόνῳ χρησίμων (l. 27). As Schneider saw, this will not do; for the third or mixed sort of χρηματιστική could not be excluded from the ἐργασίαι of § 6. Now the last words of § 5, immediately before εἰσὶ δὲ τεχνικώταται κτλ, are, περὶ ἐκάστου δὲ τούτων καθόλου μὲν εἴρηται καὶ νῦν, τὸ δὲ κατὰ μέρος ἀκριβολογεῖσθαι χρήσιμον μὲν πρὸς τὰς ἐργασίας, φορτικὸν δὲ τὸ ἐνδιατρίβειν. This reads like the final remark of Aristotle on the separate branches of χρηματιστική, considered not in regard to theory but to practice (τὰ πρὸς τὴν χρῆσιν, § 1): no new remarks upon them ought to be added. If so, § 6, which consists of such remarks, would be in place if it preceded περὶ ἐκάστου δὲ κτλ: or, which is the same thing, if the sentence περὶ ἐκάστου δὲ...τὸ ἐνδιατρίβειν be transposed to follow ἀρετῆς. The argument too runs on better to the next sentence ἐπεὶ δ' ἐστὶν ἐνίοις γεγραμμένα κτλ, § 7. "I have here said what was necessary in a "general way on each of these various branches; to go accurately into "details would no doubt be useful for the various pursuits themselves, "but it would be a tedious subject to dwell upon. The reader is "referred for particulars to the separate works which have been written "upon them³."

(2) Bk. I. 13 § 8. q. v. "It is strange," says M. Thurot¹, "that after having spoken of the deliberative part of the soul, Aristotle does not say one word of the ἀρεταὶ διανοητικαὶ which properly belong to it, while speaking three times, ll. 15, 17, 20, of ἡθικὴ ἀρετὴ in the same sense. Further, it is singular that in order to prove that he who commands ought to have ἡθικὴ ἀρετὴ in perfection, he says that the work belongs to him who directs it and that reason (λόγος) is a directing faculty: this reflexion evidently applies to the ἀρετὴ διανοητικὴ of τὸ λόγον ἔχον, elsewhere called φρόνησις, III. 4. 17, and not to the ἡθικὴ ἀρετὴ of the ἄλογον." He proposes therefore to transpose ll. 14—17, ὁμοίως τοίνυν...ἔργον to follow ἐπιβάλλει αὐτοῖς: to omit ἡθικὴ in line 20, and change ἡθικὴν to διανοητικὴν in l. 17. (The transposition becomes less needed and less satisfactory if ἡθικὴν be retained.) Now there is no doubt that, on the stricter Aristotelian theory, φρόνησις inseparably involves ἡθικὴ ἀρετή, Nic. Eth. VI. 13 §§ 2, 3, 6 (cp. ib. 12 § 6, ἔτι τὸ ἔργον ἀποτελεῖται κατὰ τὴν φρόνησιν καὶ τὴν ἡθικὴν ἀρετήν); so l. 20 ἡθικὴ may stand. The dianoetic virtue, in its perfection, seems to reside solely in the master who commands. Cp. § 7, just above the present passage, ὁ δοῦλος ὅλως οὐκ ἔχει τὸ βουλευτικόν, and Pol. III. 4. §§ 17, 18, ἡ δὲ φρόνησις ἄρχοντος ἴδιος ἀρετὴ μόνη. τὰς γὰρ ἄλλας ἔοικεν ἀναγκαῖον εἶναι κοινὰς καὶ τῶν ἀρχομένων καὶ τῶν ἀρχόντων, ἀρχομένου δέ γε οὐκ ἔστιν ἀρετὴ φρόνησις, ἀλλὰ δόξα ἀληθὴς with the notes.

(3) II. 4. 4, ἔοικε δὲ μᾶλλον...μὴ νεωτερίζειν. "It is singular that Aristotle supposes here what he has not yet proved and is going to prove later on, namely, that communism relaxes the bond of family affections. Again in c. 5 § 24, 1264 b 1, he supposes without saying "so, that community of wives and children will make the labourers "more obedient" (Thurot)². He therefore suggests that II. 4. 4 should follow κοινωνίαν in II. 5. 24. A better place would seem to be in 4 § 9, 1262 b 24, after Aristotle has proved that ὕδαρὴς φιλία must result from the Platonic institutions in the absence of the ordinary motives to mutual kindness. The argument of §§ 5—9 goes to show συμβαίνειν ἀνάγκη τοῦναντίον ὧν προσήκει τοὺς ὀρθῶς κειμένους νόμους αἰτίους γίνεσθαι; the application to the agricultural class would come in appositely to point this reversal of the effect intended³.

(4) II. 6 § 3 sub fin. καὶ περὶ τῆς παιδείας, ποίαν τινα δεῖ γίνεσθαι τῶν φυλάκων. Aristotle would hardly consider a discussion περὶ παιδείας to be extraneous to the main political subject of the Republic. Moreover in line 37 he exchanges the construction with περὶ for a new one οἶεται δεῖν...πεπλήρωκε. The clause καὶ περὶ παιδείας...φυλάκων should come amongst the subjects (περὶ ὀλίγων πάμπαν) on which Socrates in the Republic has touched, and therefore in § 1 after κτήσεως 1364 b 30¹.

It is possible, however, while admitting that the transposition would give a better position to these words, to defend their present place. Aristotle is evidently criticizing in an unsympathetic spirit. He has reduced the points touched upon to a minimum (περὶ ὀλίγων πάμπαν). Afterwards, when he complains of the extraneous topics which take up the bulk of the treatise (criticism on poetry and art, psychology, metaphysics, ethics), he has grudgingly to allow that some of these long digressions do serve the purpose (or at least are introduced under the colour) of elaborating the training of the guardians.

(5) II. 7 § 1, αἱ μὲν ἰδιωτῶν αἱ δὲ φιλοσόφων καὶ πολιτικῶν. Giphanius (Van Giffen)² comparing c. 12 § 1, ἔνιοι μὲν οὐκ ἐκοινωνήσαν πράξεων πολιτικῶν οὐδ' ὄντινωνοῦν, ἀλλὰ διετέλεσαν ἰδιωτεύοντες τὸν βίον... ἔνιοι δὲ νομοθέται γεγόνασιν...πολιτευθέντες αὐτοί, proposed to omit φιλοσόφων καὶ. Spengel³ simply transposed these words before ἰδιωτῶν.

(6) II. 7 §§ 10—13 = §§ 18—20.

The third objection to Phaleas' scheme, §§ 8—13, emphasizes the necessity for equality of education as well as of possessions. Like the preceding criticisms, §§ 5—7, it deals with the internal arrangements of the state. In §§ 14—17 there is a transition to its external relations, which Phaleas ought not to have overlooked, as he did. It is not likely then that in §§ 18—20 (with which we must take § 21) Aristotle would return to internal matters and repeat his previous objection in other words. Yet this is what he has done if the common order be retained. Let the two passages be read side by side, and it will be seen that there is no new thought in the latter, but only a reiteration of the former in different language.

It seems advisable therefore to remove §§ 18—21 to precede § 14 ἔτι, to treat as parallel versions §§ 10—13, §§ 18—20 cited above, and to take § 21 as coming directly after them but before § 14¹.

(7) II. 11 § 12. In § 9 Aristotle says that eligibility to office on the ground of wealth and on the ground of merit are traits of oligarchy and aristocracy respectively: hence the Carthaginian constitution, where wealth and ability combined are qualifications for the highest offices, must be a third and distinct scheme. This, he adds, § 10, is a fault in the legislator, who ought to have made provision that ability should not be associated with poverty even in citizens in a private station: ὁρᾶν ἄρχοντες ἀλλὰ μὴδ' ἰδιωτεύοντες. Now here, as far as the sense goes, the clause in § 12 belongs: βέλτιον δ', εἰ καὶ προεῖτο τὴν ἀπορίαν τῶν ἐπιεικῶν ὁ νομοθέτης, ἀλλὰ ἀρχόντων γε ἐπιμελείσθαι τῆς σχολῆς. "If he was "forced to neglect the last-mentioned task, at least he might have made "provision for poor men in office." Then would follow quite naturally the criticism of § 10: "at all events he should not have allowed these "high offices to be virtually put up for sale¹."

(8) III. 7 §§ 3, 4 ὅταν δὲ τὸ πλῆθος πρὸς τὸ κοινὸν πολιτεύηται συμφέρον, καλεῖται τὸ κοινὸν ὄνομα πασῶν τῶν πολιτειῶν, πολιτεία. συμβαίνει δ' εὐλόγως. ἓνα μὲν γὰρ διαφέρειν κατ' ἀρετὴν ἢ πλείους ἐνδέχεται, πλείους δ' ἤδη χαλεπὸν ἡκριβῶσθαι πρὸς πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν, ἀλλὰ μάλιστα τὴν πολεμικὴν· αὕτη γὰρ ἐν πλήθει γίνεται· διόπερ κατὰ ταύτην τὴν πολιτείαν κυριώτατον τὸ προπολεμοῦν καὶ μετέχουσιν αὐτῆς οἱ κεκτημένοι τὰ ὄπλα. Spengel² first called attention to the difficulty of συμβαίνει δ' εὐλόγως, when as Aristotle goes on to explain (ἤδη χαλεπὸν) it is hard for a large number of citizens to attain a high standard of excellence. Thurot³ supposed a lacuna to precede συμβαίνει, containing a reason for the name Πολιτεία, something like this: <διὰ τὸ τοὺς πολιτικούς ἄρχειν, ἀλλὰ μὴ τοὺς ἀπλῶς ἀρίστους>. The parallel passage in III. 17. 4 πολιτικὸν πλῆθος ἐν ᾧ πέφυκεν ἐγγίνεσθαι πλῆθος πολεμικόν may have suggested to Zeller the insertion of πολεμικόν before πλῆθος in § 3. In any case he is right so far as this, that the remark to which συμβαίνει εὐλόγως refers must emphasize the warlike character of Πολιτεία⁴. Schmidt lastly found such a remark, and the lost subject of the verb συμβαίνει, in the last clause of § 4, καὶ μετέχουσιν αὐτῆς οἱ κεκτημένοι τὰ ὄπλα, which he would transpose to come after πολιτεία.

(9) III. 11 § 20 ἀλλὰ γὰρ...§ 21 κείσθαι τοὺς νόμους. Schneider bracketed the clause ἀλλὰ γὰρ...ἀδίκους as superfluous and disturbing to the context. If retained in the present order there appears to be a double recension ἀλλὰ γὰρ...ἀδίκους = πλὴν τούτου...νόμους⁵. But it seems better, with Congreve, to reverse the order of the two sentences.

(10) III. 13 § 6 εἰ δὲ τὸν ἀριθμὸν...ἐξ αὐτῶν. Thurot⁶ sums up his elaborate examination of the context as follows. Aristotle has proposed, § 5, to investigate who ought to have power in a state where all kinds of superiority are represented—wealth, nobility, virtue, numbers. The discussion continues as follows: (i) If the virtuous are few in number we must enquire whether there are enough of them to govern the state or to constitute a state by themselves, § 6. (ii) No superiority gives exclusive right to power, §§ 7—10. (iii) The best laws are adapted to the interest of the whole state and the body of citizens, §§ 11, 12. (iv) Individuals, one or more, of pre-eminent virtue cannot be reduced to a level of equality, §§ 13, 14 (then follows a digression on ostracism). Now (i) has no direct bearing on the question proposed: the right of virtuous men to command must be proved before any enquiry as to what ought to be done when the virtuous are few in number: (ii) is the negative solution and (iii) has the germs of a positive solution, which we may suppose more fully developed in a part now lost. A discussion of a particular case, analogous to that in (i), is presented in (iv). The conclusion is that the proper place for (i) will be after (iii), i.e. somewhere between ἀρετήν (§ 12, end) and εἰ δέ τις ἐστίν, the beginning of § 13. For §§ 7—12 are certainly just as much in place immediately after the question proposed in § 5, which they answer from the negative side. And although in itself § 6 might very well follow § 5, it must excite considerable suspicion to find that the important question started in § 6 is never fully answered at all and not even noticed until § 13¹.

(11) III. 13. 22. The sentence ὥστε διὰ τοῦτο...τοῦτο δρῶσιν, if genuine, interrupts the thread of the remarks begun in § 20 and continued to διορθοῦν in § 23, to the effect that the problem, what to do with unduly eminent citizens, is one which is equally urgent in all constitutions. The words cited ὥστε διὰ τοῦτο...τοῦτο δρῶσιν, however, do not bear upon the general problem, but on the particular case of monarchs. Hence, as Thurot² saw, they would be more in place in § 23 after διορθοῦν, at the end of the general reflexions. Bernays³ however found them a place at the end of § 20 above, after ἔχει τρόπον.

(12) III. cc. 15, 16. On the question of absolute sovereignty, πότερόν ποτε ἓνα συμφέρει κύριον εἶναι πάντων ἢ οὐ συμφέρει, a succession of ἀπορίαι and a general investigation are promised in 15 § 3. What follows in the order of the manuscripts may be briefly summarized as follows⁴: (α) Is the rule of the best man more advantageous than the rule of the best laws? §§ 3—6. (β) Assuming that in certain directions the laws are insufficient, should the decision rest with the one best man or with a number of the more competent citizens, in the extreme case the whole body of a qualified community? §§ 7—10. Then comes a historical or antiquarian appendix to this ἀπορία, contained in §§ 11, 12. (γ) How are the standing difficulties of hereditary succession, §§ 13, 14, and (δ) a body-guard, §§ 14, 15, to be dealt with? Aristotle appends to this last enquiry a sort of digression, § 16, showing what would be the decision in the case of the constitutional monarch. But, as he explains, resuming his argument with c. 16, it is not the constitutional monarch, but the absolute sovereign about whom the question is now being raised (§§ 1, 2, down to the words κατὰ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ βούλησιν ὁ βασιλεύς). Here it seems absolutely necessary to assume a lacuna. For what immediately follows, § 2 δοκεῖ δὲ τισιν... § 4 πάντων, relates to a different ἀπορία altogether: (ε) Is not the rule of one an unnatural anomaly where the citizens are all on the same footing (ἐξ ὁμοίων ἢ πόλις)? Should not power rather pass from hand to hand (ἀνὰ μέρος)?

Here the limit of ἀπορίαι distinctly discernible is reached: in the remainder of c. 16, §§ 4—13, ἀλλὰ μὴν...ὁμοίως, no new question is started, but remarks are jotted down which bear more or less directly on those formulated in the preceding chapter. Thus all from § 4 ἀλλὰ μὴν as far as κατὰ τὸ ἔθος in § 9 must belong to the first ἀπορία (α): Is the rule of the best man to be preferred to that of the laws? Not that it could anywhere find a place as a whole in 15 §§ 3—6; but the earlier part (α) ἀλλὰ μὴν... § 5 τῶν κειμένων could suitably be transferred to the end of 15 § 5 to follow κάλλιον and precede ὅτι μὲν τοῖνυν; the remainder (β) 16 § 5 ὁ μὲν οὖν τὸν νόμον... § 9 κατὰ τὸ ἔθος might be inserted a little higher up in 15 § 5 between πᾶσαν and ἀλλ' ἴσως. Again, the next piece of c. 16, (γ) §§ 9, 10 from ἀλλὰ μὴν οὐδὲ ῥάδιον as far as συμφράδμονες, clearly has for its subject that comparison of the one best man with a number of qualified citizens which is introduced in (β): and this might go in 15 § 10 after ὁ εἰς and before εἰ δὴ. To this same ἀπορία further belongs the remainder of c. 16, from § 10 εἰς δὲ καὶ νῦν to the end δεῖν ὁμοίως; when placed side by side with c. 15 §§ 7—10 καὶ γὰρ...ὁ εἰς, it is seen to be another recension of that passage.

Such would be the best restoration of the primitive order of these two chapters, if the order of thought and the connexion were solely to be followed. Yet undoubtedly the less complicated and artificial assumption is that of two independent versions combined by an over-careful or unintelligent compiler. Such a view has been acutely advocated by Mr J. Cook Wilson¹. "It may be that the two chapters belong "almost wholly to two parallel versions and that instead of being "combined they should be still further resolved." Thus

- (i) 15 §§ 2, 3 τὸ μὲν οὖν...ἐνούσας = 16 § 1 περὶ δὲ τοῦ...ἔλαττον.

- (iii) 15 §§ 7—10 καὶ γὰρ...ὁ εἰς corresponds in subject to 16 §§ 11—13 ἀλλ' ὅτι...δεῖν ὁμοίως and to §§ 9, 10 ἀλλὰ μὴν

To this arrangement of the contents of the two chapters it may be objected¹ (1) that the second version is so fragmentary as to present no statement of the problems under discussion and no intimation when we pass from one of them to the other. (2) The arrangement destroys what appears to be one connected sentence beginning 15 § 16 τάχα μὲν οὖν and continued in 16 § 1 περὶ δὲ τοῦ βασιλέως. The sense runs on without a break from 15 § 14 ἔχει δ' ἀπορίαν to 16 § 2 ὁ βασιλεύς. (3) The resolution into parallel versions is not complete; it must be supplemented by transposition: for it has to be admitted that 16 §§ 4, 5 ἀλλὰ μὲν ὅσα...τῶν κειμένων "interrupts the argument of the context: "it belongs to the same part of the subject as [§§ 10, 11] 1287 b 16—23 "and may be read after τῶν ἀδυνάτων ἐστὶν 1287 b 23" (in § 11).

Spengel² proposed a simpler remedy for the confusion of cc. 15, 16: viz. to transpose 16 §§ 4—9 ἀλλὰ μὲν ὅσα γε...κατὰ τὸ ἔθος to follow κάλλιον, at the end of 15 § 5. The passage following κατὰ τὸ ἔθος in 16 § 9 also begins with ἀλλὰ μὲν, and there is an actual case, viz. the MS. A^c, where the recurrence of a word (συλλογισμός in Rhet. 1. 2 1357 a 17 and b 6) led to the omission of the intervening passage and its insertion in the margin. The inadequateness of this solution of the difficulty need hardly be demonstrated. For not only (1) does Spengel propose to insert οὐ after ζητεῖν in 16 § 11, but (2) when he has transposed 16 §§ 4—9 to follow 15 § 5, he is obliged to explain that what we then get is a sort of dialogue between the supporters of personal rule and of the laws³.

οὔτε πόλεως χωρὶς ἀρετῆς καὶ φρονήσεως· ἀνδρία δὲ πόλεως καὶ δικαιοσύνη καὶ φρόνησις τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχει δύναμιν καὶ μορφήν, ὧν μετασχὼν ἕκαστος τῶν ἀνθρώπων λέγεται δίκαιος καὶ φρόνιμος καὶ σώφρων. C. I §§ 11, 12.

Here the language is by no means similar and the thought that virtue in the state is the same as virtue in the individual seems introduced in different connexion in the two passages. Nevertheless they cannot both stand. The latter opens the discussion afresh without any allusion to the previous chapter, as Spengel observed¹. If it is to be fitted into this part of the work, it must be intended to supersede some part of C. I. Susemihl is probably right in holding this part to be §§ 11, 12².

(14) IV (VII). 4 §§ 8, 9. Giphanius (Van Giffen)³ calls attention to the difficulty of connecting the last words of § 8, ἐπεὶ τό γε καλὸν ἐν πλήθει καὶ μεγέθει ἔωθε γίνεσθαι, with those immediately preceding. Schneider proposed to transpose the whole period to the end of the chapter to follow εὐσύνοπτος: in this way § 9 ὁ λεχθεὶς ὄρος would refer to the number of the citizens. If the words ἐπεὶ...γίνεσθαι are in their right place and are to be taken with § 8, the preceding sentence θείας γὰρ...τὸ πᾶν must be parenthetical. They cannot go with § 9 as the passage stands. Koraes omitted διό: it is a smaller change, with Böcker⁴, to transpose ἐπεὶ...γίνεσθαι to follow ἀναγκαῖον in § 9.

(15) IV (VII). 8. 2 οἷον εἴτε τροφή τοῦτό ἐστιν εἴτε χώρας πλήθος εἴτ' ἄλλο τι τῶν τοιούτων ἐστίν. Bojesen⁵ saw that these words should follow directly upon § 1 ὅσα ταῖς πόλεσιν ἀναγκαῖον ὑπάρχειν which they illustrate. They are not suitable to be instances of ἐν τι κοινὸν καὶ ταῦτο τοῖς κοινωνοῖς ἄλλης κοινωνίας, as on the ordinary arrangement they might be taken to be.

(16) IV (VII). 8 §§ 3, 4 ὅταν δ' ᾗ...κτῆσεώς ἐστιν. The proposal to make this passage follow πολιτείας at the end of § 5 serves to bring the mention of κοινωνία in § 4 nearer to the κοινωνοῖς of § 2⁶.

(17) IV (VII) cc. 13—15. Wilson¹ regards c. 13 as a shorter duplicate of cc. 14, 15. "In each the same question is proposed, what is "happiness or the chief good? (compare 1332 a 7 and 1333 a 15, 16); "and the discussion of it is followed in each by a transition, in almost "the same terms, to the subject of education (cp. 13 §§ 10—13, with "15 §§ 6, 7 ὅτι μὲν οὖν...ἡχθαι)." These transitional passages stand as follows:

ἀλλὰ μὴν ἀγαθοί γε καὶ σπονδαῖοι γίνονται διὰ τριῶν. (§ 11) τὰ τρία δὲ ταῦτ' ἐστὶ φύσις ἔθος λόγος. καὶ γὰρ φῦναι δεῖ πρῶτον οἶον ἀνθρώπον ἀλλὰ μὴ τῶν ἄλλων τι ζῶων, εἴτα καὶ ποίον τινα τὸ σῶμα καὶ τὴν ψυχὴν. ἔνια δὲ οὐδὲν ὄφελος φῦναι· τὰ γὰρ ἔθῃ μεταβάλλειν ποιεῖ· ἔνια γάρ ἐστι διὰ τῆς φύσεως ἐπαμφοτερίζοντα διὰ τῶν ἐθῶν ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον καὶ τὸ βέλτιον. (§ 12) τὰ μὲν οὖν ἄλλα τῶν ζῶων μάλιστα μὲν τῇ φύσει ζῆ, μικρὰ δ' ἔνια καὶ τοῖς ἔθεσιν, ἀνθρώπος δὲ καὶ λόγῳ· μόνον γὰρ ἔχει λόγον.

(§ 13) τὴν μὲν τοίνυν φύσιν οἷους εἶναι δεῖ τοὺς μέλλοντας εὐχειρώτους ἔσεσθαι τῷ νομοθέτῃ, διωρίσμεθα πρότερον· τὸ δὲ λοιπὸν ἔργον ἤδη παιδείας. τὰ μὲν γὰρ ἐθιζόμενοι μαθάνουσι, τὰ δ' ἀκούοντες. 13 §§ 10—13.

... <τὴν ἀρετὴν,> καὶ ὅτι δι' αὐτήν, φανερόν ἐκ τούτων· πῶς δὲ καὶ διὰ τίνων ἔσται, τοῦτο δὲ θεωρητέον, τυγχάνομεν δὲ διηρημένοι πρότερον ὅτι φύσεως καὶ ἔθους καὶ λόγου δεῖ. τούτων δὲ ποίους μὲν τινὰς εἶναι χρὴ τὴν φύσιν, διωρίσται πρότερον, λοιπὸν δὲ θεωρῆσαι πρότερον παιδευτέοι τῷ λόγῳ πρότερον ἢ τοῖς ἔθεσιν.

ταῦτα γὰρ δεῖ πρὸς ἀλλήλα συμφωνεῖν συμφωνίαν τὴν ἀρίστην· ἐνδέχεται γὰρ διημαρτηκέναι καὶ τὸν λόγον τῆς βελτίστης ὑποθέσεως καὶ διὰ τῶν ἐθῶν ὁμοίως ἡχθαι. 15 §§ 6, 7.

There is certainly a striking parallelism here: compare especially 13 § 13 with τούτων δὲ ποίους...ἔθεσιν in the right hand column; but it is partly covered by the reference back τυγχάνομεν δὲ διηρημένοι πρότερον, which Wilson is obliged to suppose inserted or to be, possibly, a reference to the Ethics. That there is an advance in the treatment of cc. 14, 15 will become apparent on a close comparison with c. 13: see the Analysis (p. 116). Similarly in III. c. 9 there is an elaboration of the earlier sketch in III. c. 6; in I. cc. 5—7 the conclusions anticipated in I. c. 4 are but amplified and supported¹.

In 13 § 12 the fact that man often obeys reason in opposition to his habits and nature is a strange reason why habits and nature should be in harmony with reason². Hence Böcker³ proposed to transpose ὥστε...ἀλλήλοις to follow βέλτιον at the end of § 11. In this place it emphasizes the agreement necessary between the habits and the natural capacity of our citizens. But Wilson points out that the parallel clause in c. 15 refers to λόγος and ἔθῃ; hence he defends the order of the manuscripts. The meaning then would be: "reason ought to work for "the end which the legislator has in view in harmony with nature and "habit; for men may be induced by reason to do what they would "never do by nature or by habit."

(18) IV (VII). 16 §§ 4, 5 σχέδον δὲ πάντα...τούτους. This solution of the whole question discussed in this chapter should surely follow the difficulties enumerated, and not interrupt the enumeration, as it does at present. It is proposed to remove it to follow § 8 πληθύνον ἔτι <ἢ μικρόν>. If this be done, (1) § 6 ἔστι δ' ὁ τῶν νέων κτλ will directly explain § 4 ἔτι δ' ὅθεν ἀρχόμενοι...βούλησιν; (2) the transposed passage will have an excellent continuation in § 9, which fixes the ages for marriage at 18 and 37(?) respectively⁴.

(19) IV (VII). 17 § 6 τὰς δὲ διατάσεις...διατεινομένους. These remarks must apply to the very earliest infancy. If so they ought to come after § 3 ἀσκησιν; for in § 4 Aristotle goes on to discuss τὴν ἐχομένην ἡλικίαν. The transposition suggested is supported by the fact that then ἐπισκεπτέον δὴ will follow directly upon § 5, to which in any case it must be referred⁵.

(20) IV (VII). 17 § 12 νῦν μὲν οὖν ἐν παραδρομῇ...ἀναγκαῖον. These remarks are clearly intended to put a close to the whole discussion of §§ 8—14. If so, they should come at the end, i.e. after δυσμένειαν (? δυσγένειαν) in § 14⁶.

(21) V (VIII). 4 § 7. The clause δεῖ δὲ οὐκ ἐκ τῶν προτέρων ἔργων κρίνειν, ἀλλ' ἐκ τῶν νῦν ἀνταγωνιστὰς γὰρ τῆς παιδείας νῦν ἔχουσι, πρότερον δ' οὐκ εἶχον must refer to the Lacedaemonians and their recent rivals the Thebans. They would stand better directly after the criticism on the Lacedaemonians in § 4; the intermediate remarks, §§ 5, 6, being of a general character and a deduction from this particular case¹. Moreover δὲ should then be changed to δῆ.

(22) V (VIII). V § 17 ἔτι δὲ ἀκροώμενοι τῶν μιμήσεων γίνονται πάντες συμπαθεῖς καὶ χωρὶς τῶν ῥυθμῶν καὶ τῶν μελῶν αὐτῶν. As they stand, these words, introduced by ἔτι, should give a second reason ὅτι γινόμεθα ποιοί τινες τὰ ἡθῆ δια τῆς μουσικῆς, the first being the 'enthusiasm' inspired by the melodies of Olympus. But the reason alleged is surely only a generalization of the first: 'enthusiastic' strains inspire 'enthusiasm': and, further, all men become attuned to the mood of musical imitations by listening to them. Now a little further down, § 18, we are told that "rhythms and melodies afford the best imitations, "short of the reality, of emotions, virtues, and moral qualities generally: which is plain from their effects. For as we listen to music the "soul undergoes a change." But why should this change of mood in the soul prove music to be the best means of faithfully portraying morality and emotion? Transfer to this place the words from § 17, and the reason is plain: "because all men are attuned to the mood of the musical imitations to which they listen, even if there be no words, but mere rhythm and melody," i.e. a purely instrumental performance².

(23) V (VIII). V § 25 καὶ τις ἔοικε συγγένεια ταῖς ἀρμονίαις καὶ τοῖς ῥυθμοῖς * * εἶναι (διὸ πολλοὶ φασι τῶν σοφῶν οἱ μὲν ἀρμονίαν εἶναι τὴν ψυχὴν, οἱ δ' ἔχουσιν ἀρμονίαν). Böcker³ recommends that this, the only clause not at present included in the huge period stretching from § 17 to the end of c. 5, should be transposed to a place before the apodosis, i.e. after § 23 and before ἐκ μὲν οὖν τούτων § 24.

(24) VI (IV). cc. 3, 4 §§ 1—19. There are good grounds⁴ for believing that this portion of Bk. VI (IV) is not genuine. From the parallelism of 4 § 7, ὅτι μὲν οὖν πολιτεῖαι πλείους καὶ δι' ἣν αἰτίαν, εἴρηται· διότι δὲ πλείους τῶν εἰρημένων, καὶ τίνες καὶ διὰ τί, λέγωμεν ἀρχὴν λαβόντες τὴν εἰρημένην πρότερον, to 4 § 20 (the first words after the suspected section) ὅτι μὲν οὖν εἰς πολιτεῖαι πλείους, καὶ διὰ τίνος αἰτίας, εἴρηται πρότερον, the inference was drawn that there were two interpolations. That the second is not a continuation of the first, but rather a parallel version unskillfully added by the compiler⁵, seems probable from the fact that the promise made in 4 § 7 διότι δὲ πλείους κτλ, is never redeemed: instead of this the main subject of c. 3 is treated over again in 4 §§ 7—19. We will here cite only the more exact correspondences adduced by Wilson in support of this view.

Whereas in 3 § 4 the one version refers to Bk. IV (VII), ἐν τοῖς περὶ τὴν ἀριστοκρατίαν (whence it may be inferred that its author had the original order of the books before him), "the second version inserts, "instead of the reference, a long passage similar to that part of Bk. "IV (VII) which the first version refers to."

To sum up, there does appear to be sufficient evidence of a parallel version: it must be remarked, however, (1) that the second version, as it now stands, plainly refers to the former 4 § 7 ἀρχὴν λαβόντες τὴν εἰρημένην¹: therefore this at least must be due to an editor who wished to make the two continuous. (2) There seems to be nothing in c. 3 to correspond with the simile of an animal in 4 §§ 7, 8; for the sense and bearing of 3 §§ 5, 6, suggested by Wilson, appear very different.

(25) VI (IV). 6 §§ 2, 3. τοῖς δὲ ἄλλοις μετέχειν ἔξεστιν, ὅταν κτήσωνται τὸ τίμημα τὸ διωρισμένον ὑπὸ τῶν νόμων. διὸ πᾶσι τοῖς κτησαμένοις ἔξεστι μετέχειν. ὅλως μὲν γὰρ τὸ μὲν μὴ ἐξεῖναι πᾶσιν ὀλιγαρχικόν, τὸ δὲ δὴ ἐξεῖναι σχολάζειν ἀδύνατον μὴ προσόδων οὐσῶν.

The clause διὸ...μετέχειν is omitted by the manuscripts of the second recension. Either it is an interpolation or, if genuine, out of place; for there is nothing preceding διὸ of which it could be the effect. Thurot² would find a place for it after προσόδων οὐσῶν, but he has to admit that ἐξεῖναι σχολάζειν is forced and unusual; it is ἐξεῖναι μετέχειν wherever this subject comes up, and the second claim forms no real antithesis to the first. Rassow³ gives a more satisfactory contrast by inserting δημοκρατικὸν after ἐξεῖναι: "on general grounds to exclude from citizenship "those who have the requisite amount of property would be an "oligarchical measure, to admit them democratical." After this rule has been laid down the clause διὸ...μετέχειν comes in with excellent sense as stating the practical result. It will be necessary to insert δ' after σχολάζειν.

³ Bemerkungen pp. 13, 14.

(26) VI (IV). c. 12¹. The subject of this chapter is the third of the investigations enumerated in c. 2 §§ 4—6, ἔπειτα καὶ τῶν ἄλλων τίς τίσιν αἰρετή: what form of government is most adapted to a state under given circumstances. After the general conditions, that it must be that supported by τὸ κρείττον whether their preponderance comes from τὸ ποιοῦν or τὸ ποσόν, Aristotle points out (1) when a democracy is desirable in the words of § 3, ὅπου μὲν οὖν ὑπερέχει...τούτων; (2) when an oligarchy would suit better in the remainder of § 3, ὅπου δὲ τὸ τῶν εὐπόρων...πλήθους; while (3) the circumstances favourable to a Polity (in the technical sense) are pointed out in §§ 4, 5, ὅπου δὲ τὸ τῶν μέσων...ὁ μέσος. The similarity of their form proves that these three sentences ought to be taken closely together: (2) and (3) are however separated by the words δεῖ δ' αὖ τὸν νομοθέτην...τοῖς νόμοις τοῖτοις, the former part of § 4. Not only so, but this sentence has nothing to do with the special conditions of an oligarchy: ἐν τῇ πολιτείᾳ must refer to Polity in the technical sense; accordingly the sentence belongs to the second investigation of c. 2, τίς κοινοτάτη κτλ. Moreover from 12 § 6, ὅσῳ δ' ἂν ἄμεινον right on to the end of c. 13, τὸ ἄρχεσθαι, Aristotle never recurs to the enquiry τίς τίσιν αἰρετή. He appears to go off on the subject of the stability of Polities (in the technical sense), ending with a brief historical digression, 13 §§ 6—12².

The conclusion to which these facts point is as follows: The enquiry τίς τίσιν αἰρετή is broken off abruptly at ὁ μέσος in 12 § 5; if it was ever complete—cp. VII (VI). I. 5, καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν πολιτειῶν τίς συμφέρει τίσιν, εἴρηται πρότερον—the rest of it has been lost. The beginning of 12 § 4, δεῖ δ' αὖ...τούτους, together with 12 § 6 and the whole of c. 13, belong to the previous enquiry. Bücheler with great probability would insert 12 § 4, δεῖ...τούτους + 12 § 6, c. 13 §§ 1—6, ὅσῳ δ' ἂν ἄμεινον...ἐτέρων μόνον in the account of the constitution of Polity given in c. 9 § 6, between ὁ μὲν οὖν τρόπος τῆς μίξεως οὗτος and τοῦ δ' εὖ μεμῖχθαι, where certainly the subject-matter is strikingly similar. For the remainder of c. 13, §§ 7—12, δεῖ δὲ τὴν πολιτείαν...ἄρχεσθαι, he finds a fitting place at the end of c. 9 after ὅλως.

(27) VIII (V). I § 8. There are two ways in which revolutions arise, διὸ καὶ αἱ μεταβολαὶ γίνονται διχῶς· ὅτε μὲν γὰρ...ἐκείνων, ὅτε δὲ...

μοναρχίαν. But in § 9 another way is seemingly brought in ἔτι περὶ τοῦ μᾶλλον καὶ ἥττον κτλ, and in § 10 another ἔτι πρὸς τὸ μέρος τι κτλ. Further, these two latter cases properly belong to the first alternative, when the revolutionary party wish for a change in the government; they are both equally opposed to the other ὅτε δὲ κτλ, where the object is not to overthrow the form of government, but to crush the present holders of power. If then Aristotle wrote in the proper logical order, the place for the second leading alternative ὅτε δὲ οὐδὲ...ἢ τὴν μοναρχίαν is in § 11 between πολιτεία and *πανταχοῦ*¹.

Wilson² discovers a parallel version of 1 §§ 2—7, δεῖ δὲ πρῶτον...στάσεών εἰσιν, in 1 §§ 11—16 πανταχοῦ γὰρ...τῶν τοιούτων πολιτειῶν. The most striking correspondences which he adduces are:

δεῖ δὲ πρῶτον ὑπολαβεῖν τὴν ἀρχήν, ὅτι πολλαὶ γεγένηνται πολιτεῖαι πάντων μὲν ὁμολογούντων τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὸ κατ' ἀναλογίαν ἴσον, τούτου δ' ἁμαρτανόντων, ὥσπερ εἴρηται καὶ πρότερον. δῆμος μὲν γὰρ ἐγένετο ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου ὅτι οὖν ὄντας οἷεσθαι ἀπλῶς ἴσους εἶναι (ὅτι γὰρ ἐλεύθεροι πάντες ὁμοίως, ἀπλῶς ἴσοι εἶναι νομίζουσιν), ὀλιγαρχία δ' ἐκ τοῦ ἀνίσους ἐν τι ὄντας ὅλως εἶναι ἀνίσους ὑπολαμβάνειν (κατ' οὐσίαν γὰρ ἄνισοι ὄντες ἀπλῶς ἄνισοι ὑπολαμβάνουσιν εἶναι). §§ 2, 3.

ὁμολογούντες δὲ τὸ ἀπλῶς εἶναι δίκαιον τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν, διαφέρονται, καθάπερ ἐλέχθη πρότερον, οἱ μὲν ὅτι, ἐὰν κατὰ τὴν ἴσιν ὥσιν, ἴσοι ὅλως εἶναι νομίζουσιν,

Further "the main thought of these two parallel passages is repeated "in a shorter form" in 2 §§ 2, 3: "there is here then perhaps another "re-writing, seemingly by a later hand, of the introduction to the book "and with this third beginning seems to cohere the rest of cc. 2, 3." Wilson sees in each of these a probable reference to Bk. III; at 1 § 2, § 13, 2 § 2. It must be observed however (1) that the main difficulty of c. 1 lies in §§ 8—11, and is not removed by these suggestions: (2) there is a real advance in c. 2 as compared, for instance, with 1 §§ 11—16: and yet (as Wilson sees) if 1 §§ 11—16 is another recension of 1 §§ 2—7, 2 §§ 2, 3 has quite as much right to be so considered. (3) It is possible that 3 § 14, στασιάζουσι δ' ἐν μὲν ταῖς ὀλιγαρχίαις...ἴσοι ὄντες, should precede 1 § 11, πανταχοῦ γὰρ κτλ. At all events that passage is out of place where it stands in c. 3¹.

(28) VIII (v). c. 4. In this chapter §§ 1—7, γίνονται μὲν...ἐπηρεασθεῖς, have for their subject the cases where στάσις has arisen from dissensions amongst the leading men. The subject of §§ 8—12, μεταβάλλουσι δὲ καὶ...πρὸς πολλούς, is wholly different. Aristotle returns to the case which he calls in c. 3 § 6 δι' αὔξησιν τὴν παρὰ τὸ ἀνάλογον, when any party in the state has become over-powerful. This αὔξησις may be κατὰ τὸ ποσόν or κατὰ τὸ ποιόν; but all the examples in 3 §§ 7, 8 illustrate the former kind. It seems best then to transpose 4 §§ 8—12, μεταβάλλουσι δὲ καὶ...πρὸς πολλούς (which contain examples of the latter kind) to follow δυναστείας at the end of 3 § 8².

(29) VIII (v). 6 §§ 10—13, ὁμονοοῦσα δὲ ὀλιγαρχία...ἡ Ἰφιάδων. In its present place this passage interrupts the orderly enumeration of the causes which tend to overthrow oligarchy owing to internal dissensions: (1) 6 §§ 2—5 continual decrease of the privileged body, (2) §§ 5—7 rise of demagogues amongst them, (3) §§ 8, 9 extravagance and reckless living, (4) §§ 14, 15 insults offered κατὰ γάμους ἢ δίκας, (5) § 16 refusal on the part of some oligarchs to go the full length in oppression of the Demos. In §§ 10, 11, coming between (3) and (4), the conditions of permanence in an oligarchy are touched upon; a better place for them is after § 16; while §§ 12, 13 are probably interpolated³.

A few remarks may be useful on the suggestions here passed under review. Though necessarily an unsatisfactory remedy⁴, transposition has been used with great effect in some authors (e.g. Lucretius) and has always been a recognised expedient. But it has been most successful when applied to verse and to dislocations arising mechanically through the displacement of leaves or by carelessness of transcribers. Now only a small part (if any) of those here assumed can have had such an origin. The most reasonable account of the majority presupposes an editor dealing unskilfully with Aristotle's materials⁵. In proportion as this is tionis ordini inserere sibi proposuerit, in margine hic illic adnotasse; posteros autem, qui ediderunt libros, cum nescirent, quid notis illis uoluisset scriptor, ineptissime confusas in hunc, quem hodie tenent, locum contulisse, quem fortasse reuera mutilatum lacunosumque deprehenderant." Böcker op. cit. 32, 33. There was no place for footnotes in an ancient book: but some instances in the above list—e.g. (3) (11) (15) (21) (23) (27) (29)—have quite the look of marginal notes. Compare the remark of Welldon Translation p. 100 n. 2.

admitted the certainty that a given transposition restores the original form, due to its being logically required, diminishes: and room must always be allowed for the misgiving “ne hoc modo ipsum potius Aristotelem corrigamus quam editores eius antiquos: certe cur ab eo ipso in libris celerrime scriptis, nequaquam diligenter ubique elaboratis, incohatis potius quam perfectis optimam semper disponendi rationem esse inuentam non sane scio cur credam¹.”

These observations are all the more necessary as the most recent edition of any part of the *Politics*² carries still further the disintegration of the text, transposing and rejecting supposed interpolations in a part of the treatise hitherto believed not to need these remedies³. The most important change introduced is to make Bk. I. cc. 8—11, περὶ χρηματιστικῆς, precede the discussion περὶ δεσπότου καὶ δούλου, thus inserting them in I. c. 3 § 3 between χρηματιστικῆς and πρώτον δέ. That the topics of Bk. I. would be thus better arranged may be admitted: but the probability (not to say the certainty) that Aristotle even intended ultimately so to arrange them will require cogent proof, especially if it can be shown that with the present order the transition from topic to topic is natural, the development logical, the indications of a disposition of the subject-matter borne out in the sequel. Briefly to sum up, Schmidt presents Bk. I. in the following order: c. 1, c. 2 §§ 1—6 παίδας; then comes § 8 presented as two parallel versions:

ἡ δ' ἐκ πλείονων κωμῶν κοινωνία τέλειος πόλις ἦδη. γινομένη μὲν οὖν τοῦ ζῆν ἔνεκεν, οὐσα δὲ τοῦ εὖ ζῆν <ἔσχε τὴν αὐτῆς φύσιν>. [ἡ δὲ φύσις τέλος ἐστί.] οἶον γὰρ ἕκαστόν ἐστι τῆς γενέσεως τελεσθείσης, ταύτην φαρὲν τὴν φύσιν εἶναι ἑκάστου, ὥσπερ ἀνθρώπου ἵππου οἰκίας. διὸ πᾶσα πόλις φύσει ἐστίν, εἴπερ καὶ αἱ πρώται κοινωναίαι. τέλος γὰρ αὕτη ἐκείνων. 2 § 8, 1252 b 28—34.

<μεγίστου ἀγαθοῦ> αἰτία⁴. τὸ <γὰρ> οὐ ἔνεκα καὶ τὸ τέλος βέλτιστον. ἡ δ' αὐταρκεία [καὶ] τέλος, <ὥστε> καὶ βέλτιστον. 2 § 8, 1252 b 34 1253 a 1.

Then follows 2 § 7 διὸ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον...τῶν θεῶν. Then another double recension consisting mainly of 2 §§ 13, 14:

it occurs are judged by him to be additions to the original Aristotle (op. c. 804) because, if the end of the state is εὖ ζῆν, it cannot be αὐτάρκεια. This then, he argues, is an instance of two independent definitions which have been blended into one. Similarly with other cases where, according to his view, the present text, or, as Krohn calls it, 'our old recension', has been formed by the comprehension of heterogeneous materials.]

ANALYSIS OF THE POLITICS.

INTRODUCTION. B. I. cc. 1, 2.

I. As the end and aim of every society is a good, the end and aim of the state, the highest society under which all the rest are included, is the highest good: 1 § 1.

II. The assertion (in the Politicus of Plato) that the difference between the family and the state is merely quantitative, not qualitative, and hence that there is no essential difference between a father, a master, a king, and a republican statesman, 1 § 2, disproved by an analytical enquiry into the origin of the family, the village-community, and the state: 1 § 3, 2 § 1.

(a) The family is formed by nature out of the two smallest natural unions, of husband and wife, and of master and slave, solely for the support and propagation of life: 2 §§ 2—5.

(b) In the same natural manner out of the household or family grows the village-community, the first in the ascending scale of societies formed for purposes wider than the satisfaction of mere every-day wants. Out of the village arises the state, in which the primitive form of government was accordingly monarchy: 2 §§ 5—7.

(c) The state itself then, the most complete society, springing up, like the rest, to provide the bare means of living, continues to exist for the full development and perfecting and independence of life. It is, in a higher sense of the term, most truly a natural growth; and man is a being by nature ordained for civil society, 2 §§ 8, 9, far beyond all other animals, because he alone possesses speech and the perception of good and evil, of right and wrong: 2 §§ 10—12.

(d) Moreover the state is in the order of nature prior to the family and to the individual: 2 §§ 13, 14.

(e) Only the actual establishment of the state raises man to what he really is and endows him with those higher gifts of virtue, in the absence of which he is no better—far worse indeed—than any of the brutes: 2 §§ 15, 16.

PART I: OF THE FAMILY: B. I. cc. 3—13.

A. Of the Family in general. There being three fundamental constituents of the family, the subject is divided into a consideration of the several relations (1) of master and slave, (2) of husband and wife (the conjugal relation), (3) of father and child (the parental relation). To which must be added a consideration of wealth and its acquisition (χρηματιστική); the relation of this subject to that of the family (οικονομική)¹ is a disputed point needing investigation: 3 §§ 1—3.

B. Special Exposition: c. 3 § 3—c. 13 § 6.I. Of the relation of master and slave, or of Slavery: 3 § 3—7 § 5.

(a) Transition to this subject, 3 § 3. Statement of the two main points in the inquiry, 3 § 4.

(b) These two points discussed at length: cc. 4—6, c. 7 §§ 1—3.

(a) The nature and justification of Slavery: cc. 4—6.

(i) The nature and character of the slave: he is an animate chattel, c. 4.

(ii) How far Slavery is in accord with the law of nature: cc. 5, 6.

(a) There are as a fact men whom nature intended to be the slaves of the rest, c. 5.

(b) But for that very reason slavery imposed simply by the laws of war upon men who are not of this sort is contrary to nature, c. 6.

(β) The view quoted in the Introduction from Plato's Politicus that rule over freemen and over slaves, whether in the family or in the state, is not essentially different and that it rests upon a science, is now more completely stated and disproved on the ground of the results just obtained, 7 §§ 1, 2.

There are however sciences treating of the functions of master and slave. Wherein such science consists: 7 §§ 3, 4.

II. Of Property and its acquisition: cc. 8—11.

(περὶ πάσης κτήσεως καὶ χρηματιστικῆς: of the acquisition or management of property, the art of wealth.)

¹ [No uniform rendering of these two words has been attempted, and the term 'economic science', used a little lower down as a virtual reproduction of one of them, is without authority in this sense.

The more common equivalents are, for χρηματιστική 'finance', 'money-making art'; for οικονομική 'household management', 'domestic economy'. TR.]

(a) Theoretical discussion. The relation of the art of wealth (χρηματιστική) to a theory of the family or economic science (οικονομική): cc. 8—10.

(a) The different cases possible: 8 §§ 1, 2.

(β) Proof that the first is inadmissible: acquisition of property does not coincide with the whole field of economic science: 8 § 2 (ὅτι μὲν οὖν...).

(γ) To decide whether the former is at any rate a branch of the latter (or even an auxiliary science), it is necessary, 8 § 3, to distinguish

(i) direct acquisition through production by means of cattle-breeding, hunting, plundering, fishing, agriculture, and fruit-growing: a species of acquisition belonging as such to economic science and forming a part of it, or an auxiliary science: 8 §§ 3—15, and (ii) indirect acquisition by exchange, c. 9:

either (a) simple barter, not in itself unnatural provided it does not go beyond actual needs, 9 §§ 1—6, or (b) exchange through the medium of money, an artificial, though necessary, development of barter to facilitate intercourse. So long as it remains true to this object and no more than a means to the easier satisfaction of actual needs it does not become unnatural or foreign to economic science, as it does when trade is carried on as a distinct profession, money is made an independent end, and exchange simply a means to unlimited accumulation of money and capital: 9 §§ 7—18.

(δ) It is now possible to decide finally between the various alternatives remaining, so far as the natural species of acquisition is concerned. This is in one respect an actual branch of Economic, in another respect, and more truly, only an auxiliary to it: 10 §§ 1—3.

(ε) The most unnatural species of exchange is trading with money in the strict sense, the lending out of money on interest, which directly makes money out of money: 10 §§ 4, 5.

(b) The art of acquiring wealth in its practical application: c. 11.

(a) Classification of the different branches of this art: 11 §§ 1—4.

(i) Production proper: cattle-rearing, agriculture, fruit-growing; culture of bees, fish, birds: 11 §§ 1, 2.

(ii) Acquisition by means of exchange: 11 § 3.

(a) trade: whether (1) maritime, (2) inland, or (3) retail trade;

(b) the lending of money on interest;

(c) hired labour (1) of artizans, (2) of day labourers.

(iii) Branches of a mixed nature: forestry, mining, 11 § 4.

(β) General remark on the different character of these various branches as judged by an ideal standard, 11 § 6.

(γ) For particular information as to the practical exercise of these various branches of acquisition reference is made to special works upon these subjects and to the stories current in various quarters of the means by which individuals have been enriched : 11 §§ 7—13.

III. The management of the household, as it affects the members, especially in the marital and parental relations ; also in the relation of master and slave : cc. 12, 13.

(a) Different nature of the rule exercised over the wife and over the children : c. 12.

(b) The management of a household extends to inanimate property but especially and primarily aims at promoting virtue and excellence in the members of the family, preeminently in those who are free : 13 § 1.

(c) Proof that even a slave is capable of a certain mental and moral excellence and that he requires it : that the virtue of man, woman, child, slave, is different in kind and degree, 13 §§ 2—12, since

(α) although the parts of the soul are the same, they exist differently in man, woman, child, and slave, 13 §§ 5—9 :

(β) a more detailed investigation shows that by common consent certain qualities would not be virtues in a man which are so in a woman, a child, or a slave : 13 §§ 10, 11.

(γ) The virtue and excellence of a boy and a slave belong to them not in themselves, but in relation to another : 13 § 11 (ἐπεί δὲ...).

(d) A more precise statement wherein the excellence of a slave consists. It is the master's business to train him to it. The right mode of treating slaves : 13 §§ 12—14.

(e) The right course of training for women and boys is a subject that goes beyond the limits of the family and more properly belongs to the theory of the best polity : 13 §§ 15, 16.

PART II: OF THE POLITY OR CONSTITUTION: B. II.—VIII.

A. CRITICAL PART.

Examination of the schemes of an ideal best polity put forward in the theories of preceding philosophers, together with those most commendable amongst the constitutions actually established. It is shown that none of them really answers to the best polity: B. II.

I. The object and principles of this review: c. I §§ 1, 2.

II. CRITICISM OF THE IDEAL POLITIES: I § 3—8 § 25.

a. PLATO'S IDEAL STATE IN THE Republic: I § 3—5 § 28.

(a) The end which Plato assumes for the state, its utmost possible unity, really involves, in the form in which he assumes it, the abrogation of the state, and is thus incapable of realization: c. 2.

(β) But even granting that this is the true end and practicable it would not be secured by the means which Plato proposes; viz. the enforcement, upon the two upper classes, of community of wives and children and community of property: 3 § 1—5 § 13.

(i) Arguments against community of wives and children: cc. 3, 4.

(1) Plato thinks it a proof of perfect unity that all should apply to the same objects the terms 'mine', 'another's'. But there is an ambiguity in the word "all". Plato's view would not be correct if "all" meant "all collectively", but only if "all" meant "each individual":—a meaning here impossible: 3 §§ 1—3. This argument applies also to community of property.

(2) Men care far less about the things which they share in common than about what is their own. Hence the community of children will result in the total neglect of them by all alike: their real or nominal parents will, one and all, feel but slight interest in what becomes of them. So that a specific real relationship, however distant, would be of far more service to them than this general indeterminate paterternity: 3 §§ 4—7.

(3) Many parents however would inevitably recognise their own children: 3 §§ 8, 9.

(4) As a rule violence and outrage are avoided with especial care in the case of near relations, but when it is not known who these are this heedfulness disappears: 4 § 1.

(5) It is strange that in spite of the community of children Plato does not altogether prohibit unnatural love but only its worst excesses; nor even that because he is scandalized at its impropriety between the nearest blood-relations: 4 §§ 2—6.

(6) The end Plato has in view is the greatest possible unity and harmony amongst the ruling class of citizens: all are to feel themselves members of a single family. But the result would be just the opposite, since when thus generalized all specific affection for kinsfolk would be abrogated and replaced by a feeble attachment in the last degree 'watery' and attenuated: 4 §§ 5—9. < For Plato's purpose, then, these institutions would have been better adapted for the third class of the population, than for the first two as he proposes, in order to make its members disunited and more obedient: 4 § 4. >

(7) Plato's regulation for removing children, under certain circumstances, from the two upper classes into the third, and conversely, would be attended by great difficulties: and as such children are not to be informed that they were born in a different class, the mischiefs pointed out under (4) and (5) would be more likely to occur in their case: 4 § 9 (ἀλλὰ μὴν...), § 10.

(ii) Arguments against community of property: 5 §§ 1—13.

(1) The different forms of communism possible, 5 §§ 1, 2.

(2) Community of property is no doubt more conceivable where, as in the Platonic state, the cultivators are not the owners of the soil: 5 § 3. But still in all that relates to social intercourse, to meum and tuum, communism is shown by experience to produce much dissension, 5 § 4. Far preferable therefore would be that state of things where property in general remains in private ownership, but the laws have inspired the citizens with so much public spirit, that they are willing to give up to their fellow-citizens much of their private possessions for common use: 5 §§ 5—8.

(3) Communism destroys the high enjoyment afforded by private property, which is in itself fully justified and in many respects morally noble: 5 §§ 8, 9.

(4) With community of wives, children, and property there could be no such virtues as chastity (σωφροσύνη), in respect of one's neighbour's wife, or liberality: 5 § 10.

(5) Lawsuits about disputed property, cases arising from perjury, &c. are not due, as Plato maintains, to the absence of communism, but to the prevalence of moral corruption: 5 §§ 11, 12.

(6) In general Plato's procedure is unfair; he has before him only the evils of which we should be rid by communism: the advantages we should lose he overlooks: 5 § 13.

(γ) Further objections to the Platonic institutions generally: 5 §§ 14—28.

(i) Their defects are ultimately due to the defectiveness of the end which they subserve, as pointed out above under (α). But so far as political unity within due limits must be the object of political institutions it is surprising that, considering the great importance which Plato attaches to the right education, he should not seek to attain this unity amongst his citizens by education, the introduction of common messes, &c. instead of the means which he employs: 5 §§ 14, 15.

(ii) If the Platonic institutions were really serviceable, they would have been carried into effect before now: 5 § 16.

(iii) But the experiment would prove beyond all doubt that the practical application of them could not be carried further than is at present actually the case in some states : 5 § 17.

(iv) Besides, the regulations laid down by Plato are extremely imperfect. They only apply to the two upper classes of citizens, and equal difficulties present themselves whether they are extended to the third class or not. In the former case the true foundation of the Platonic state would be annulled ; in the latter the state would be divided into two hostile camps in direct contradiction of the unity intended, as the advantages which Plato claimed for his state (see 5 § 11 above) would for the most part be rendered illusory : 5 §§ 18—24.

(v) The analogy of animals, who have no domestic life, does not prove that women can share the occupations of men : 5 § 24 (ἄσπορον δὲ καὶ...).

(vi) To keep the same rulers always in office is a dangerous measure, but consistency on Plato's part requires it : 5 §§ 25, 26.

(vii) Plato himself admits that his regulations do not secure the complete happiness of the upper classes. If so, then further this is true of the whole state : 5 §§ 27, 28.

b. The ideal polity of Plato's Laws : c. 6.

(a) Comparison of the Republic with the Laws; the relation between the schemes of polity laid down in these two works : 6 §§ 1—5.

(β) Criticism of the state in the Laws : 6 §§ 6—22.

(i) It would require far too large a territory : 6 §§ 6, 7.

(ii) It is not enough that a code of laws should take account of the land and the people ; the neighbouring people have also to be regarded : 6 §§ 7, 8.

(iii) Again, the principles regulating the limit to be set on possession need to be expressed more clearly and fully : 6 §§ 8, 9.

(iv) There is an inconsistency in demanding equality of landed estate without at the same time fixing a definite unalterable number of citizens : 6 §§ 10—13.

(v) We are not told how the ruling citizens are to receive an education distinguishing them from the rest, nor in what this education should consist : 6 § 14.

(vi) It is inconsistent to make landed estate inalienable and at the same time allow moveable property within certain limits to change hands : 6 § 15.

(vii) The division of each citizen's real estate into two separate establishments is awkward : 6 § 15 (καὶ τῇν τῶν οἰκοπέδων...).

(viii) The constitution proposed in the Laws is a combination of Oligarchy and Democracy, i. e. a Polity (πολιτεία) technically so called. But

(1) this sort of mixed constitution, though perhaps the best on the average, is by no means the next best after the absolutely perfect scheme : 6 §§ 16, 17.

(2) Plato himself calls it a blending of Democracy and Tyranny, which is self-contradictory and, as a matter of fact, incorrect : 6 § 18.

(3) The oligarchical element is far too preponderant in this constitution of Plato's : 6 §§ 19—21.

(ix) The mode in which the magistrates are elected is politically unsafe : 6 § 22.

c. Phaleas' scheme of polity : c. 7.

(a) Brief account of this scheme : 7 §§ 1—4.

(β) Criticism : 7 §§ 5—23.

(i) The objection brought against Plato, 6 § 10, holds also against Phaleas : if there is to be a maximum fixed for property, then the number of children must also be limited : 7 § 5.

(ii) Although a certain equality of possessions is no doubt of importance for the state, it is much more important that the estates should on the average be neither too large nor too small : 7 §§ 6, 7.

(iii) Far more important, again, is equality in respect of a good education, which trains the intellect properly and duly moderates the desires : 7 §§ 8, 9, §§ 10—13 = 7 §§ 18—20.

(iv) Moreover Phaleas has never sufficiently defined equality of possessions, as he makes no allusion to moveable property : 7 § 21.

(v) In his regulation of property he ought to have taken some account of the external concerns and relations of the state, but he has left them altogether unnoticed : 7 §§ 14—17.

(vi) Phaleas prohibits all handicrafts to his citizens ; but the measures adopted by him to render this possible are not suited to his object : 7 §§ 22, 23.

d. Hippodamos' scheme of polity : c. 8.

[(a) Introductory remarks on Hippodamos himself : 8 § 1.]

(β) Account of his model constitution : 8 §§ 2—7.

(i) Number of the citizens, 8 § 2.

(ii) Division into artizans, farmers, soldiers, 8 § 2.

(iii) Division of the land ; a part to belong to the temples, a part to the state, a part to private individuals, 8 § 3.

(iv) Legal regulations : 8 §§ 4, 5.

(1) The administration of justice to be confined to three objects, § 4.

(2) Right of appeal, § 4.

(3) Alterations in the mode in which jurymen record their verdicts, § 5.

(v) Honorary distinctions for those who are the authors of useful reforms in the existing laws and institutions : 8 § 6.

(vi) Maintenance, at the cost of the state, of the orphans whose fathers have fallen in war : 8 § 6.

(vii) Election of magistrates : 8 § 7.

(γ) Criticism : 8 §§ 7—25.

(i) That all three classes should have an equal share in all the privileges of citizenship is impossible : 8 § 7 (ἀπορήσκει δ' αὖν...)—§ 10.

(ii) It does not appear what is the end to be answered by such a farmer class owning the private lands: if it is also to cultivate the state lands its very existence is contrary to the object in view: yet one is at a loss to know who else could do this: 8 § 10 (ἐτι οὐ γεωργοί...).

(iii) Nor is the proposal as to the mode in which the jury men should vote, § 5, any better: 8 §§ 13—15.

(iv) The proposal to reward reforms in legislation, § 6, is open to the objection that while on the one hand the unchangeableness of the existing laws is dangerous, 8 §§ 16—22, on the other there is pressing need that any change in them should be attended by conditions every whit as stringent: 8 §§ 23—25.

III. CRITICISM OF THE BEST AMONGST ACTUALLY EXISTING POLITIES: CC. 9—12.

(α) The Spartan polity: c. 9.

(α) General prefatory remark upon the twofold standard to be set up in criticising a polity: 9 § 1.

(β) The defects of the Spartan polity: 9 §§ 2—36.

(i) Social defects: 9 §§ 2—19.

(1) Under a good constitution judged by the first standard there will be provision that the citizens are released from all manual labour, and hence that the soil is cultivated by others than the citizens. But the position of the Spartan peasantry, the Helots, is radically wrong: 9 §§ 2—4.

(2) The license of the women, and their virtual supremacy at Sparta, are mistakes judged by either standard: 9 §§ 5—13.

(3) The permission to give away or bequeath land at pleasure, the absence of any limit to the amount of dower, the unrestricted right of the father (or of the successor to his rights) to bestow an heiress upon any one he likes;—all this combined has brought two-fifths of the Spartan land into female hands and occasioned moreover terrible inequality of possessions with a frightful diminution in the number of men capable of bearing arms. In these circumstances the very law which was designed to increase as much as possible the body of Spartan citizens serves only to swell the ranks of paupers: 9 §§ 14—19.

(ii) Political defects: 9 §§ 19—36.

(1) In the Ephoralty, 9 §§ 19—24:

(2) in the Council of Elders, 9 §§ 25—28:

(3) in the Kingly office, 9 §§ 29, 30.

(4) Bad management of the public messes at Sparta: 9 §§ 31, 32.

(5) The Admirals (ναύαρχοι), 9 § 33.

(6) All the institutions tend solely to military excellence, 9 § 34, which is, after all, but a means to an end and not an end in itself, 9 § 35.

(7) Defects in the financial administration, 9 § 36.

(b) Criticism of the Cretan polity: c. 10.

(a) How the resemblance between the Cretan and Spartan polities may be historically explained: 10 §§ 1, 2. [Digression on the geographical position of Crete and its political relations under Minos: 10 §§ 3, 4.]

(β) Comparison of the Cretan and Spartan polities: 10 §§ 5—16.

(i) The resemblances, 10 §§ 5—7.

(ii) The differences between the two: 10 §§ 7—14.

(1) How far the public messes are better regulated in Crete than at Sparta. Some other social rules peculiar to the Cretans: 10 §§ 7—9.

(2) How far again the magistracy of the κόσμοι is worse managed even than the ephoralty: 10 §§ 9—14.

(iii) Nothing but its favourable geographical position has saved Crete more than once from the outbreak of mischiefs similar to those at Sparta: 10 §§ 15, 16.

(c) Criticism of the Carthaginian polity: c. 11.

(a) General introductory remarks on the excellence of this polity, its resemblance to the Cretan, and more especially to the Spartan polity: 11 §§ 1, 2.

(β) Comparison of Carthage and Sparta in respect of the institutions at Carthage which correspond to the public mess, the ephoralty, the kingship, and the senate: 11 §§ 3, 4.

(γ) To what extent

(i) the democratical element: §§ 5, 6,

(ii) the oligarchical element, is more strongly represented at Carthage than in Crete or at Sparta

(1) in the Boards of Five, 11 § 7,

(2) in the exaggerated respect paid to wealth in the appointment to the highest offices, and in the fact that they can be bought—a practice mischievous to a true aristocracy: 11 §§ 8—10, § 12, §§ 10—12.

(δ) One defect very usual at Carthage is that the same individual simultaneously fills a number of offices: 11 §§ 13, 14.

(ε) From many of the evils resulting from the defects of their polity the Carthaginians are preserved solely by external means, placed at their disposal by the insecure favour of fortune: 11 §§ 15, 16.

(d) Criticism of the Solonian constitution: 12 §§ 2—6.

(a) Transition to this criticism, 12 § 1.

(β) There are no good grounds

(i) either for the praise bestowed by its friends: 12 §§ 2, 3,

(ii) or for the censure bestowed by its opponents: 12 §§ 3—6, upon Solon's constitution, [IV. APPENDIX.

On the most prominent legislators, whether they aimed at founding new polities or not: 12 §§ 6—14.

(a) Zaleukos, with remarks upon a supposed school of legislators, Onomakritos, Thales, Lycurgus, Zaleukos, Charondas: 12 §§ 6, 7.

(b) Philolaos, 12 § 8,

(c) Charondas, 12 §§ 8—10,

(d) Phaleas, 12 § 11,

(e) Plato, 12 § 12,

(f) Draco, 12 § 13,

(g) Pittacus, 12 § 13,

(h) Andromadas, 12 § 14.]

B. POSITIVE CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY: B. III.—VIII.

I. FUNDAMENTAL GENERAL PRINCIPLES:

B. III. cc. 1—13.

First group: the most general conceptions: III. 1 § 1—6 § 2.

a. The essential nature of a polity or constitution, of a state, of a citizen: cc. 1, 2.

(a) The enquiry into the nature of a constitution raises the question 'What is a state?' and this introduces the further question 'What is a citizen?': 1 §§ 1, 2.

(b) Citizenship is defined by participation in the government of the state, there being two forms of this government, the one exercised by the general deliberative and judicial bodies, that is, the popular assembly and the jurymen (δικασται), the other by the particular magistrates. Different polities have different regulations as to the government, and so too as to the right of participation in it. Citizenship not necessarily dependent on descent from citizens: 1 § 2—2 § 5.

β. The true nature of the state is so largely bound up with its constitution that a change in the latter is sufficient to destroy the identity of the state, c. 3.

γ. Is the excellence (ἀρετή) of the citizen the same as the excellence of the man? 4 § 1—6 § 2.

(a) Not unconditionally the same, since

(i) the former varies with the particular polity, while the latter is always one and the same: 4 §§ 1—3.

(ii) It is true that in the highest sense the excellence of the citizen means the excellence of a citizen of the best polity. Yet even in the best polity the citizens are not all equally good men, although they may be equally excellent in their several functions: 4 §§ 4, 5.

[(iii) The state consists of very dissimilar elements, which differ in their degrees of excellence: 4 § 6.]

(b) Government in the state must fall to the men who are intellectually and morally the most capable. Hence the excellence of the citizen who rules, i.e. his excellence as a ruler, must coincide with his excellence as a man: 4 §§ 7—9.

(d) In agreement with these results the best polity refuses to allow its citizens to engage in agriculture or trade, to be artisans or labourers. Men who are thus occupied must have a status assigned them distinct from that of the citizens. In all the other polities, true civic excellence, identical with the excellence of the good man, can neither wholly nor approximately be attributed to any of the citizens except those who are in a position to abstain from such occupations: 5 § 1—6 § 2.

Second group of principles. Development of the chief species of particular constitutions, with their order of merit: 6 § 2—13 § 25.

a. Determination of all the possible leading types of polities: 6 § 2—7 § 5.

(a) A polity or constitution is nothing but a form of government, and the separate polities are especially distinguished by the different supreme authorities in whose name government is administered. This being so, the difference in polities is mainly based upon the observance of the end of the state, and upon the different possible modes of ruling men, whether in the interest of the governed, or in the selfish interest of the governors. Thus the important distinction is that between normal polities—in which the government is for the good of the governed and so for the true end of the state, the common weal; that is, the general happiness and the perfecting of life—and perverted forms : 6 §§ 2—11.

(b) The next subdivision is into three normal constitutions—Monarchy, Aristocracy, Polity—and three corresponding perversions—Tyranny, Oligarchy, Democracy, according as the supreme power is vested in one man, in several, or a large number : c. 7.

β. Closer investigation into the nature of these constitutions and their relative values : cc. 8—13.

(a) Democracy more precisely defined as selfish government by the poor, Oligarchy as selfish government by the rich; the rule of the majority or the minority being but a subordinate characteristic, the absence of which, even when amounting to a reversal of the numerical proportions, would not affect the essential nature of the case : c. 8.

(b) Which of the normal constitutions is the most normal and the best, and what is their order of merit : cc. 9—13.

(a) The right (δίκαιον) recognised by the principles of Democracy and of Oligarchy respectively, and its divergence in each case from the absolute right which is based on excellence (τὸ κυρίως δίκαιον, τὸ κατ' ἀρετήν) : c. 9.

(β) Who ought to be sovereign, judged by the standard of this absolute right, and how far his powers should extend : cc. 10, 11.

(i) Objections to the exclusive sovereignty of every class or person : c. 10.

Not simply of (1) a tyrant, § 1 or (2) the great masses of the poor, §§ 1, 2 or (3) the rich, § 3; but also (4) the respectable classes (οἱ ἐπιεικεῖς), § 4, or (5) the one best citizen (εἷς ὁ σπουδαιότατος), § 5.

If however (6) the law is held to be the true sovereign, precisely the same questions recur in another form, § 5.

(ii) The true normal state of things : the whole body of citizens relatively so virtuous that the merit of the great majority of them taken collectively will exceed that of the specially gifted minority. In that case

(1) sovereignty should be vested in this whole body of citizens, 11 §§ 1—5; but

(2) its exercise restricted to legislative and judicial powers, more particularly the election and control of the responsible magistrates, to whom the citizens should entrust the details of state business : 11 §§ 6—9.

(iii) First objection to this arrangement, 11 §§ 10—12, and reply to the objection, 11 §§ 13, 14.

(iv) Second objection, 11 §§ 15, 16: how disposed of, §§ 16, 17.

(v) Under this arrangement the law must undoubtedly be the truly supreme sovereign: the unrestricted plenary powers of the human sovereign being exercised only in the province of the particular and individual which law by its very nature cannot define. The more precise character of the laws must in each case be determined by the constitution : 11 §§ 19—21.

(γ) True constitutional principles more precisely elaborated : cc. 12, 13¹.

(i) A claim to political privilege not conferred by all personal advantages, but only by those which are necessarily connected with the essential nature of a state, viz. free birth, wealth, and more especially merit (ἀρετή=capacity and virtue): to which may be added nobility, as being a higher degree of free birth and a combination of excellence with affluence: c. 12. Politics where the case is otherwise, are no normal forms but mere perversions, 13 § 1.

Fuller statement of the claims justified, 13 §§ 2—5.

(ii) None of the advantages mentioned can lay exclusive claim to justification even from the one-sided oligarchical or democratical point of view, much less from that of the true aristocracy, as even in respect of merit it is always a question whether the excellence of the pre-eminently good men is or is not outweighed by the aggregate endowments of the great majority : 13 §§ 7—10.

(iii) If it be so outweighed there is a solution of the difficult question, whether the laws should be made for the advantage of the majority or of the better men: 13 §§ 11, 12.

(iv) This case also provides for

(1) the normal and best polity proper, True Aristocracy:

(2) a Polity, where distinctions of property are also regarded, will be the utmost attainable in other cases.—This whole discussion, (1) and (2), or something similar, is lost.

(3) In general, the superior merit of a body of men within the state can only establish its right when this body is large enough numerically to form a state of itself, or at all events to appoint the magistrates, 13 § 6. When it is a single citizen, or a few, whose preeminent endowments outweigh those of all the rest collectively, perverted forms of government resort to ostracism and other violent measures to remove such men and get rid of them, but in the best constitution nothing remains except to give them unlimited authority unfettered even by law. In such a case the best constitution would take the form of Absolute Monarchy: 13 §§ 13—25.

¹ [Bernays supposed cc. 12, 13 to be another version of cc. 9—11: see Introd. p. 42.]

II. THE SEPARATE POLITIES OR CONSTITUTIONS:

B. III. c. 14—VIII (V).

A. Monarchy and the best constitution in the strict sense, Pure Aristocracy: III. c. 14—V (VIII).

MONARCHY: III. cc. 14—18.

(a) The questions which come under consideration in the examination of Monarchy: 14 §§ 1, 2 (διαφοράς).

(b) The different varieties of monarchy or kingship: 14 § 2 (ῥάδιον)—§ 15.

(a) The office of the Spartan kings; §§ 2—5.

(β) Despotism amongst non-Hellenic races; §§ 6, 7.

(γ) Αἰσυμνητεία or elective tyranny; §§ 8—10.

(δ) The Hellenic kingship of the heroic age; §§ 11—13.
Recapitulation of these four varieties, § 14.

(e) True absolute monarchy, with full powers, § 15.

(c) Why it is only absolute monarchy that requires fuller consideration in this place: 15 §§ 1—3.

(d) Objections to its utility: 15 §§ 3—16.

(a) In general it is better to be governed by the best laws than by the best man: 15 § 3—§ 5 (πᾶσαν): 16 § 5 (ὁ μὲν οὖν)—§ 9.

(β) It may be granted that there certainly is one province, that of particular fact, for which the decision of the laws is insufficient; yet it is always a question whether it is better that in this province the one best man or the whole body of capable citizens should have the decision in its own hands:

15 § 5 (ἀλλ' ἴσως...κάλλιον): 16 § 4 (ἀλλὰ μὴν ὅσα...)—§ 5: 15 § 6:

15 §§ 7—10, 16 § 9 (ἀλλὰ μὴν οὐδὲ...)—§ 10=16 § 10 (εἰσὶ δὲ)—§ 13:

15 § 10 (εἰ δὲ)—§ 13 (δημοκρατίαν).

(i) Many questions are more correctly decided by the great majority than by an individual: 15 § 5 (ἀλλ' ἴσως...)—§ 7, and many eyes see more than two: 16 § 10 (εἰσὶ δὲ)—§ 12.

(ii) A large majority of men of comparative excellence cannot be so easily led astray by personal feelings; 15 §§ 8—10.

(iii) As it is the custom for monarchs to associate their friends with them in power, they themselves ipso facto allow the claim of those who are equal and alike to an equal share in the government; 16 §§ 12, 13.

(iv) Even a monarch cannot be sole ruler; a number of officials is always required. If so, it is better from the first not to have a monarchy but to appoint this number of ruling officials by the constitution: 16 § 10.

(v) If the absolute rule of a single ruler can only be justified on the ground of merit, several capable men have in general more capacity than one: 16 § 11.

(vi) Historical appendix on the development of the remaining constitutions out of monarchy: 15 §§ 11—13 (δημοκρατῶν).

(γ) What opinion should be held of hereditary succession to the throne? 15 §§ 13, 14.

(δ) And of the armed force or body-guard to be assigned to a king? 15 § 14 (ἐχει δ' ἀποπλᾶν)—16 § 2 (βασιλεύς).

(i) This question can easily be settled in a monarchy limited by law: 15 §§ 14—16.

(ii) Here, however, we are discussing absolute, not limited, monarchy: 16 §§ 1, 2.

(ε) The unrestrained rule of one man over all the rest for his whole lifetime appears unnatural when these others are more or less his equals: whereas the only normal course appears to be to divide the government amongst several men under the restrictions imposed by the laws: 16 § 2 (δοκεῖ δέ τισιν)—§ 4.

(e) How far these doubts and objections are well grounded: c. 17.

(α) Monarchy not in itself unnatural any more than the rule of a master over slaves (δεσποτεία) or a normal republican government (πολιτεία); under changed conditions each of them becomes appropriate: 17 § 1.

(β) In fact, however, as an actual form of government in the developed state, kingly rule is only conceivable as an absolute monarchy under the most capable citizen; yet not actually suitable and natural save in a single exceptional case, namely, in the state of things explained above (c. 13 §§ 13—25): 17 § 2.

(γ) [Monarchy, Aristocracy, Polity severally adapted to citizens of different kinds: 17 §§ 3, 4.] It is only in the single case above-mentioned that Absolute Monarchy should supersede Aristocracy: 17 §§ 5—8.

(f) Transition from Monarchy to the best constitution in the stricter sense: c. 18.

PURE ARISTOCRACY: THE TRUE NORMAL FORM OF THE ABSOLUTELY BEST CONSTITUTION: B. IV (VII), V (VIII).

Preliminary Questions: IV (VII) cc. 1—3.

(α) The best form of polity is that which is auxiliary to the best and most desirable life. A definition of the latter is thus required and first obtained: 1 §§ 1—10. This best life or happiness is shown to be the same for the individual and for the state: 1 §§ 11, 12=2 §§ 1, 2.

Summary of the results of this investigation: 1 §§ 13, 14.

[(β) A second preliminary question. Even if happiness is made to depend pre-eminently upon virtue and excellence, we may yet be in doubt whether excellence in peace or in war is the main thing for the state, whether the active life of the practical statesman or the contemplative life of the scientific enquirer is the happier for the individual: 2 § 3—3 § 10.

(i) Excellence of the internal administration is the main thing for the state: military excellence is only needed for self-defence and for acquiring as slaves those for whom nature intended this lot. The state should not make conquest and subjugation its aim and end: 2 §§ 8—18.

(ii) For the individual it is not the tyrant's life but active employment in the service of a free and capable state that is alone a great or noble thing. Yet the scientific life is no less an active life, and is besides an activity of a higher order than the other: c. 3.]

OUTLINE OF THE ABSOLUTELY BEST CONSTITUTION:

B. IV (VII) c. 4—V (VIII) c. 7.

(a) The External Conditions: IV (VII) cc. 4—12.

(i) The natural conditions; the land and the people: cc. 4—7.

(A) Prefatory remarks: 4 §§ 1—3.

(B) Of the proper number of citizens and inhabitants: 4 §§ 4—14.

(c) Of the character and extent of the territory and of its geographical form: 5 §§ 1—3.

(D) The position of the city, 5 § 3 (τῆς δὲ πόλεως...)—6 § 8,

(a) on the land side: 5 §§ 3, 4,

(b) towards the sea; 6 §§ 1—5.

Of the regulation of the naval force: 6 §§ 6—8.

(E) The best natural endowment and disposition for the citizens: c. 7.

(ii) The social or socio-political conditions: cc. 8—12.

(A) Exclusion of the citizens from work for a livelihood, and of all who work for a livelihood from citizenship: c. 8—10 § 8.

(a) Distinction between the classes which are actual organic members of the state, and such as are merely indispensable conditions for the existence of the former: 8 §§ 1, 2; §§ 4, 5; §§ 3, 4.

(b) Enumeration of the classes indispensable to the state, 8 §§ 6—9.

(c) It is a feature of the best polity that only the classes which are from the nature of the case members of the state, viz. fighting men and administrators (including those who administer justice), with the addition of the priests, who form a third, peculiar element, are in fact recognised as its members, or have the citizenship. These functions are exercised by them alone, the first in their youth, the second in their mature age, and the third when they are old men. All other classes—farmers, artisans, tradesmen, etc.—are excluded from citizenship. Hence every such employment, even agriculture, is prohibited to the citizens, yet so that the soil belongs to them, although it is cultivated by serfs or dependents (δοῦλοι ἢ περλόικοι) of non-Hellenic descent: c. 9.

[(d) Such regulations are no mere innovation; they are of old standing in Egypt and Crete, as also are public messes in Italy and Crete: 10 §§ 1—9.]

(B) The proper scheme for dividing the land: the right qualifications and position of those who cultivate it: 10 § 9 (περὶ δέ...)—§ 14.

(a) General leading principles: 10 §§ 9, 10.

(1) No community of property, only a certain common use granted out of friendship, § 9;

(2) No citizen to be in want, § 9:

(3) The common messes to be provided at the public expense, § 10.

(4) So also the worship of the gods, § 10.

(b) The territory is accordingly divided into public land and private land, and each of these again into two parts: 10 §§ 11, 12.

(c) The cultivators of the soil should be either (1) serfs of different races and of docile temper (μὴ θυμοειδεῖς), those on the state domain to belong to the state, those on private estates to the private owners: or failing this, (2) dependent subjects (περλόικοι) of similar temper and of non-Hellenic descent: 10 §§ 13, 14.

(c) Regulations for the building of the city and the hamlets and villages: cc. 11, 12.

(a) The city: 11 § 1—12 § 7.

(1) Its site, on the slope of a hill, if possible, facing the east or else the south: 11 §§ 1, 2.

(2) Provision for a perennial supply of sufficient wholesome water, 11 §§ 3—5.

(3) Of fortified positions inside the city: 11 § 5.

(4) Plan for laying out the streets: 11 §§ 6, 7.

(5) The walls, 11 §§ 8—12. Plan of sites in the walls where the guards may hold their mess, 12 § 1.

(6) The Upper Market-place, a public square for freemen (ἀγορὰ ἐλευθέρα) with the principal temples and the gymnasia for the older men, 12 §§ 2—5. The Market-place for trade and in it the law courts and official buildings: 12 §§ 6, 7.

(b) Public buildings in the country: 12 § 8.

(β) A detailed sketch of the internal working of the Best Polity:
IV (VII) c. 13—V (VIII) c. 7 (incomplete).

(i) General introductory remarks: IV (VII) c. 13.

(A) A right knowledge of the end of the best polity is as necessary as of the means which actually conduce to it: 13 §§ 1, 2.

(B) Its end is the happiness or well-being of all the citizens, which mainly consists in their highest excellence, though this is impossible apart from favourable external conditions, under which alone such excellence can be fully realized: 13 §§ 3, 4. These favourable conditions assumed to be at the legislator's disposal include, besides those already discussed, a happy natural capacity on the part of the citizens (φύσις), whilst the concern and principal task of the legislator is to see how this capacity can be improved into actual excellence by habituation and instruction: 13 §§ 5—13.

(ii) The Education of the citizens: IV (VII) c. 14—V (VIII) c. 7 (left incomplete).

Its unity: IV (VII): 14 §§ 1—8.

Its aim and end: 14 § 9—15 § 6.

The means to be employed: IV (VII) § 6—end of v (VIII).

(A) Should the education of the rulers and of the ruled be different or the same, on the principles of the best constitution?

Different, in so far as the two are here different persons: the same, in so far again as they are the same persons but at different ages, and as in a government exercised for the common good of the ruled it is not possible to govern well unless one has learnt to obey well: 14 §§ 1—8.

(B) At what should the education of the citizens aim? What is the distinctive end and object of a virtuous life? 14 § 9—15 § 6.

(1) The virtues of the non-rational part of the soul (the moral virtues) are inferior to those of the rational part (the mental excellences or intellectual virtues) and have their end in the latter just as work has its end in leisure, war in peace: 14 §§ 9—14.

(2) Hence appears the defectiveness of constitutions like the Spartan, which, conversely, make war and conquest the object of the state, and strive solely to educate the citizens to be good soldiers, and nothing more, instead of treating military excellence as only a means to an end: 14 §§ 15, 16. Besides

(i) such principles have already been refuted by experience, namely by the sudden and lamentable collapse of the Spartan state and its power: 14 § 17.

(ii) Such principles aiming at the subjugation of other states imply the perverse opinion that it is nobler to rule over slaves than over freemen: 14 §§ 18, 19.

(iii) They are also dangerous in their influence on the behaviour of the citizens towards their own state: 14 § 19 (ἔτι)—§ 21 (ἀνθρώπων).

(iv) What are the ends for which alone war must be waged and citizens become good soldiers: 14 § 21 (τῇν τε...δουλεύειν).

(v) Another appeal to experience; states which have not learned to excel in the arts of peace must necessarily fall as soon as they have acquired their empire: 14 § 22.

(3) The virtues of peace and of leisure must rather have the preëminence; all the others ought however to be practised, since without the means the end cannot be attained and many indispensable virtues are easier to practise in war than in peace. For undisturbed peace easily leads us to rank external goods above virtue. But on the other hand this same mistake is the foundation for a onesided military tendency as, for instance, amongst the Spartans: even capacity in war, which is all they strive to attain, is only a means to an end, to the complete acquisition of external goods: 15 §§ 1—6.

(c) The right educational means: 15 § 6 (<δτι>...)—end of B. v (VIII).

(a) Preliminary remarks on the right course of education in general and the order of succession of educational agencies. Bodily development must precede that of the mind; in the latter, again, the training of the irrational soul by habituation must precede that of the rational soul through instruction: yet in such a way that the former always regards the latter as its aim and end: 15 §§ 6—10.

(b) Means to be employed before birth; the care requisite for the procreation of children of mental and bodily vigour and of good capacity: c. 16.

(1) The proper age for marriage: 16 §§ 1—10.

(i) The leading principles which determine it: 16 §§ 2—4, §§ 6—8.

(a) The difference of age between the parents to be such that their powers of procreation do not cease disproportionately, § 2.

(β) The difference in age between parents and children not to be too great or too small, § 3.

(γ) The educational requirement above mentioned, that the children to be brought up must be physically strong, § 4 (...βούλησιν). Whereas the offspring of marriages between those who are too young is usually stunted, § 6.

(δ) Further, young mothers invariably suffer greatly in childbirth, § 7: and

(ε) cohabitation begun at too early an age is prejudicial to female morality: also

(ζ) it stunts the growth of the husbands, § 8.

(ii) All these considerations may be satisfied by observing the limits of age within which married people are capable of having children, 16 §§ 4, 5, and thus we arrive at the proper determination, viz. 37(?) for men and 18 for women: 16 §§ 9, 10.

(2) The season of the year and appropriate weather for entrance upon marriage and its duties: 16 §§ 10, 11.

(3) The right bodily condition for the parents: 16 §§ 12, 13.

(4) Provision for the proper treatment of women with child: 16 § 14.

(5) Exposure of deformed infants: procurement of abortion to be sanctioned, in order that the prescribed number of children may not be exceeded: 16 § 15.

(6) Further a limit of age should be set beyond which parents are not to have children: this limit prescribed. Procurement of abortion when conception takes place beyond this age: 16 §§ 16, 17.

(7) Penalty for adultery: 16 § 17 (ῥάστε...)—§ 18.

(c) Means to be employed directly after birth, 17 §§ 1—14.

(1) In infancy, §§ 1—3, § 6, § 4.

(2) In the subsequent period to the fifth year, § 4 (τὴν δ' ἐχομένην...)—§ 7. With a preliminary discussion of the question how far all coarseness and indecency is to be proscribed, and on the other hand how far male adults should be allowed to be spectators at comedies and the like: § 7—§ 14, § 13, § 14, § 12.

(3) Education from the fifth year on to the seventh: § 14 (διδεξιέθόντων...αὐτούς).

(d) The course of Public Education proper from the age of seven to that of twenty-one: IV (VII). 17 §§ 15, 16, V (VIII).

(1) General introductory remarks. Two grades of age distinguished. Statement of the three questions to be discussed in regard to this course of education proper: IV (VII). 17, §§ 15, 16.

(2) It is more than necessary, it is most essential for the best polity, that a definite regulation of this educational course should be prescribed by law: V (VIII). 1 §§ 1, 2.

(3) It is not to be a domestic private education: it must be a universal and public course: 1 §§ 3, 4.

(4) The right educational course: V (VIII). cc. 2—7.

(i) Fundamental considerations: 2 § 1—3 § 12.

(a) Difference of views both as to the subjects of instruction, and as to the end and aim of the training: where there is agreement as to the subjects there are divergent views as to their practical application and mode of treatment, due to the difference of opinion as to their end: 2 §§ 1, 2.

(β) The pupils must indeed be taught what is indispensable for external life, yet here the right limits should be observed. The educational means usually employed should not be used (as, music alone excepted, they all may) with the idea of their conferring a purely practical external utility. They ought rather to be regarded as simply the conditions to the attainment of a higher end: 2 §§ 3—6.

(γ) The list of these subjects of ordinary education: reading, writing and arithmetic, gymnastic exercises, drawing, music: 3 § 1.

(δ) The ultimate end of education is the right occupation of the highest and truest leisure, which is not merely an interlude to work, but in itself the highest goal of life. Amusement and pastime serve as recreation to fill the less exalted leisure: but for the higher leisure the mind requires a different kind of activity, bringing with it the enjoyment of the highest intellectual gratification. Preliminary proof that amongst the ordinary subjects taught, music even in the judgment of our ancestors tends to this end, 3 § 2—§ 11 (δῆλον); and that the other subjects should be so used as not to lead away from it, but, indirectly at least, to conduce to it: 3 § 11 (ἔτι δεῖ)—§ 12.

(ii) Athletic exercises (γυμναστική): cc. 3 § 13—4 § 9.

(α) As was stated above, IV (VII). 15 §§ 6—10, education must begin with bodily exercises: 3 § 13.

(β) But two errors should be avoided; the one, of training up the boys like athletes, as is commonly done; the other, the Spartan practice of brutalizing them by excessive exertions: 4 §§ 1—7.

(γ) We must therefore begin with easier exercises for the first period, and wait until they have attained puberty, and have been taught the other subjects of instruction for three years, before we commence the more exhausting gymnastic training: 4 § 7 (ὅτι μὲν οὖν)—§ 9.

(iii) Music: cc. 5—7.

(α) Statement of the question: Should music serve for pastime recreation and relaxation, or for moral training, or lastly as a purely æsthetic and theoretic enjoyment, thereby ministering to the highest intellectual gratification? 5 § 1—§ 4 (εἰρημύων).

(β) The first and third of these ends are to all appearance foreign to the education of youth, though something may be said in favour of taking notice of them too in connexion with it. But it is still a question whether for any of these three objects it is necessary to learn to be a practical musician oneself: 5 § 4 (ὅτι μὲν οὖν)—§ 8.

(γ) Answer to the first question: Music can and should subserve each of those three aims, not only the highest intellectual gratification, but also mere recreation, since it is a thoroughly innocent enjoyment; and considering the frequent need for recreation in life this alone would suffice to justify its admission to a place in the instruction of youth. This consideration is not then to be wholly disallowed, as we supposed above (§ 4): yet it is only subordinate, 5 §§ 9—15: and the main point is that music is, thirdly, an excellent means for the moral training of the young: 5 §§ 16—25.

(δ) From this follows the answer to the second question:

(i) that in general the young should in fact be taught to become practical musicians: 6 §§ 1, 2.

(ii) and yet the adult citizens of the best state have in general to refrain from practising music themselves: §§ 3, 4.

(iii) Further this musical instruction should be regulated, §§ 5, 6, as follows:

(a) With regard to the degree of proficiency to be attained, the pupils should not be trained up to be professional virtuosi, but only receive the needful training of their characters and their tastes: 6 § 6 (φανερόν...)—§ 8.

(b) For this reason all musical instruments, like the flute, which are only in use with professional performers, should be excluded from the instruction of the young: 6 §§ 9—16.

(c) Lastly, as to the various modes (ᾠμοὶ) and rhythms :

(1) for musical performances by professional musicians all modes are permissible, since all serve to promote the homœopathic purification of the emotions which procures the educated the highest intellectual gratification and the multitude recreation and amusement. Hence for the sake of the public at large who are not citizens—the farmers, artisans, labourers—at such performances even the modes and pieces which gratify their low taste must be admitted. But for the moral training of the young only those which best represent, and for that reason best train, character, the Dorian mode especially. The Phrygian mode should not be allowed : 7 §§ 3—12. [Perhaps however the Lydian mode may be tolerated, since we are not excluded from paying some regard to the amusement of a maturer age, and even adult citizens are on certain occasions allowed to sing : also the modes which are appropriate to the compass of the voice in mature life may be allowed as well as those specially adapted to the young : 7 §§ 13—15.]

(2) The elucidation of the further question stated in 7 § 2, whether the rhythm or the melody and tune is of chief importance for the instruction of the young, is altogether wanting.

B. THE REMAINING CONSTITUTIONS : B. VI (IV), VII (VI), VIII (V).

Introductory remarks : B. VI (IV) cc. 1, 2.

i. Why it belongs to political philosophy to consider not merely the absolutely best constitution, but also the best on the average, the best in any given case, and even the best possible organization of any actually existing polity : 1 §§ 1—7.

ii. This implies an exact acquaintance with all possible forms of government, and therefore with all the possible varieties of Democracy, Oligarchy, etc., which up till now have been left out of sight : 1 § 8.

iii. The theory of legislation moreover is based upon this exact acquaintance with constitutions : 1 §§ 9—11.

iv. The department of constitutional theory which remains for treatment defined : 2 § 1. Order of merit of the degenerate forms of government : 2 §§ 2, 3. The arrangement to be followed in the succeeding exposition : 2 §§ 4—6.

The actual details of the theory of the established constitutions : VI (IV). c. 3—VIII (V).

i Enumeration of all possible constitutions : VI (IV) cc. 3—10.

[(1) The difference between polities depends on the extent to which different classes take part in the government, c. 3.

(ii) How Democracy and Oligarchy ought rightly to be defined: 4 §§ 1—6.

(iii) The explanation of the fact that Oligarchy and Democracy come to be regarded as almost the only constitutions. Why there are more than these two and their sub-species. The classes of people necessary in the state: 4 §§ 7—19.]

(iv) The different species of Democracy and Oligarchy: 4 § 20—6 § 11.

(a) The basis of the general difference between them, 4 §§ 20, 21 (...διαφοράν).

(b) Enumeration of the four kinds of Democracy from the best, which resembles Polity, down to the worst or unrestrained Democracy, which resembles Tyranny: 4 § 22 (δημοκρατία)—§ 31.

(c) Enumeration of the four kinds of Oligarchy in corresponding manner, from the most moderate to that which resembles Tyranny, viz. arbitrary dynastic government (δυναστεία): 5 §§ 1, 2.

(d) In spite of a constitution externally oligarchical a state may nevertheless bear a democratic character, and conversely: 5 §§ 3, 4.

(e) Reasons assigned why there can only be these four species (α) of Democracy, 6 §§ 1—6, (β) of Oligarchy, 6 §§ 7—11.

(v) The different species of Mixed Aristocracy and the forms of Polity: c. 7—9 § 5, 12 § 4, 12 § 6—13 § 6, 9 §§ 6—10, 13 §§ 7—11.

(a) Of Aristocracy and Polity in general: 7 §§ 1—4.

(b) The species of Mixed Aristocracy: 7 §§ 4, 5.

(c) Of Polity: c. 8, 9 §§ 1—5, 12 § 4, 12 § 6—13 § 6, 9 §§ 6—10, 13 §§ 7—11.

(α) Justification of the arrangement by which Polity is reserved for treatment to this point and Tyranny comes last of all: 8 §§ 1, 2.

(β) A further and more exact distinction between Polity and the Mixed Aristocracies. Refutation of the view that those species and varieties of Polity which incline more to Oligarchy than to Democracy should be included under Mixed Aristocracies, 8 §§ 3—9.

(γ) Genesis and organization of Polity: 9 §§ 1—5, 12 § 4, 12 § 6—13 § 6, 9 §§ 6—10, 13 §§ 7—11.

(i) The three different ways of fusing Democracy and Oligarchy in Polity, 9 §§ 1—5. (ii) The middle class as the proper support of Polity, 12 § 4.

(iii) On the degree of success in the fusion depends the durability of the Polity. When therefore Polities or Mixed Aristocracies are established, it is a grave mistake if out of favour to the rich the claims of the poor are only satisfied in appearance, the concession made to them being in reality annulled and rendered void by all kinds of illusory devices. Enumeration of such illusory measures and of the similar counter-measures adopted in democracies with the opposite intent: 12 § 6—13 § 6.

(iv) The criterion of a successful fusion in Polity, also in Mixed Aristocracy, 9 §§ 6—10. (v) The amount at which the property qualification for the franchise should be fixed, 13 §§ 7—9 (πολεμειν). (vi) Peculiar constitution of certain individual Polities, 13 § 9. (vii) Historical remarks: 13 §§ 10, 11.

(vi) The different species of Tyranny, c. 10.

ii The best constitution on the average (ἀρίστη ταῖς πλείστασι πόλεσι): c. 11.

(1) This is, in the main, Polity, as the rule of the well-to-do middle class: 11 §§ 1, 2.

For (a) as in the life of the individual moral virtue and excellence consist in the right mean between two opposite extremes of error, so the life of the state prospers best when the well-to-do middle class has the preponderance, whereas the extremes of wealth and poverty are two main sources of the two opposite kinds of crime and wrong-doing: 11 §§ 3—5.

(b) Excessive wealth leads to despotic ambition, extreme poverty to servile submission: 11 §§ 6—8 (πόλεως).

(c) The middle class has the most assured existence; the more strongly it is represented in the state, the more the state is secured from insurrection and internal troubles and from the danger of degenerating into one of the three worst perversions or degenerate types of polity, extreme Democracy, extreme Oligarchy, or Tyranny: 11 § 8 (καὶ σφύρονται)—§ 13. This accounts for the fact that Democracies are ordinarily more stable than Oligarchies, because in the former the middle class is usually more numerous and influential than in the latter, 11 § 14.

(d) The best legislators have come from the middle class, 11 § 15.

(11) All this explains why Polity, although the constitution best adapted for most states, is yet of rare occurrence: 11 §§ 16—19.

(a) It frequently happens that the middle class in a state is not very numerous, 11 § 16.

(b) In the frequent party conflicts between rich and poor it is invariably the practice for the victorious side to seize the government for itself, and not to come to terms with the defeated side, 11 § 17.

(c) Of the two states that were in succession supreme in Greece, the one, Athens, introduced democracies and the other, Sparta, oligarchies, each in her own interest: 11 §§ 18, 19.

(111) The nearer any one of the remaining constitutions stands to that which is the best on the average, the better it is: the further it is removed therefrom, the worse it is: 11 §§ 20, 21.

iii What kind of polity is relatively the best for different kinds of people (τίς πολιτεία τίσι καὶ ποία ποίοις συμφέρει): 12 §§ 1—3, § 4 (ᾧπου...) —§ 5.

(1) General positions laid down, 12 §§ 1, 2.

(11) Their application (a) to Democracy and its different species, 12 § 3, (b) to Oligarchy and its different species, 12 § 3 (ᾧπου...), (c) to Polity, 12 § 4 (ᾧπου δέ...)—§ 5, (d) to so-called or Mixed Aristocracy (this is wanting).

Recapitulation of all the previous discussion, 13 § 12.

iv The theory of the best possible organization of the different Democracies and Oligarchies, or of that which most corresponds to the spirit and intent of each of them respectively: VI (IV). 14—VII (VI).

(1) General fundamental positions as to the ordering and organization of all possible polities: VI (IV). cc. 14—16.

(a) Distinction of the Deliberative, Executive, and Judicial authorities in the state: 14 §§ 1, 2.

(b) Organization of the Consultative or Deliberative body in accordance with the various polities: 14 §§ 3—15.

(a) The department of the Deliberative authority, and the three possibilities that either the whole body of citizens, or particular magistrates, have to decide upon all that belongs to this department, or again that it is divided between the one and the other: 14 § 3.

(β) These three possible cases, the different forms under which they may appear in practical application, and the sphere of action (whether larger or smaller) assigned to the different deciding factors, how distributed amongst different polities: 14 §§ 4—10;

(i) amongst the different species of Democracy, 14 § 4—§ 7 (πάντες);

(ii) those of Oligarchy, 14 § 7 (τὸ δέ τινας...)—§ 9;

(iii) Mixed Aristocracy, 14 § 10;

(iv) Polity inclining to Aristocracy, and Polity proper, 14 § 10.

(γ) Measures by which at all events to secure that the decrees passed and the verdicts of the courts shall be good and salutary for the state, (i) in the most extreme Democracy, where all is decided by decrees of the people, through the adoption of certain oligarchical elements or of institutions related to Polity, while the democratical principle is still retained: and (ii) in an Oligarchy, through the adoption of certain democratical institutions or of others peculiar to Polity, or else by a procedure the reverse of that usual in Polities: 14 §§ 11—16.

(c) Organization of the Executive power, or the magistracies: c. 15.

(a) Statement of the questions to be answered in regard to this subject, 15 §§ 1, 2.

(β) What kind of officials are to be regarded as really magistrates, i.e. as ministers or authorities of the state: 15 § 2 (ἔστι δέ...)—§ 4.

(γ) What officials are required for every state, great or small, 15 §§ 5—8.

(δ) The distinction between different magistracies according as the nature of the department they administer involves its extension over the whole state or its division according to definite localities, 15 § 9 (...τὸν αὐτόν), and further according as the same department controls all the persons affected by it, or different classes are assigned to different magistrates, 15 § 9 (καὶ πότερον...)

(ε) The difference between magistracies in the various constitutions: 15 §§ 10—13.

(i) Certain offices are the same under different forms of the state, only the mode of appointment to them being different, 15 § 10.

(ii) Others are generically the same under different forms but specifically different: i.e. different as to the extent of their powers, § 10.

(iii) Others again are peculiar to given forms of the state, §§ 11—13.

(ζ) The different modes of appointing to magistracies and their distribution amongst the forms of government, 15 §§ 14—21.

(i) Each of the three questions to be considered, viz. who have the right to elect, who are eligible, and what is the mode of election, admits of three possibilities: combine each possibility under the first of these heads with each possibility under the second and third severally, and we obtain as the total number of conceivable cases nine for each of the three, i.e. 27 in all: 15 §§ 14—18.

(ii) These modes classified under (A) Democracy § 19, (B) Polity, not only Polity proper, but also the variety which has an aristocratical, and that which has an oligarchical character, §§ 19, 20, (C) Oligarchy §§ 20, 21 and (D) Mixed Aristocracy § 21.

(η) The duties of its department must determine what mode of appointment is advantageous for each office, 15 § 22.

(d) Organization of the judicial authority; c. 16.

(α) Statement of the questions to be answered in regard to this subject, 16 § 1.

(β) The different kinds of courts, 16 §§ 2—5.

(γ) The possible differences between them as to who are eligible as jurors (οἱ δικάζοντες); how they are to be appointed; whether they are to exercise all possible judicial functions or only to serve in certain courts, 16 §§ 6, 7.

(δ) Classification of them under the different forms of the state, Democracy, Oligarchy, Aristocracy, and Polity, 16 § 8.

(II) Organization of the different species of Democracy and Oligarchy: VII (VI) cc. 1—7.

(α) The discussion of this subject announced: the questions which remain as to the organization of other constitutions, and as to the blending of different forms when one power in the state is regulated in accordance with one form, and another in accordance with another form: I §§ 1—4.

(b) The species of Democracy: 1 § 5—c. 5.

(a) Species are distinguished according to the various occupations of the different democratic populations, and the degree to which they have severally adopted democratic institutions: 1 §§ 5—10.

(β) The principles of Democracy enumerated: 2 §§ 1—4.

(γ) All the democratic institutions developed from them: 2 §§ 5—8.

[(δ) Objections to absolute Democracy and recommendation of a peculiar form of compromise between the claims of Democracy and those of Oligarchy: 2 § 9—3 § 6.]

(e) Organization of the best and most moderate species of Democracy, 4 §§ 1—14:

(ζ) of the two intermediate species, 4 § 15: and

(η) of the extreme Democracy, 4 § 15 (τῇν τε τελευταλαν...)—5 § 11.

(i) The institutions which promote the growth of this form: 4 §§ 15—20.

(ii) The measures which tend to neutralize its dangerous effects, and even impart to it, so far as is possible, a tolerable and durable character: c. 5.

(A) Preliminary remark on the urgent need for such measures: 5 §§ 1, 2.

(B) Particular instances of measures of the kind, 5 §§ 3—11:

(a) a diminution in the number of political trials, 5 §§ 3, 4:

(1) by not distributing the fines amongst the people, (2) by imposing severe penalties upon false accusation:

(b) the practice of summoning few popular assemblies and allowing the courts to sit as seldom as possible in the poorer states, 5 §§ 5, 6; and in the richer states of bestowing large sums at rare intervals upon the poor, and freeing the richer citizens from useless burdens: 5 §§ 7—9.

(c) Measures taken at Carthage and Tarentum; 5 §§ 9—11.

(c) The species of Oligarchy: cc. 6, 7.

(a) Organization of the best and most moderate species of Oligarchy: 6 §§ 1, 2;

(β) of the several intermediate species, 6 § 3; and

(γ) of the most extreme Oligarchy or Dynastic government, 6 §§ 3, 4.

(δ) Measures more directly affecting oligarchies at large, 6 § 5—7 § 7.

(i) The principal safeguard of Oligarchy, 6 § 5.

(ii) Arrangement as regards the military force and service in the army, 7 §§ 1—3.

(iii) Individual members of the popular party may be won over to the oligarchical government, 7 § 4.

(iv) To the highest posts in the government should be attached costly burdens to be defrayed for the commonwealth, 7 §§ 5—7.

(III) The theory of the organization of public offices: a fuller account in detail, c. 8 (incomplete).

(a) The questions to be discussed, 8 §§ 1, 2.

(b) The officials necessary in every state, 8 §§ 3...21.

Superintendents (a) of the markets (ἀγορανόμοι), § 3, (β) of the streets, public buildings, harbours; the city police (ἀστυνόμοι) §§ 4, 5. (γ) Police officers in the country (ἀγρόνομοι, ὕλωροι); (δ) financial officers (ἀποδέκται, ταμίαι), § 6. (ε) Keepers of archives and registers (μνήμονες, ἐπιστάται), § 7. (ζ) Officers for penal administration, executioners and the like, §§ 8—13. (η) Military officers (στρατηγοί, πολέμαρχοι, ναύαρχοι, κτλ), §§ 13—15. (θ) Board of control, for scrutiny of the accounts of retiring officials (εὐθινοί, λογισταί, ἐξετασταί), § 16. (ι) Legislative committee, to summon and direct the popular assembly, and to bring matters before it (πρόβουλοι, βουλῇ), § 17. (κ) Officers to superintend public worship (ιερεῖς κτλ), §§ 18—20. (λ) Recapitulation, § 21.

(c) Magistrates peculiar to certain given constitutions, 8 § 22.

The theoretical treatment of the cases where different forms of polity are combined in one and the same state, is wanting.

V The causes of decay in the various forms of the state and the corresponding safeguards: B. VIII (V).

I Preliminary Observations: I §§ 1—8, §§ 9—11, § 8:

3 § 14: I §§ 11—16.

(a) Statement of the whole question: I § 1.

(b) The general cause of all internal political disturbances consists in dissension as to the extent to which political equality should be carried: the rich and the nobles claim special privileges over the poor, the latter on the ground of their free birth claim equality with the rich: I §§ 2—7.

(c) Two species of revolution, I §§ 8—11:

(a) Overthrow of the constitution, §§ 8—11: whether

(i) subversion of the entire polity, § 8; or simply

(ii) accentuation or relaxation of the same form of government, § 9; or

(iii) abolition of single parts of the constitution, § 10.

(β) Change merely in the holders of power, § 8.

(d) Special application of the remarks in I §§ 2—7 to Democracy and Oligarchy. Two kinds of equality distinguished: it is necessary to pay attention to both kinds: 3 § 14, I § 11 (πανταχοῦ...)—§ 15.

(e) Why Democracy is in general more enduring than Oligarchy, I § 16.

II The causes of decay inherent in all polities in common : cc. 2—4.

(a) The three points for general consideration in this inquiry : the tendencies, the objects in view, and the external occasions which lead to political revolutions, 2 § 1.

(b) The tendencies and claims which lead to intestine disturbances and to revolutions have been already characterized (1 §§ 2—7). How far they are justified, or not, 2 §§ 2, 3.

(c) The objects sought to be attained in rebellions and insurrections : 2 § 3 (πῶς ... πόλεσιν).

(d) The definite occasions of revolution : 2 § 4—3 § 8, 4 §§ 8—12, 3 § 9—4 § 7.

(a) General enumeration : 2 §§ 4—6.

(β) Consideration of them in detail : 3 §§ 1—8, 4 §§ 8—12, 3 § 9—4 § 7.

(i) Insolence in the rulers, 3 § 1.

(ii) Their greed for aggrandisement, 3 § 1.

(iii) Efforts of the subject body to attain higher political honours, 3 § 2.

(iv) Preponderating influence of individuals, 3 § 3.

(v) Fear of punishment or of injustice, 3 § 4.

(vi) Contempt for the governing class on account of their weakness, 3 § 5.

(vii) Disproportionate growth of separate elements in the polity or classes of the population, 3 §§ 6—8 ; 4 §§ 8—10 : and conversely

(viii) The establishment of an equivalence in point of numbers between opposing elements in the state.

(x) Neglect of the dangers threatening the constitution from individuals, 3 § 9.

(xi) Gradual introduction of slight changes unobserved, 3 § 10.

(xii) Any sort of difference between the inhabitants, 3 §§ 11—13, §§ 15—16.

As (A) difference in race, particularly when alien settlers have been admitted, §§ 11—13 :

(B) difference in sentiment, and especially in political sympathies, between the dwellers in different localities of one and the same state, due to a difference of character in the localities, §§ 15, 16.

(xiii) Private feuds between leading, influential citizens, 4 §§ 1—7.

(e) The means usually employed to effect revolutions, 4 §§ 12, 13 :

(α) force, (β) stratagem, (γ) stratagem succeeded by force.

III The causes of decay and the corresponding safeguards in the particular forms of government: cc. 5—12.

(a) Positive or dogmatic exposition: c. 5—c. 12 § 6.

(a) Republics, cc. 5—9.

(i) THE CAUSES OF DECAY, cc. 5—7.

(A) In democracies, c. 5.

(a) Change to Oligarchy due to the continual persecutions of the rich by the demagogues, 5 §§ 1—5.

(b) Change to Tyranny, the demagogues usurping absolute power. Why this only happened in former times, why it is no longer usual for tyrannies to arise, 5 §§ 6—10, namely, because

(1) formerly demagogues were also generals, 5 §§ 6, 7.

(2) formerly certain officers had too large powers assigned them, 5 § 8 (ἐγίνοντο...πρύτανις)¹.

(3) The states were as yet small, and the people in former times busy with their occupations in the country, so that it was easier for military chiefs to seize absolute power, 5 §§ 8, 9.

(c) Change from the most moderate to the most extreme form of democracy, due to the demagogic intrigues of candidates for office, 5 §§ 10, 11.

(B) In oligarchies, c. 6.

(a) Downfall of oligarchies through ill-treatment of the people, 6 § 1.

(b) Downfall through dissensions between the rich oligarchs themselves, 6 §§ 2—9, §§ 14—16, § 10.

(1) If the actual members of the oligarchical government are reduced to a mere handful, so that even persons belonging to the ruling families are excluded from it by law, 6 §§ 2—5².

(2) If the oligarchs themselves from mutual jealousy adopt demagogic intrigues, 6 § 5 (κινούνται...)—§ 7:

(i) one member of the government, or a minority, intriguing to gain over the rest to his support, 6 § 6:

(ii) a part of the oligarchs (or all of them) intriguing with the people, 6 §§ 6, 7:

(a) where the people has the right of electing to the public offices, § 6, or if

(β) the law courts are constituted out of the people, § 7, or

(γ) in case some of the oligarchs are aiming at concentrating the power of the state in yet fewer hands, § 7.

² If § 5, καὶ ἐν Ἐρυθραῖς...πολιτεῖαν, be genuine we must add: "In the same way a small number of oligarchs, in spite of good government, can procure the downfall of the oligarchy at the hands of the people."

(iii) If individual oligarchs who have squandered their property attempt to make a revolution or to enrich themselves from the public means, thus embroiling themselves with the government, or raising a popular insurrection, 6 §§ 8, 9.

(iv) If members of the oligarchy are involved in private enmity owing to marriage relations or lawsuits, 6 §§ 14, 15.

(v) An oligarchy may be subverted by its own members on account of the too despotical character of the government, 6 § 16.

Concluding remark : an oligarchy united in itself is not easily overthrown from without, 6 § 10.

(c) Fall of the old oligarchy by the formation of a new one within it, 6 § 11¹.

[(d) Overthrow of oligarchies by the generals of mercenary troops enrolled for war ; or in time of peace by the generals called in because of the mutual distrust of the oligarchs ; or by a commander appointed on the same grounds to mediate between them, 6 §§ 12, 13.]

(e) Change from Oligarchy to Polity and from Polity to moderate Democracy due to a depreciation of money, whereby the property qualification required by law for the franchise ceases to be adequate, 6 §§ 16, 17.

(f) Change from one kind of Oligarchy to another : 6 § 18.

(c) In Mixed Aristocracies and Politics : c. 7 §§ 1—13.

(a) Fall of aristocracies and revolutions in consequence of the number of those who take part in the government becoming too small, 7 §§ 1—4 :

(1) especially when the large body excluded consider themselves equal in merit, 7 §§ 1, 2 ; or (2) if able and distinguished men are ill-treated by men not superior to them in desert although occupying higher offices in the state, 7 §§ 2, 3 ; or (3) are excluded from the government in spite of their merits, 7 § 3 ; or (4) if some of the citizens are too poor and others too rich, 7 § 3, or (5) an individual is so powerful that he is likely to attain supreme power, 7 § 4.

(b) The principal danger for Aristocracies of this type and for Politics consists in the fact that the oligarchical element in them has not quite successfully blended with the democratical element, but the one of these preponderates over the other, 7 §§ 5, 6. [Consequently a revolution to this preponderating side may easily take place ; that is, to complete Oligarchy or Democracy. Sometimes however there is a movement in the opposite direction : 7 §§ 7—10.]

(c) Aristocracies of this type are subject, above all other forms of government, to dissolution brought on by unperceived gradual changes, 7 §§ 11—13.

(D) Concluding remark on the changes in republics taken in common.

Sometimes they are of internal origin, sometimes they are brought about by powerful foreign states, 7 § 14.

¹ Perhaps §§ 10, 11 should also be enclosed in the square brackets.

(ii) THE SAFEGUARDS: CC. 8, 9.

(A) Preliminary remark.

The safeguards are implied in the statement of the causes of destruction: 8 § 1.

(B) Enumeration of the safeguards: 8 § 2—9 § 22.

(a) In Politics and Mixed Aristocracies especial care must be taken that slight changes and deviations from the existing laws do not gradually creep in unobserved: 8 §§ 2, 3.

(b) In the same governments precautions must be taken against those illusory measures discussed in VI (IV), 12 § 6—13 § 6: 8 § 4.

(c) In Aristocracies and Oligarchies the government must not only treat the governed well, but must also treat its own members on a footing of democratic equality, 8 § 5: hence many democratic measures are often quite in place even under these constitutions, 8 §§ 6, 7.

(d) The citizens must be kept in constant vigilance over their constitution, 8 § 8.

(e) All disputes between the principal men must as far as possible be avoided and prevented; and, so far as this fails, care must be taken that no others but the original parties to the quarrel are involved in it, 8 § 9.

(f) In Politics and Oligarchies a fresh valuation of property must be taken frequently in order that the property qualification for the franchise, if it is to retain its relative importance, may undergo the necessary revision at the proper time, 8 §§ 10, 11.

(g) No citizen to be disproportionately elevated: in particular, provision should be made by legislation to prevent the rise of unduly powerful individuals: if this does not succeed, they should be removed from the state by ostracism: 8 § 12.

(h) There should be a special board of magistrates to have supervision over the private lives of the citizens and see that they are in accord with the existing form of government, 8 § 13.

(i) Care must be taken that one part of the citizens does not prosper at the expense of the rest, 8 §§ 14—21; and hence

(1) that magisterial offices never fall exclusively into the hands of one of the two opposed classes of the population, 8 § 14:

(2) that the antagonism between rich and poor is adjusted or else that the middle class increases, 8 § 14:

(3) especially that the public offices do not afford any opportunity for enriching oneself from the public property, 8 §§ 15—19.

(4) In democracies the property of the rich must be spared, 8 § 20;

(5) in oligarchies posts with emolument attached to them must be assigned to the poorer citizens, and the insolence of a rich man towards a poor man must be punished more severely than if it were towards another rich man, 8 § 20.

(6) Further in oligarchies the accumulation of landed property in the same hands must be restrained within limits fixed by law, 8 § 20.

(7) Care must be taken in an oligarchy that the decisive authority rests in the hands of the rich, and in a democracy that it rests with the poor: but in other respects equal, nay even higher, privileges must be conceded in the former case to the poor, and in the latter case to the rich, 8 § 21.

(k) It must always be kept in view that attachment to the established form of government, special knowledge of the subject, and lastly virtue and integrity are requisite for the highest official positions: the second qualification indeed in certain offices in a higher degree than the third, in others again the third qualification in a higher degree than the second: c. 9 §§ 1—4.

(l) In a word, every measure that helps the healthy working of a constitution tends also to preserve it, 9 § 5.

(m) The citizens who desire the continuance of the form of government must be the numerical majority, 9 § 5.

(n) Even in the worse forms of Democracy and Oligarchy the mean must be preserved: it is the exaggeration of democratic and oligarchic measures which infallibly leads to the downfall of Democracy and Oligarchy respectively: 9 § 6—§ 11 (δῆμος).

(o) But the principal thing is to educate the young in the spirit of the established form of government: 9 § 11 (μεγίστον δὲ)—§ 16.

(β) Monarchies: c. 10—c. 12 § 6.

(i) THE CAUSES OF DECAY: c. 10.

(A) Discussion of certain fundamental points: 10 §§ 1—13 (ἀναρπεῖν).

(a) The government of a king is closely related to Aristocracy, but Tyranny (τυραννίς) combines the evils of the most extreme Democracy and of the most extreme Oligarchy: 10 §§ 1, 2.

(b) The opposite nature of kingly rule and tyranny is at once shown in their divergent and opposite origin: 10 §§ 3—8.

(c) A more precise statement of the antithesis between them: 10 §§ 9, 10.

(d) The points which Tyranny has in common with Oligarchy on the one hand and with Democracy on the other: 10 § 11—§ 13 (ἀναρπεῖν).

(B) Causes of the overthrow of monarchies and of monarchs in general: 10 §§ 13—28.

(a) General statement

(1) of the motives for conspiracies and attacks upon a sole ruler, 10 §§ 13, 14, and (2) of the objects sought thereby, 10 § 14.

(3) Some of these attacks are directed against the person of the usurper; in others the assailant desires to seize the throne for himself, or to effect a revolution in the government: 10 § 15.

(b) These points of view presented in detail; 10 §§ 15—28.

(1) Attacks in consequence of injuries received, 10 §§ 15—20;

(2) from fear of punishment, 10 § 20;

- (3) from contempt for the ruler, 10 §§ 22—25;
- (4) from greed of gain (largely wanting), 10 § 25;
- (5) from ambition, 10 §§ 26—28.

(c) Special causes of the downfall of (a) tyrants and tyrannies, (b) of kings and kingships: 10 §§ 29—38.

(a) Tyrants and tyrannies: 10 §§ 29—34.

(1) A tyranny is destroyed from without by more powerful foreign states not tyrannies whether (I) under a royal or aristocratical, or (II) under a democratical government, 10 §§ 29, 30.

(2) It is ruined from within by the members of the ruling family quarreling amongst themselves, 10 § 31.

(3) Most tyrants make themselves despised and this most frequently brings about their fall, 10 §§ 32, 33.

(4) Again, every tyrant is necessarily hated; hatred and righteous indignation against him often accomplish his overthrow, 10 §§ 33, 34.

(5) The same causes which threaten Extreme Democracy and Extreme Oligarchy are also dangerous to Tyranny: 10 § 35.

(b) The government of a king (as distinct from a tyrant) is mostly destroyed from within.

Either (1) feuds break out between members of the royal family, 10 § 36: or

(2) the kings overstep the legitimate limits of their authority and aim at making themselves tyrants, 10 § 38.

(3) Under an hereditary monarchy it is often impossible to prevent the succession to the throne of princes who render themselves contemptible, 10 § 38, or (4) to exclude others who behave with insolence and violence, forgetting that they are not tyrants but kings, 10 § 38.

(5) Why it is that even in recent times tyrannies have sprung up, but no new monarchies arise, 10 § 37.

(ii) THE SAFEGUARDS: C. 11, C. 12 §§ 1—6.

(A) The office of king is best preserved by the gradual diminution of its absolute authority in keeping with the spirit of the times, 11 §§ 1—3.

(B) The tyrant can only secure his throne, 11 §§ 4—34,

(a) by employing the most extreme measures of force and corruption, 11 §§ 4—16:

(1) by getting rid of all the principal men, entirely forbidding the common pursuit of culture, and putting down all messes and clubs, 11 §§ 4, 5:

(2) by compelling all the citizens to live in public, 11 § 6, and (3) by imitating all the other regulations of Persian and other oriental despotisms, 11 § 6:

(4) by sending secret spies and detectives amongst the citizens, 11 § 7;

(5) by setting all classes of the population against one another, 11 § 8;

- (6) draining the means of all his subjects, 11 §§ 9, 10,
- and (7) perpetually creating wars, 11 § 10,
- (8) by suspecting his own friends most of all, 11 § 10,
- (9) by allowing families to be governed by women and by giving slaves license to indulge all their caprices, just as in the most extreme democracy, 11 §§ 11, 12;
- (10) by permitting no dignified or free-minded character to remain near him, 11 § 13;
- (11) by being more intimate with strangers than with his own townsmen, 11 § 14.
- (12) The three leading points of view in this policy, 11 §§ 15, 16.

Or (b) by demagogic devices joined with activity in war, when the tyrant poses as the friend of the people and makes his usurped power approximate to that of a king, 11 §§ 17—34.

(1) Careful management of the state funds; avoidance of lavish grants to mistresses, foreigners, or artists; a statement of accounts presented; no treasures accumulated for himself, 11 §§ 19—21.

(2) He should endeavour to create the impression that all taxes paid and services rendered are not for him but for the state, 11 § 21.

(3) He must inspire reverence by a dignified bearing and by capacity in war, instead of inspiring fear by severity and rough treatment, 11 § 22.

(4) He should not merely himself avoid crimes and offences against his subjects, but he should not allow them to be committed by any of his family or court, especially those who are of the female sex, 11 §§ 22, 23.

(5) He should be moderate in his indulgences, or at least should conceal his excesses from the world, 11 §§ 23, 24.

(6) In his care for the adornment of the capital he must not seem to have any ulterior object, 11 § 24.

(7) He should create the impression that though he is free from childish superstition yet he is very specially concerned to honour the gods, 11 § 25.

(8) He must award, to those who show themselves deserving, higher honours and distinctions than they could hope for in a free state, and he must always bestow distinctions and rewards himself, but have punishments inflicted and executed by others, 11 § 26.

(9) On the other hand, like monarchs generally, he should especially avoid raising individuals to greatness, least of all a man of bold and enterprising character, 11 § 27.

(10) Of all deeds of violence, personal insults or ill treatment, and seduction accomplished by force are the most dangerous. If he cannot altogether avoid them, he should give to the former the colour of paternal chastisement, and seek to succeed in his intrigues by dint of impassioned persuasion alone, 11 §§ 28, 29.

(11) He should especially be on his guard against people who imagine that they, or some one whom they love, have been so deeply wronged by him that they are ready to hazard their lives in opposing him, 11 § 30.

(12) While he should seek to please rich and poor alike, he should yet prefer to rest his rule upon the poor where they are the stronger, but where the rich have the upper hand, upon the rich, 11 §§ 31, 32.

(13) The leading points in this whole policy, and the great advantages which attend on it, 11 §§ 33, 34.

[(c) Oligarchy and Tyranny the least enduring forms of government. Historical survey of the tyrannies which lasted the longest, with the reasons why this was the case: 12 §§ 1—6.]

(b) Criticism of Plato's doctrine of the successive changes from one form of the state to the other: 12 §§ 7—18.

(a) His theory of the transition from the best form of polity to the remaining forms: 12 §§ 7—10.

(i) It takes the right point of view for the cause of the decline in the best form; but the explanation given of the appearance of this cause is

(A) not peculiar to the best form of the state, but applies to all human affairs in common, 12 § 8, and

(B) supposing the best form of government to have been introduced into different states at different times before the period which Plato assumes for the universal decline, it is scarcely conceivable that, on the approach of this period, it would be subverted at one and the same time in them all, 12 §§ 9, 10.

(ii) No reason can be given why the best form of state should invariably pass over into that which stands next to it, 12 § 10.

(β) The case stands no better with his account of the transitions from the remaining forms of the state, to one another or to the best form: 12 § 10 (ὁ δ' αὐτὸς)—§ 18.

(i) Plato adheres to the same principle that every form of polity is changed into the form nearest to it, whereas the change to the opposite form is quite as frequent or even more so, 12 §§ 10, 11.

(ii) As to the second point, Plato has said nothing definitely about the change to the best form of the state; but if the omission is to be supplied in accordance with his exposition there is nothing for it but to assume that the sole transition from Tyranny or into the best state is the change when the former passes into the latter: which would be incorrect, 12 §§ 11, 12.

(iii) Further, in regard to the first point, the change from Oligarchy to Tyranny does take place, 12 § 13.

(iv) Nor is the reason assigned by Plato for the change from Mixed Aristocracy to Oligarchy the true one. For

(1) the true motive is different;

(2) what Plato takes to be the true ground for the transition to Oligarchy is not present in many oligarchies; and

(3) where it is found in Mixed Aristocracies experience shows that no such transition takes place, 12 § 14.

(v) As regards the transition from Oligarchy,

(a) that the state is divided into two states, one of the rich, the other of the poor, is not more true of Oligarchy than of the Mixed Aristocracy at Sparta or of other forms of government: 12 § 15.

(b) The change from Oligarchy to Democracy is really due to several causes, but Plato (1) only cites one of them, which does not hold except under strict limitations, 12 § 17, while (2) this cause is not altogether necessary to a revolution from Oligarchy to Democracy, provided there are other causes: 12 § 16, § 18.

(vi) Again, the transition from Democracy to Tyranny is not adequately explained, 12 § 18. (This is almost entirely wanting.)

(vii) Plato speaks throughout as if there were only one species of Democracy and of Oligarchy, 12 § 18.

PART III. The third main division of the work, treating of Legislation, is entirely wanting.

Introduction, cc. 1, 2: περὶ οἰκονομίας, cc. 3—13 (the latter a necessary preliminary to the rest of the work, πᾶσα γὰρ σύγκειται πόλις ἐξ οἰκιῶν). The prevailing tone is dialectical, and the contents of Bk. I. are nearly exhausted by a list of the problems (ἀπορίαι) started for discussion; (1) the difference between a city-state and a family, between πολιτικός and οἰκονομικός, (2) the elements of the state, πόλις ἐξ ὧν σύγκειται, c. 2, (3) the natural basis of slavery, ὅτι εἰσὶ φύσει τινὲς οἱ μὲν ἐλεύθεροι, οἱ δὲ δούλοι, cc. 4—6, (4) the relation of χρηματιστική to Economic, πότερον ἢ χρηματιστική ἢ αὕτη τῇ οἰκονομικῇ κτλ, cc. 8—11, (5) the capacity of the slave (and the artisan) for moral virtue, πότερον ἔστιν ἀρετὴ τις δούλου παρὰ τὰς ὀργανικάς, 13 § 2 ff. See further the Analysis and Introd. pp. 23—31.

c. 1 The city is the highest form of association, having the highest good for its end: § 1. The city not an enlarged family, but an essentially distinct organization, as is evident when it is analysed into its simplest elements: §§ 2, 3.

§ 1 ἡ πόλις] A 'city,' but at the same time a sovereign 'state.' κοινωνία—which includes any form of communication or social intercourse, κ. ἀλλακτικά, commercial transactions, exchange Nic. Eth. v. 5. 9; ταύτην τὴν κ.=τὴν γαμικὴν ὁμίλιαν, the marriage union Pol. IV(VII). 16. 2—denotes chiefly in this treatise (1) the voluntary combination, association, or co-operation of free men with each other in objects in which they have common interests (τόπον, ζωὴς, so ἀλλαγῆς καὶ συμμαχίας κοινωνεῖν), or, as it is sometimes put, formed with a view to certain common advantages (χρήσεως μὴ ἐφημέρου ἕνεκεν: τῆς μεταδόσεως, συμμαχίας, καλῶν πράξεων χάριν). Hence by a natural transition, concretely (2) the associated body, the members who compose the union; so that ἡ πολιτικὴ κ., 'civil society'=the community, τὸ κοινόν (e.g. II. 3. 1 compared with II. 2. 2, IV[VII]. 14. 1). See further on I. 2 § 12, 8 § 13, III. 9. 12.

3 δοκοῦντος ἀγαθοῦ] seeming good, which may not really be the agent's true interest, although he thinks so, cp. IV(VII). 13. 2. (See this case fully elucidated Nic. Eth. III. 4 §§ 1—4, § 17, § 20, the solution being ὁ σπουδαῖος ἕκαστα κρίνει ὁρθῶς καὶ ἐν ἑκάστοις τάληθές αὐτῷ φαίνεται.) Both δοκεῖν and φαίνεσθαι are often opposed to εἶναι as semblance to reality, but while δοκεῖν = putari to be thought, φαίνεσθαι = videri to appear, of an object present to sense; hence τὸ δοκοῦν=subjective opinion, τὰ φαινόμενα=objective facts. Bonitz Ind. Ar. s. v.

4 πᾶσαι μὲν...μάλιστα δέ] The clause with δέ gives the true apodosis to ἐπειδὴ: 'while all aim at some good (κατὰ μέρος τοῦ συμφέροντος ἐφίενται), the highest and most comprehensive aims especially at the highest good.'

5 κυριωτάτου] Cp. III. 12. 1 and note SUSEM. (1)

ἡ πασῶν...πάσας περιέχουσα] See n. on II. 2 § 7, where is explained, from Nic. Eth. VIII. 9 §§ 4—6, how this supreme society embraces all the inferior as 'parts' (μέρη) of itself.

§ 2 8 ὅσοι μὲν κτλ] Plato Politicus 258 E ff.; cp. c. 3 § 4, 7 §§ 1, 2 nn. Socrates too expresses himself to this effect in Xenoph. Memorab. III. 4 § 6 f. § 12 ἡ γὰρ τῶν ἰδίων ἐπιμέλεια πλήθει μόνον διαφέρει τῆς τῶν κοινῶν. SUSEM. (2) πολιτικόν] A practical statesman, a magistrate in a free city, self-governed according to Greek ideas; so 8 § 15, II § 13, II. 7. 1 πολιτικοί) (φιλόσοφοι καὶ ἰδιῶται, cp. Nic. Eth. X. 9. 18) (σοφισταί. Occasionally much more than this, for Aristotle requires that ὁ ὡς ἀληθῶς π. should know psychology, *N. 11 ἂν μὲν ὀλίγων] Schneider supplies ἄρχη here, and καλοῦσι before δεσπότῃν, but νομίζουσιν (εἶναι) would do just as well in the latter case, and in line 14, while either ἄρχη or ἐφεστήκη must be understood to follow ὅταν δὲ in line 15.

 7 §§ 6—8. In III. 9 §§ 6—8, VI(IV).
 4 §§ 8, 9 and perhaps in III. 12 §§ 1, 2
 the interruption of the original construction almost amounts to anacoluthia. See attained about them severally." Although he did not apply the mathematical method of pure deduction to biological or political sciences Aristotle derived both the processes of Analysis and Synthesis and the terms (ἀναλύνειν, σύνθετον διαιρεῖν) from geometry: see the instructive passages

 §§ 1—8. The city a natural institution
 §§ 8—12, prior in the intention of nature to the family and individual §§ 13, 14, and of incalculable utility §§ 15, 16.

We have here the Patriarchal Theory,
 as it is called by Sir H. Maine, applied to the origin of society. The family living under the headship of the father is taken as the ultimate social unit. Until quite recently this was the accepted view: see Maine Ancient Law c. 5 esp. 122—135,
Early History of Institutions c. 3, Early Law and Custom cc. 7, 8. There are certain difficulties of this derivation of the state which Aristotle avoids 'by making the combination of families of different stocks (γέννη) depend on contiguity of residence and on convenience.' See J. F.
 McLennan's criticisms Studies in Ancient History, esp. 213—227, 235—309.

On the origin of civil society there is something in Plato Rep. II. 369 b ff., Laws
 III. 676—682, Polybios VI. cc. 4—7, Cicero De Rep. I. 25, 26 §§ 39—42 (with Lac-tantius Instit. VI. 10), De Off. I. 17 §§ 53, 54, De Fin. III. §§ 62—67. A. C. Bradley Hellenica 190—212 gives the best commentary on cc. 1, 2; Oncken Staats- lehre II. 3—27 is also helpful.

διὰ τὴν σωτηρίαν] “for preservation”: i.e. to secure the means of subsistence. How far this is true of the ‘slave by birth’ on Aristotle’s view is explained § §§ 6—10, as Fülleborn has correctly observed: in the case of the master it should be remembered that without slaves in his household he can procure at best but a poor and uncertain subsistence: see § 5 n. (15), 4 §§ 1—4. SUSEM. (6)

τὸ μὲν γὰρ κτλ.] Cp. § §§ 8—10, II § 6 n. (103). SUSEM. (6 b)

§ 3 34 διὸ δεσπότη κτλ.] ‘It is not simply, as Fülleborn (II. 75) supposes, that both master and slave are alike interested in the establishment of this relationship: Aristotle really means that the master’s interest is advantageous for the slave, and conversely’: cp. 6 § 10 n. (57). Only the advantage to the slave comes indirectly, κατὰ συμβεβηκός, III. 6. 6 n. (L. Schiller). SUSEM. (7) Cp. 5 § 2.

1252 b 1 οὐδὲν γὰρ κτλ.] “For nature never fashions things niggardly, for various and dissimilar purposes, as Delphic cutlers do their knife” (Shilleto).

2 τὴν Δελφικὴν μάχαιραν] “According to Hesychios, s.v., the Delphian knife had the upper part only of iron, λαμβάνουσα ἔμπροσθεν μέρος σιδηροῦν; the handle, perhaps also the back, was of wood. Götting De m. D. quae est apud Aristotelem (Jenae 1856. 4) maintains it was a knife and spoon combined, for sacrificial purposes” (Schnitzer). Hence Götting proposes μύστρον for μέρος in Hesychios, as above. Oncken, II. 25—27, dismisses the obscure words of Hesychios in favour of Oresme’s explanation: “suppose a piece of iron with a thick end and a pointed end, with the back left rough and the other side sharpened to a blade. Then you have a knife for cutting, you can file with the rough back, and by turning it round use the thick end for a hammer. Such a rough sort of tool would certainly be cheap enough.” Cp. ὀβελισκολύχνη VII(IV). 15, 8 n. SUSEM. (8) Δελφικὴ μάχαιρα ἐπὶ τῶν φιλοκερδῶν Makarios ap. Athenaeus IV. 74 p. 173: 'Αχαιοὶ δ' ὁ Ἐρετριεὺς ἐν Ἀλκμαίωνι τῷ σατυρικοῦ καρυκοποιοὺς καλεῖ τοὺς Δελφοὺς διὰ τούτων. Καρυκοποιοὺς προσβλέπων βδελύττομαι παρόσον τὰ ἱερεῖα περιτέμνοντες δῆλον ὡς ἐμαγεύερον αὐτὰ καὶ ἐκαρύκειον. εἰς ταῦτα δὲ ἀποβλέπων καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης ἔφη· 'Αλλ' ὦ Δελφῶν πλείστας ἀκόνων | Φοῖβε μαχαίρας | καὶ προδιδάσκων τοὺς σὸν πρόβλους. It was from Thomas Aquinas ad locum that Oresme derived the explanation cited above. See Von Hertling Rhein. Mus. xxxix. p. 447. Mr W. Ridgeway thinks the name given to "a large kind of knife, which could be used for either fighting or carving, from the sacrificial knife having been used as a weapon to slay Pyrrhus, Pindar Nem. VII. 42."

3 ἐν πρὸς ἔν] There are of course exceptions to this rule, as Aristotle himself allows De Part. Anim. IV. 6. 13, 683 a 22 ὅπου γὰρ ἐνδέχεται χρῆσθαι δυοῖν ἐπὶ δύο ἔργα καὶ μὴ ἐμποδίζειν πρὸς ἕτερον, οὐδὲν ἢ φύσις εἴωθε ποιεῖν ὥσπερ ἡ χαλκευτικὴ πρὸς εὐτέλειαν ὀβελισκολύχνιον· ἀλλ' ὅπου μὴ ἐνδέχεται, καταχρήσθαι τῷ αὐτῷ ἐπὶ πλείω ἔργα. 4 μὴ πολλοῖς ἔργοις κτλ] "if restricted in use to a single function." Fülleborn asserts that the conclusion does not follow from the premises, even supposing there is no exception to the rule (see preceding note). But surely the propagation and the preservation of the species are two different ends. At the same time Aristotle should have emphasized the fact that woman is not nearly so far below man as the natural slave (see § 2) is below his master. SUSEM. (10)

δοῦλων Plato Laws 805 E. Fülleborn (II. 84) objects that this is an unsatisfactory reason to assign for the servitude of women outside Greece, since where all of both sexes are slaves we should rather infer that they are all equal. (In this last sense indeed C. Longrevery takes the words, supplying τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχει τάξιν sc. τοῖς ἄλλοις τοῖς σὺρρεσι καὶ τοῖς δεσπόταις.)

"Fülleborn's objections arise from his having been misled by the omission mentioned above, in n. (10), and so having misunderstood the real sense of the passage. Aristotle's meaning is this: because the barbarian nations are slaves by nature, the men are not capable of respecting the freedom of the female sex in the women, and of according to them the position which by nature belongs to the woman in relation to the man; but treat them as slaves. And hence necessarily arises the perversion of nature, that in the marriage relation you have one slave ruling despotically over another. To the same cause, the servile character of these nations, or at least of the Asiatics (I. 6. 8 n.), Aristotle attributes the fact that they themselves are ruled by their kings as slaves; or in other words that the form under which the state exists amongst them is despotism, III. 14. 6 n., which in reality cannot be considered to constitute a state at all, a state consisting of free citizens but not of slaves, 7 § 1, III. 9 § 6, 12 § 8; cp. VI(IV). 4 § 11, a passage which is probably not genuine. Such a despotism is only an abnormally expanded family: ('non civitas erit sed magna familia,' Grotius De iure belli ac pacis III. 8. 2). It is a species of that which Aristotle denotes by ἔθνος, i.e. a mere aggregate of men of the same race, a tribe population or nationality, as contrasted with πόλις, a city-state: § 6; II. 1 § 3; III. 3 § 5, 13 § 19, 14 § 15; IV(VII). 4 § 11; VIII(V). 10 § 8 with nn.; *Nic. 9 ὡς ταῦτό κτλ.] In this Aristotle only expresses the view which had gradually become universal among the Greeks, and was not combated until a late period and then by but few: 3 § 4 n. (31). This view is explained by the justifiable consciousness they had of their mental superiority; it was especially fostered by the Persian war, and found external confirmation in the fact that the vast majority of Greek slaves were of barbarian origin, while in itself again it tended to hinder the enslavement of Greeks (L. Schiller). See also n. (47) on I. 5 § 10. That slaves are non-Hellenes is assumed quite as an understood thing in Xenoph. Memor. II. 7. 6, Demosth. XXI. (c. Mid.). 48. ascribed to Epimenides, then, as these would be written in hexameters, the text requires a word capable of standing in an hexameter verse and ὀμοκάπνους, which satisfies this condition, appears to possess a decided advantage. For ὀμοκάπνους of the inferior MSS. is usually taken to be a compound with κάπη a trough, crib; hence any feeding-place; and if this etymology be correct nothing but arbitrary lengthening of the first syllable in arsi could adapt the word to an hexameter verse. (3) Göttling, again, thinks that Epimenides could not possibly have called the families of the Cretans 'mess-mates,' because the συσσίτια were established amongst them. But, even assuming that Epimenides actually wrote the line in question, there was, as Dittenberger remarks, no absolute necessity that he should confine himself in this oracle to the circumstances of Crete, especially as his influence was actively felt far beyond the island.

In favour of ὀμοκάπνους Dittenberger urges that 'it is like Aristotle to support the results of his own inquiries by a subsequent appeal to the language of common life, to proverbs, passages in the poets, or specially significant sayings and expressions of prose writers. In this place Charondas and Epimenides are evidently quoted for this same purpose, in connexion with the definition of the family as a society existing for the whole of daily life. Consequently it is the satisfaction of daily recurring needs which brings individuals together in a household. The expression of Charondas (and that of Epimenides also, if we read ὀμοκάπνους) fits in perfectly with this, by making common participation in food, which is the most important daily need, characteristic of the household. But ὀμοκάπνους = smoke-fellows could only be taken as alluding to the common sacrificial fire, which would not suit the present context, although it is true that from the point of view of the Greek the family was a society for worship.' Yet ὀμοκάπνους should be understood of sharers in the smoke of the common hearth, just as we might speak of 'hearths' meaning homes or families*; thus the same idea of a common participation in food would be denoted but in a different form.

All these difficulties Ridgeway (Camb. Philological Soc. Transactions Feb. 23, 1882) seeks to avoid by retaining the reading ὀμοκάπνους (with ā), Doric for ὀμοκήπνους (κήπος) = with a common plot of ground. SUSEM. (17)

"The Cretan poet used a Doric form, for the retention of the dialectic form in Aristotle cp. Θάλεω 1. 11. 12: κήπος is the common plot of ground that furnishes the common food supply (σιπήνη): cp. 11. 5. 2 (γῆπεδον and καρπός). The scale of social development here indicated seems to be (1) original οἰκία: (2) οἶκος = joint family of Hindus or Slavonic house-community, where the proceeds of the undivided property (κήπος) must be brought into a common chest or purse: vide Sir H. Maine" (Early Law 237—255): after that, "(3) the οἶκος breaks up into separate οἰκίαι forming the κώμη (= the Russian village community): all are sprung or believe themselves to be sprung from a common ancestor (ὀμογάλακτες)" (Ridgeway). For the undivided family property comp. E. de Laveleye La propriété primitive cc. 13—15 (Engl. tr. pp. 175—214), Hearn Aryan Household 176—191, and the criticism by D. household may be most naturally regarded as a colony or offshoot of the original household. SUSEM. (18b)

18 ὁμογάλακτας] According to Philochoros Frag. 91—94 and Frag. 139 in Harpokration and Suidas (s. v. γεννήται, ὁμογάλακτες, ὀργεῶνες) the members of each of the 360 ancient Attic γένη who were afterwards called γεννήται = kin, clansmen, were originally called ὁμογάλακτες = foster-brothers, fellow-nurslings (J. G. Schneider Addenda II. 471). Pollux VI. 37, VIII. 9 οἱ μετέχοντες τοῦ γένους ἐκαλοῦντο γεννήται καὶ ὁμογάλακτες, γένει μὲν οὐ προσήκοντες, ἐκ δὲ τῆς συνόδου οὕτω προσαγορευόμενοι. SUSEM. (19)

Thus only is the γένος hinted at here. "The identity of the κώμη and the γένος is apparently indicated III. 9 §§ 12, 14 where we have the πόλις defined as (a) ἡ τοῦ εὖ ζῆν κοινωνία καὶ ταῖς οἰκίαις καὶ τοῖς γένεσι, and (b) ἡ γενῶν καὶ κωμῶν κοινωνία" (Heitland Notes 8). Even then no place in the development is found for φρατρίαι, φυλαί, or Aristotle's 'associations for common sacrifices and religious festivals' Nic. Eth. VIII. 9. 5; cp. Pol. III. 9. 13 (Oncken). Apparently they are held to be of later origin than the state. Nor is there any explicit reference to συνοικισμός, although, as Stein suggests, Aristotle has doubtless been influenced by the history of Attica.

As to the meaning of ὁμογάλακτες, Aristotle unquestionably understood it to imply common ancestry in our sense, even if παῖδάς τε καὶ παίδων παῖδας be rejected as a gloss. And this may well have been the sense in which it was anciently applied to the clansmen (γεννήται). For descent had long been reckoned through males in Athens,—indeed Dikaiarchos (Fr. 9 Müller) appears to denote by πάτρα what is usually called the γένος: and even where individuals not connected by blood had entered a clan they may have come to believe the contrary. (See Maine Early Law p. 272 ff.)

Or the word may have first meant 'those of kin by descent through females only.' On the evidence of Spartan and Athenian customs, and from indications in Homer and the legends, it has been with good reason inferred that this system of kinship once prevailed in Greece, McLennan op. c. 225—309: cp. L. H. Morgan Ancient Society c. 8 esp. 230—234. "If ὁμογάλακτες = members of a γένος, the name itself demonstrates that this membership in the γένος depended on their having had the same mother's milk" (Ridgeway). If so, may we similarly interpret ὁμοσίπνοι and ὁμόκαπνοι as survivals from a time when eating from the same meal-jar or sharing the same smoke, and not inheritance of the same father's blood, constituted in a savage society the earliest idea of kinship? See Exc. I to B. II.

Another meaning proposed is: 'those who offer the same milk', from a comparison of Sanskrit sapiṇḍa, samānodaka = those who offer the same cake, the same water: i. e. 'near kin', 'distant kin' respectively (Hearn op. c. 171): but for this there is no evidence.

διὸ = hence: viz. because the 'city' arose through the village from the family. Thus Plato argues Laos III 680 D ff.: ἐν οἷς τὸ πρεσβύτατον ἀρχεῖ διὰ τὸ τὴν ἀρχὴν αὐτοῖς ἐκ πατρὸς καὶ μητρὸς γεγονέναι... βασιλείαν πασῶν δικαιοτάτην βασιλευμένους.

19 αἱ πόλεις = Hellenic city-states, τὰ ἔθνη = non-Hellenic races or populations. As in IV(VII). 2. 10 ἐτι δ' ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσι πᾶσι τοῖς δυναμένοις πλεονεκτεῖν... οἶον ἐν Σκύθαις καὶ Πέρσαις καὶ Θραξὶ καὶ Κελτοῖς, Aristotle uses ἔθνη on the grounds assigned in n. (11) as equivalent to non-Hellenes, precisely as the word is used in the New Testament for Gentiles) (Jews and Christians τὸ πρῶτον) Other reasons assigned III. 14 § 12, 15 § 11 nn. but to be self-sufficing is end and highest good (and end = fully developed nature).

Against whom, we may ask, is this directed? No doubt there were Sophists who criticized political institutions, of whom Hippias and Thrasymachus may serve as opposite types. But perhaps Antisthenes was the first deliberately to oppose the outcome of civilization and to advocate a return to a ruder and simpler life: Zeller Socrates and Socratics p. 322—5. The anti-social theories of Plato's Callicles in the Gorgias, of Thrasymachus and the speakers in Republic B. II, are not directly subversive of the state: like Hobbism, they are conservative in their aim.

32 ἡ δὲ φύσις τέλος] Physics II. 1. 8 193 a 30 f. φύσις in first sense = ὅλη mere potency; in second sense = ἡ μορφή καὶ τὸ εἶδος τὸ κατὰ τὸν λόγον. ὥσπερ γὰρ τέχνη λέγεται τὸ κατὰ τὴν τέχνην καὶ τὸ τεχνικόν, οὕτω καὶ φύσις τὸ κατὰ φύσιν λέγεται καὶ τὸ φυσικόν: II. 2 § 8, 194 a 28 f. ἡ δὲ φύσις τέλος καὶ οὐ ἔνεκα... ὧν γὰρ συνεχεῶς τῆς κινήσεως οὕσης ἐστὶ τι ἔσχατον, τοῦτο τέλος καὶ τὸ οὐ ἔνεκα... βούλεται γὰρ οὐ πᾶν εἶναι τὸ ἔσχατον τέλος, ἀλλὰ τὸ βέλτιστον. De anima III. 12. 3. 434 a 32 f. All three: only it is unnatural and contrary to the design of the tree that the bud should wither before coming into bloom and bearing fruit" (Fülleborn). SUSEM. (22)

§ 9 34 f. ἔτι...βέλτιστον] The whole connexion requires that this should be a second proof (or at least an amplification of the first proof) ὅτι πᾶσα πόλις φύσει ἐστίν. And so in fact it is, only it must be supplemented from what precedes. It runs thus: 'the final cause, that is, the end, of a thing is best. Now self-sufficiency is the end and the best' (thus including under one both the subject and the predicate of the former premiss). With this must be mentally supplied from the foregoing; 'the end discloses the true nature of the thing', and 'political society alone' (i.e. no society short of the state) 'affords to its members true self-sufficiency'. Then the conclusion follows that the state is by nature. Similar abbreviations of the steps in an argument are found elsewhere in Aristotle, so concise sometimes as to be almost unintelligible: e.g. Metaph. XII(Λ). 1 § 2, § 5, 1069 a 24, b 5 (Freudenthal). See also ib. I. 7. 6. "The dogma τῶν φύσει ἡ πόλις ἐστὶ, καὶ ὁ ἄνθρωπος φύσει πολιτικὸν ζῶον, as interpreted by Aristotle, implies (1) that social organization is not a violation of nature, (2) that the πόλις differs from the οἰκία in something more than size, (3) that existing institutions are capable of improvement, (4) that there is a form or type or end towards which they may be improved. It is plain that the exposition of this dogma appropriately holds a prominent place in the introduction to a work which has for its main purpose the development of a scheme of the normal πόλις" (Jackson).

off from civil society by nature, and not by chance, is either low in the scale of humanity, or above it—(as is also he whom Homer reproachfully described as ‘clanless lawless hearthless’; for he”, not the ἀπολις, but ὁ ὕφ' Ὀμήρου λοιδορηθεὶς, “is at once naturally unsocial and pugnacious”—being in fact solitary, like the blot at backgammon” (Jackson).

διότι δὲ πολιτικὸν] De hist. anim. I. 1. 12: πολιτικὰ δ’ ἐστὶ ζῶα ὧν ἐν τι καὶ κοινὸν γίνεται πάντων τὸ ἔργον, ὅπερ οὐ πάντα ποιεῖ ἀγελαῖα. Not all gregarious animals form a community, but those which, like bees, wasps, ants, cranes, and lastly man, are engaged upon some common work (Eaton). SUSEM. (25 b)

* Whether πόλις was a name for this game or not, the πάμπολλα πόλεις of Plato Rep. IV. 422 E (cp. the scholion) makes it likely that a compact body of pieces was called πόλις; if an isolated piece was called ἀπολις, Aristotle’s allusion would be specially appropriate. Oncken, II. 27 f., has misunderstood Agathias’ epigram and Götting’s dissertation no less than the present passage (Jackson).

§ 2 9 γαμικὴ = ‘conjugal’, πατρικὴ = ‘paternal’ relationship: senses obviously more precise than the ordinary use of the terms warranted. Thus ἡ γαμικὴ ὁμιλία, the marriage union, IV(VII). 16 § 1 = simply cohabitation. Schneider thinks ἀνδρική, Göttling ποσιακὴ (sic) would better express the former relation from the side of the stronger analogously to δεσποτική, or Latin maritalis. Strictly πατρικός = hereditary, as e.g. in III. 14. 6: but in Nic. Eth. v. 6. 8, VIII. 10. 4 it is used, as here, for ‘paternal’.

τοῖς δὲ παρὰ φύσιν] Comp. below 6 § 1 foll. with nn. The only representative of this view of whom we have certain knowledge was the rhetorician Alkidamas of Elaia, a disciple of Gorgias (see III. 2. 2 n.), who gave expression to it in his 'Messenian' speech delivered on behalf of Messene after its restoration by Epaminondas, in order to overcome the obstinate refusal of the Spartans to recognize the new state: ἐλευθέρους ἀφήκε πάντας θεός, οὐδένα δούλον ἢ φύσις πεποίηκεν, Aristot. Rhet. I. 13. 3, with scholiast. Compare Spengel (II. 179) [and Cope] on that passage: and esp. Vahlen Der Rhetor Alkidamas (Vienna 1864. 8). 14 ff. Possibly (see 7 § 3 n.) Aristotle was acquainted with the lines of the comic poet Philemon (Fragm. inc. xxxiv Meineke, cp. Meineke's ed. p. 410) καὶ δούλος ἐστὶ, δάρκα τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχει. | φύσει γὰρ οὐδεὶς δούλος ἐγενήθη ποτέ· | ἢ δ' αὖ τύχη τὸ σῶμα κατεδουλώσατο. SUSEM. (31)

Zeller Socrates p. 322 n. 3 is inclined to attribute this view to the Cynics.

22 διόπερ κτλ.] Wherefore slavery (τὸ δεσπόζειν) is unjust also, as resting on mere force (Wyse).

c. 4 § 1 23 ἡ κτητικὴ = the theory of the acquisition of property. Göttling and Bernays in a more general sense, 'the theory of property'; and certainly with this rendering the words in brackets would fit better into the context. But in what follows κτητικὴ everywhere denotes the same thing as χρηματιστικὴ in the wider sense, the 'science' or 'art' of acquiring wealth, first introduced 3 § 3, see 8 § 1 n. Property, as being indispensable for living, belongs to the household: hence by analogy it follows that every chattel is an instrument for the householder's use, and that the slave is an animate instrument of this kind. But from the fact that the theory of acquisition or even the theory of property is a part of the science of household management, no such conclusion follows, even when taken in connexion with the first premiss, which is sufficient of itself to prove it in the manner indicated above. Besides, the words bracketed anticipate the decision which at 3 § 3 is distinctly postponed to c. 8, and the way in which the question is raised 8 § 1 presupposes that no such decision by anticipation has yet been given. The statement made here does not agree with the results of cc. 8—11; for not the whole theory of property and its acquisition,

 Mere life, bare existence, ζῆν, is of course the immediate end of the household and of household management: good life or well-being, εὖ ζῆν, is the end which the state has in view: but indirectly the state and its end is the end of the household 2 §§ 2—9. Consequently we find that side of οἰκονομία, which is directed towards securing the fitness of those belonging to the household, and so towards the perfecting of life, ranked above the use and preservation of property, or the side which is directed to mere living, 13 § 1 n.

25 ταῖς ὀρισμέναις τέχναις = the arts which form distinct professions: 'as the craftsmen of a particular trade-guild must be provided with suitable tools &c.' Bernays. In any case the phrase means 'the arts' properly so called; immediately below they are termed productive or creative (ποίησις, ποιητικὰ ὄργανα § 4 with n.) as contrasted with the merely practical activities to which Economic and the art of life belong. According to Aristotle these productive arts are to be subdivided into (1) the useful, and (2) the imitative or 'fine arts'.

In the sphere of practice the end lies in the activities themselves, ἐνέργειαι: in the sphere of the produce them: Nic. Eth. I. 1. 2, 1094 a living." But it is not true conversely that every instrument of use for living is a piece of property or chattel. The analogy of the distinctive crafts is against this; for the helmsman's assistant is not his property, and the difference between the ends for which instruments are used in the two cases does not supply any reason for this distinction. § 3 35 Δαιδάλου] Not a real historical personage, but only the legendary personification of the first prominent advance in Greek architecture and more especially in sculpture. Before him the human figure had been represented with the feet together, the arms joined to the body and the eyes shut. He first made the eyes look as if open, detached the arms from the sides, and showed the feet stepping apart (scholiast on Plato Meno 97 D, Suidas s. v. Δαιδάλου ποιήματα). When contrasted with the archaic style his figures came to be praised for their illusive lifelikeness; and this, or rather his choice of attitudes of motion and action for his figures, is all that is meant by the story to which Aristotle here alludes, viz. that his figures moved as if alive and had to be chained to prevent their running away (Plato L. c.). See Brunn History of the Greek Artists I. 14—23. SUSEM. (36)

§ 4 1254 a 2 ποιητικὰ = for production (of fresh utilities embodied in material objects), πρακτικόν 'for action' = merely for use, i.e. as we see from 8 § 2 the consumption or utilization of commodities. In Political Economy consumption is either productive or unproductive, and the definition of wealth will vary according as we consider it from the producers' or the consumers' point of view: Mill I. c. 3, Sidgwick Principles I. c. 3 § 7.

On the distinction here made between ποίησις and πράξις cp. nn. (34, 40) and Zeller op. c. II ii 164, 177 ff., 580, 586, 652 ff. Consult also the special treatises Ed. Oncken very justly remarks, op. c. II. 39 f., that even from Aristotle's own point of view we must be surprised at a conception of slave-labour so one-sided that even its capacity for production (i.e. of fresh objects of utility) is denied. "This could not be maintained in view of the fact that in the art and industry of Hellas the whole of the unskilled labour engaged upon the 17 χωριστόν] Hereby opposed to μόριον which when separated can do no work, as we saw, 2 § 13 (Shilleto).

Thus the definition of ὁ φύσει δούλος is ὄργανον ἐμψυχον πρακτικὸν καὶ χωριστόν, ὄλος ἄλλου ὄν, and this exactly corresponds to the limited meaning of κτῆμα 'chattel', 'thrall', as for instance in N. E. v. 6. 8 quoted above.

c. 5. To whom then does this definition apply? Are there any φύσει δούλοι, for whom a slave's estate is greater good and just?

§ 1 26 τῷ λόγῳ... ἐκ τῶν γινομένων] Aristotle emphasized the distinction between the abstract and concrete treatment of a subject. The former is λογικῶς or διαλεκτικῶς ζητεῖν as opposed (a) to ἀναλυτικῶς or ἐκ τῶν κειμένων, (b) to φυσικῶς ζητεῖν or ἐπισκοπεῖν: Waitz Organon II. 354, Zeller Phil. II II 171 n. 2. § 4 31 ἐκ τῆς ἀπάσης φύσεως] The conclusion is based upon the whole order of nature: it is a universal natural law, not a special law applying to living organisms (Bernays). SUSEM. (38 c) It is not probable that ἐκ with genitive=a partitive genitive (Bonitz Ind. Ar. 235 b 11), for the only support for such a use is the spurious treatise Περὶ φυτῶν, 836 a 39, τὸ φυτὸν οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ τῶν στερουμένων ψυχῆς, and 828 b 27. It would be an improvement, but hardly correct, to render 'taking the whole of nature this is preëminently true of living things'.

33 ἀρχή, οἷον ἁρμονίας] "Even in things without life there is a species of dominance, in music for instance": each musical 'mode' being ruled by its keynote, ἡ μέση (originally the note struck by the middle string of the heptachord*). Compare Probl. XIX. § 33 920 a 21 ἡ γὰρ μέση καὶ ἡ γεμῶν: § 36 920 b 9 τὸ ἡρμόσθαι ἐστὶν ἀπάσαις sc. ταῖς χορδαῖς, τὸ δὲ ἔχειν πῶς πρὸς τὴν μέσην: § 44 922 a 23 ἐπειδὴ τῶν μεταξὺ τῶν ἄκρων τὸ μέσον μόνον ἀρχή τις ἐστὶν ... 27 φθόγγοι ὧν ἡ μέση καλουμένη μόνῃ ἀρχὴ ἐστὶ θατέρου τετραχόρδου. On the technical sense of ἁρμονία=εἶδος διαπασῶν see Exc. III. on Bk. V (VIII). Another political simile from the 'modes' Eth. Eud. VII. 9. 4: ἔστι τὸ αὐτὸ ἐπὶ τῶν ἁρμονιῶν καὶ τῶν ἐν ταῖς πολιτείαις, inasmuch as some are ὀρθαί, others παρεκβά-σεis. Giphanius and others wrongly take ἁρμονίας as qualifying ἀρχή=dominance in the sense, that is, of a blending or subordination of parts. Cp. De Anima I. 4. 1 τὴν ἁρμονίαν κράσιν καὶ σύνθεσιν ἐναντίων εἶναι. This would be the sense of συμφωνία, rather than of ἁρμονία, in music: Probl. XIX. 38 921 a 2.

§ ἐξωτερικωτέρας ἐστὶ σκέψεως] "would perhaps involve a discussion somewhat outside the subject". Obviously the simple meaning here as in ἐξ. πράξεις IV (VII). 3. 8: not to be pressed (as by Thurot Etudes 219 f., Ueberweg Hist. of Phil. Eng. tr. I. 143) to signify 'those parts of Aristotle's strictly scientific works which are "dialectical" i.e. controversial, rather than "apodeictical" i.e. purely scientific.'

34 τὸ δὲ ζῶον κτλ] The enumeration is interrupted at ἀρχόμενον by the qualifying phrase in parenthesis δεῖ δὲ σκοπεῖν... ἔχειν in such a way that even the first member (ζῶον) is only quoted by its first division into soul and body, while the second subdivision into rational and irrational parts of the soul is not added until the enumeration is resumed, § 6. We should expect δεύτερον, τρίτον to correspond with πρῶτον, in place of them we find πάλιν and ἐτι δὲ in § 7. SUSEM. (39 b)

§ 5 This does not help us to determine what is κατὰ φύσιν. But Aristotle's meaning is the same as in 2 § 8 οἷον γὰρ ἕκαστόν ἐστι τῆς γενέσεως τελεσθεσης ταύτην φάμεν τὴν φύσιν εἶναι ἕκαστου. Cp. N. Eth. IX. 9. 8, Cic. Tusc. I § 32 (Eaton).

* The term 'dominant' for the fifth above the ey-note in a modern scale is quite different.

§ 6 1254 b 3 f. This analogy is carried out in Nic. Eth. v. 11 § 9, i. 13 § 18, III. 3 § 18, 12 § 6. Cp. also Plato Phaedo 80 A ἐπειδὴ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ὡς ψυχὴ καὶ σῶμα, τῷ μὲν δουλεῖν καὶ ἄρχεσθαι ἡ φύσις προστάττει, τῇ δὲ ἄρχειν καὶ δεσπόζειν; Phaedrus 237 f., not to mention Rep. IX. 589 E, 590 C, D (Eaton). Several characteristic phrases here come from Plato. For similar analogies turning on various forms of ἀρχή see Nic. Eth. v. 6. 8 f., 11 § 9 with Jackson's notes; VIII. 10 §§ 4, 5, 11 §§ 1—6.

8 τῷ παθητικῷ...λόγον ἔχοντος] Cp. IV (VII). 15. 9 with n. (935). More precisely Aristotle distinguishes in the human soul (1) the rational part or thinking soul, νοῦς, (2) the sentient appetitive soul, cp. IV (VII). 7. 5 n. (786), and (3) the nutritive or vegetative soul. The lower animals have the two latter merely, plants have only the third: see Zeller op. c. II ii 497 f., 509 f., 566 ff. The nutritive soul is of no importance for the present inquiry, compare Nic. Eth. i. 13 §§ 11—14; here it is left entirely out of the question as in c. 13 § 6, IV (VII). 14 § 9 f., 15 §§ 9, 10, where see the notes, cp. also III. 4 § 6 n. (472). He further divides the rational soul into two parts: i cognitive reason (ἐπιστημονικόν), ii reflective or opining reason (λογιστικόν, δοξαστικόν). The latter includes that part of the speculative reason which attains to a mere idea or opinion (ὑπόληψις = unverified belief, assumption, δόξα) but falls short of true knowledge, and more especially the practical reason with its peculiar faculty of taking counsel or deliberating with itself (βουλευτικόν, see 13 § 7 n.), or in other words the faculty of reflexion from which Aristotle has borrowed the name (λογιστικόν) for all this part of the reason. It was explained in n. (34) on I. 4. 1 that the practical reason is again divided into (1) διάνοια πρακτική, practical reason in the strict sense, and (2) constructive, i.e. technical, reason, δ. ποιητική, which when developed becomes τέχνη, artistic skill*: see Nic. Eth. vi. 1 § 5 f.; 2 § 3, 5 § 5; 4 § 3, 5 § 8, 12 § 2; Metaph. vi. 1. 5 1025 b 25 f. Compare Walter and Zeller as above quoted, and in modification of their views Sussemihl Studies in the Nic. Eth. in the Jahrb. f. Philol. CXIX. 1879. 737 ff.

If we combine with the above the results stated in the note on I. 13. 6 we obtain the following scheme of the rational soul according to Aristotle:

* In the Politics however τέχνη generally denotes (1) Art as opposed to Nature, (2) the total activity in any department whatsoever of technical skill or the construction of new products:—the exercise of crafts and industries of all kinds, including occasionally even practical aptitudes such as Household Management (οἰκονομική). This is the sense in 4 § 1 above, where the former or 'arts proper' are accordingly distinguished from practical aptitudes by the addition of ὀρισμέναις, cp. n. (34). It is only in 11 § 6 that τεχνικώταται ἐργασίαι = occupation where artistic skill is most required: see n. (102).

Now in the Politics we have to deal throughout with the supremacy of practical reason (in the strict sense of the term) over the second part of the soul, the αἰσθητικόν or ὀρεκτικόν (cp. De Anima III. 7. 2 οὐχ ἕτερον τὸ ὀρεκτικόν καὶ φευκτικόν, οὐτ' ἀλλήλων οὔτε τοῦ αἰσθητικοῦ· ἀλλὰ τὸ εἶναι ἄλλο) in regard to its appetitive or emotional, and not to its sentient or percipient side. Obedience to this supremacy constitutes moral or ethical virtue, virtue of character, ἦθος. Cp. I. 13. 6 n., Nic. Eth. I. 7 § 12 f., 13 § 10 f.; VI. 12 § 6. SUSEM. (40)

§ 8 16 ὅσοι... 17 θηρίου] Cp. III. 11. 5 καίτοι τί διαφέρουσιν ἐνιοὶ τῶν θηρίων, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν; How is the existence of such men possible, on Aristotle's own psychology? There is a difference of kind between man and the brutes, the latter not having a rational part of the soul (see n. on § 6 above); but between the most perfect and the least perfect of men there is at most but a difference of degree, even when in the latter this rational part is reduced to the minimum immediately described, n. (45). We must understand Aristotle to follow the general current of Greek ideas and the usage of language when "he regards bestial limitation to sensual enjoyments, callousness to insult, indifference to knowledge, coarseness and vulgarity in act or speech in general as a servile, degraded disposition ἀνδραποδῶδᾶ" (Schiller, who quotes Orelli Aris-

20 τοῖς εἰρημένοις] τῷ σώματι, τῷ παθητικῷ μορίῳ, τῷ θηρίῳ, τῷ θήλει (Congreve).

§ 9 21 διὸ καὶ ἄλλου ἔστιν] As a general rule slavery is due to a natural inferiority. But this must not be pressed too far: from c. 6 an unjust slavery is possible, cum hi sunt alterius qui sui possunt esse, Cic. De Rep. III. § 37 (Congreve). SUSEM. (44)

22 ὅσον αἰσθάνεσθαι ἀλλὰ μὴ ἔχειν] In c. 13 § 14 the capacity to admit reason or understand its commands (αἰσθάνεσθαι) is ascribed to these natural slaves in a higher degree than to children (see note), for children, while their reason is still undeveloped, attend too much to the mere suggestions of the instincts and passions of sense; Nic. Eth. I. 3. 6, III. 12. 6. Moreover Aristotle is here asserting more than his own psychology justifies: for what he here leaves to the slave's practical reason is more correctly attributed to the irrational soul, that is, to speak accurately (see n. on § 6), the appetitive soul, in IV (VII). 14 § 9, cp. Nic. Eth. I. 13. 15 f.: namely, the capacity of allowing itself to be guided by practical reason. As the power to reflect is to Aristotle amongst the most essential peculiarities of the practical reason—see n. (40) on § 6—this cannot with any consistency be wholly denied to the slave as it is here and c. 13 § 7 (where see note) if it be once granted that the slave's soul has a rational part under which is included the possession of practical reason. At the most there can be merely an approximation to the state here described. See further on c. 13 § 12.

Λόγος, which here=reason, is the βουλευτικόν of 13 § 7 (see n.): more precisely, ὀρθὸς λόγος in the Ethics, right or sound understanding as the law and criterion of human action in the sphere of practice and morals. Preëminent skill in the exercise of this λόγος is φρόνησις=insight, prudence: see Zeller op. c. II ii 652 f., Walter op. c. 353—503. Aristotle is consistent when he allows φρόνησις to none but the φύσει δεσπότης: I. 13. 8 n. (115), III. 4. 17 n. (497). But if the φύσει δοῦλος were wholly devoid of practical reason of his own he would, by Aristotle's own definition, cease to be a human being and to possess even the scanty remains of capacity for human and moral virtue which is left him according to c. 13 §§ 1—14: cp. Poetics c. 15 § 1 with my note (19 b). He would then be reduced to the level of the brute, in himself unable to resist the promptings of sensual desires. See n. p. 211. SUSEM. (45)

23 λόγῳ αἰσθ.] On αἰσθησις, αἰσθάνεσθαι see n. (570) upon III. 11. 9. SUSEM. (45 b) If λόγῳ is the right reading, then the copula is omitted as if αἰσθανόμενα were an adjective: "the other animals (are) not attentive to reason, but obey their passions."

 Herod. v. 47. This remark has a truly Hellenic ring. To the Greek, mental worth is necessarily and naturally presented in a harmonious external form;
 and in the very beauty of the race, of which he was thoroughly conscious, Aristotle finds direct proof of its superiority to the barbarians. What a complete justification this for the slavery of the black and coloured races! Zeller op. c. II ii

Lang however from another point of view justly remarks op. c. Essays 60:
 "we must remember no one would have been more bitter than Aristotle against the negro-slavery on plantations of modern days. To turn the servants of the noble life into tools of limitless money-making would have been, in his view, unnatural. We must remember also, that he would have held up the promise and reward of freedom, to stimulate his serfs to virtuous lives, and, with freedom in prospect, and friendship in the meantime, with every lovely rite of divine service performed for their sake, there may have been worse lives than those of the Greek slaves." SUSEM. (47)

c. 6 There is then one species of slavery, which is natural. But there is another species, conventional slavery: § 1. The justice of the convention which allows prisoners taken in war to be sold for slaves is unconditionally challenged by some (A) and defended by others (E): § 2. The reason why there are these conflicting views, and why nevertheless they have a common ground, is the implication of virtue and superior force. The issue turns on what constitutes right and justice: § 3. Weakness of the one view (A), which implies a denial of the right of superior virtue to rule: § 4. Others (C), again, argue that all slavery, so far as it is legal, is just: but the war might be unjust, and they would refuse to apply their principle consistently to captive Greeks: § 5. This refusal leads them back to τὸ φύσει δοῦλον: § 6. Illustration from the conception of nobility: § 7. Men are marked off for true freedom and true nobility by virtue (ἀρετή): § 8. Recapitulation: §§ 9, 10.

See Excursus II.; Hampke in Philologus XXIV. 1866. 172—175, who compares IV(VII). 2 §§ 12—18; in The Transactions of Camb. Philol. Soc. II. 1883 Jackson pp. 111—116, Postgate pp. 119—123, Ridgeway pp. 128—130; and Susemihl in Hermes XIX. 1884. 576—588. The chapter reminds us of N. Eth. I. cc. 8—12, in so far as Aristotle is testing his theoretical conclusions by a comparison with various received opinions.

§ 1 1255 a 1 ff. "It is thus plain that in certain cases there are natural freemen and natural slaves, for the latter of whom the estate of slavery is both advantageous and just. And yet it is easy to see that those who maintain the opposite" viz. of the doctrine of natural slavery (against Ridgeway 129 f) "do, to a certain extent, argue correctly. For the terms slavery and slave are used in two senses. <Besides the natural> there is also the conventional slave and conventional slavery; this convention being a species of agreement whereby the conquered in war are declared the property of their conquerors."

6 ὁ γὰρ νόμος... 7 φασίν] Xenophon Cyr. VII. 5. 73 νόμος γὰρ ἐν πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις αἰδιός ἐστιν, ὅταν πολεμοῦντων πόλις ἀλφῶ, τῶν ἐλόντων εἶναι καὶ τὰ σώματα τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει καὶ τὰ χρήματα (Congreve). It is well known that customs and usages purely conventional and resting on mere tradition were called νόμοι by the Greeks and considered more sacred and venerable than the written laws: III. 16 § 9 ἐτι κυριώτεροι καὶ περὶ κυριωτέρων τῶν κατὰ γράμματα νόμων οἱ κατὰ τὰ ἔθνη εἰσίν, and VII (VI). 5 § 2. Yet these "unwritten laws" are regarded as if each of them could be derived from a definite law-giver: see on II. 9 §§ 12, 14. SUSEM. (48) Cp. Grote Plato I. 249 f., 252 n.

repeated. Proceedings had to be commenced within a year from the day when the proposal was made or adopted; otherwise the proposer escaped a personal prosecution. The illegality might consist in the substance of the proposal, in its form, or in both at once. A decree (ψήφισμα) would be formally unconstitutional if brought before the popular assembly without consent of the βουλή previously obtained, although there might be no decree proposed by the βουλή on the same subject which it could contravene' (Meier and Schömann Attischer Process 283 f.). The comparison here relates to illegality in substance, for the sense is that the convention or positive law in question violates natural law. SUSEM. (49)

9 ὥς δεινὸν κτλ] "on the ground that it is monstrous if mere ability to subdue by force, and superiority in might alone, shall give ownership and rule over that which it subdues." The representatives of this view are no doubt the same as those who declare all slavery to be contrary to nature: see § 4, τοῖς μὲν εὐνοία δοκεῖ τὸ δίκαιον εἶναι and 3 § 1, τοῖς δὲ παρὰ φύσιν τὸ δεσπόζειν, where see note. SUSEM. (49b) Note the genitive after ἀρχόμενον, "subject of the coercer".

11 "This then is their view: others again take the former view" (ἐκείνως): namely, that prescribed by the convention or positive law mentioned in § 1: δοκεῖ ἐκείνως repeats the φασίν of line 7. For convenience we may denote by (A) the opponents (τοῖς μὲν), and by (B) the defenders of conventional slavery (τοῖς δὲ); the view of the latter is shared, though on other grounds, by a third party (C) the τινές of line 22.

§ 3 12 "The reason of the conflict" between (A) and (B) "and what" at the same time "makes the (two opposed) views overlap." The general sense, as explained p. 206, is that (i) the views of (A) and (B) stand sharply opposed (cp. 19 διαστάντων χωρὶς), and yet (ii) they have a common point of contact, the two distinct facts (i) and (ii) being due to one and the same cause, the implication of virtue and force.

Bernays differently, see p. 209. SUSEM. (51)

13 λόγους, often taken as = arguments, or again as = propositions, should be explained more widely as "the propositions [conventional slavery is just, is unjust] together with the arguments supporting them and the conclusions adopted in consequence of them," thus nearly = views or reasonings (Postgate op. c. 121, 123 n.), 'platforms' (Heitland), theories.

ἐπαλλάττειν, as in I. 9. 15, VI(IV). 10. 2, VII(VI). 1. 3; see Heitland's examination of these passages Notes 11—13, and the passages collected by Jackson op. c. 114 n. Bonitz Index s.v. compares ἐπαμφοτερίζειν and explains that from the sense of "to alternate" it comes to be applied ad ea quae inter duo genera ita sunt interposita ut cum utroque cohaerant. "Said of two different, or even opposite, things or views which yet have something in common and again approximate or meet or even cross or run into each other or are in inseparable connexion" (Susem.). Oncken took it of 'arguments crossed or traversed by counter arguments.' Heitland and Jackson of 'propositions overlapping': but the former thinks these are the sub-contraries (a) some slavery is just, (b) some slavery is unjust: the latter holds that it is the λόγοι of (A) and (B)—all slavery is unjust, all slavery is just—which 'overlap': because the "slaveries which (A) pronounces unjust, (B) pronounces just." (See by all means the context of this remark, Ex. II. p. 208.)

τρόπον τινὰ κτλ] "in a sense virtue, provided it finds proper appliances, is in fact best able to subdue by force, and the conquering side always has advantage in good of some sort." These two clauses are not opposed (against Jackson 114 f., Postgate 122), they merely put the same thing in a different form. There is always a presumption that βία carries with it ἀρετή: this is the common ground where the two contending parties meet, and here Aristotle also agrees with them. But from this they draw opposite inferences as to the nature of τὸ δίκαιον, as to when it is just to use force.

13—16 δι...βίαν] Fülleborn remarks with truth that the qualifications necessary here (amounting in all to ceteris paribus) really make the whole theory futile, because 'other things' in this connexion are so seldom 'equal'. Bodily qualities, superior numbers and weapons, all sorts of external circumstances often largely contribute to victory. Conquest is no valid proof of the higher excellence of the conqueror: besides, the one kind of mental capacity which has contributed to his victory is no guarantee that he also possesses the other which qualifies him for wise government, above all for the exercise of despotic rule over a conquered foe. Nevertheless Aristotle would be borne out by a belief in the moral government of the world*: in the main, success attends upon the most capable nations. SUSEM. (50)

15 ὥστε δοκεῖν κτλ.] "hence it seems that force to coerce is never independent of virtue, but that the dispute turns on the nature of right and justice."

§ 4 17 f. ("For this reason some take the mutual goodwill" of governors and governed "to constitute right, others stand on the naked right of the stronger to rule.") The parenthesis is due to Ridgeway; Heitland saw that 'this remark breaks the course of the argument' (p.
 14). The grounds for the view of (B), which had not been stated above §§ 1, 2,
 are now given by διὰ τούτο.

τοῖς μὲν] Clearly again the unqualified opponents of slavery. SUSEM. (50 b)

Jackson, 115 n., first proved that one meaning of εὖνοια is 'loyalty: the willing obedience which an inferior renders to a kind and considerate superior'. To take it solely to mean 'the goodwill of governors to governed' seriously invalidates the protest of the anti-slavery party παρὰ φύσιν εἶναι τὸ δεσπόζειν; masters might always urge the plea that they held their slaves from disinterested motives.

 Giphanius notes well: benevolentia et peperit. Cp. vii(vi). 5 § 4, § 10; viii(v).

 11 § 11: ἀναγκαῖον εὖρους εἶναι ταῖς τυ- ραννίσιν sc. τοῖς δούλοις καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας.

18 τὸν κρείττονα ἄρχειν] Cp.
Thuc. v. 105. 2, Plato Gorgias 483 c f.

19 ἐπεὶ answers the sentence 15 ὥστε
δοκεῖν... "If however these two views stand opposed and apart, the former has neither force nor plausibility, (implying as it does) that the superior in virtue has no right to rule and be master." χωρὶς is used pre-dicatively, διαστάντων is the opposite of ἐπαλλάττει: if the point of contact between the two views be lost, if they stand opposed without any community.
 For the sense of separation the passage quoted by Jackson (see p. 208) De long. et brev. vitae, 464 b 26, is most instructive: πότερον ταῦτ' ἀμακρόβια καὶ
τὴν φύσιν ὑγιενὰ τῶν φύσει συνεστῶτων, ἢ κεχώρισται καὶ τὸ βραχύβιον καὶ τὸ νοσώδες, ἢ κατ' ἐνίας μὲν νόσους ἐπαλλάττει τὰ νοσώδη τὴν φύσιν σώματα τοῖς βραχυβίοις, κατ' ἐνίας δ' οὐδὲν κωλύει νοσώδεις εἶναι μακροβίους ὄντας. Others (Schneider, Jackson, Postgate, Ridgeway) take διαστάντων=si per se ponantur, 'if disentangled,' each taken separately.

20 ἄτεροι λόγοι=one of the two sets of arguments advanced, that of (A).
 Postgate (op. c. 123) thinks ἄτερος λόγος would be clearer. Schneider took it= neutra ratio: to which Hampke rejoined that this sense requires οὐδέτεροι. Jackson however still maintains that it is a true plural 'as in 13 τοῖς λόγοις', but then we should have ἀμφότεροι: his novel and ingenious interpretation, op. c. 115 f., departs widely from that here given. Hampke also takes 19 τούτων τῶν λόγων as a singular of one view and hence infers that ἅτεροι λόγοι denotes one view also: M. Croiset, 'les opinions de nos adversaires'.

ὡς οὐ δεῖ, exegetic of λόγοι, 'the view namely that...'. But Jackson following Heinsius makes it depend on πῶσαν: "plausibility to shew that it is not the right of superiority in virtue to rule". Why does Aristotle expose the weakness of (A)? He admits εὐνοια as the principle regulating the relations of citizens in the normal πολιτεία, but as between master and slave it is not to supersede the right of virtue to rule.

§ 5 21 Take ὅλως with ἀντεχόμενοι. "Others again simply holding fast to something just and right as they suppose (for whatever is legal is just) admit the justice of slavery in accordance with the laws of war, but in the same breath withdraw the admission. For not only may the war have had an unjust origin, but further no one would call him, who is undeserving of slave's estate, a slave. Else it will follow that men who are held to be of the noblest birth are slaves or come of servile ancestry, if they" [or their ancestors] "happen to have been taken prisoners and sold":—as Plato was by Dionysios. The view of (c), 22 τινές, is substantially the common opinion in Greece, with its latent inco-sistencies. ὅλως was taken by Hampke = 'embracing both the former views'. Ridgeway (op. c. 130) objects that 'if Aristotle was enunciating another theory here, he would have used ἐτι δέ'. It will be found upon comparison of De Anima I. 5 §§ 10, 11 410 b 2 and Meteor. II. 3 §§ 14, 15 357 b 10, 12, that ὅλως and ἐτι δέ are used in parallel clauses to introduce distinct objections, the order of the clauses being indifferent.

§ 6 28 διόπερ κτλ] "Hence they refuse to call their own countrymen slaves, and only apply the term to barbarians": αὐτοὺς used absolutely for αὐτοὺς < τοὺς Ἕλληνας > which comes to the same thing as 33 αὐτούς. Eaton compares the noble conduct of Callicratidas, Xen. Hell. I. 6, 14.

30 οὐδὲν ἄλλο κτλ] In making this qualification they are really on their way to the principle of natural slavery laid down by us at the first: they are compelled to admit that in certain cases there is a distinction between two classes, the one who are everywhere, the others who are nowhere, slaves. Having thus reduced the intermediate view of (c) to its right sense Aristotle has no need to refute at length the extreme views of (A) and (B).

§ 8 39 ὅταν δὲ] From VI(IV). 8. 9, VIII(V). I. 7 (cp. III. 13. 3, Rhet. I. 8. 5) we learn that true nobility is a combination of wealth with high excellence hereditary in a family, ἀρετῇ καὶ πλοῦτος ἀρχαῖος.

How far this third or intermediate view of slavery and the limits within which it is justified as natural agrees with that of Aristotle himself, is more clearly seen from the discussion in IV (VII). 7 §§ 1—3, where see nn. (780, 781). The question there is, to what are we to ascribe the higher endowments and ‘virtue’ which distinguish the Greeks from other races and make the latter their born slaves? Only Aristotle there more precisely restricts this relation to the Asiatic portion of the non-Hellenic nations, as indeed he does before III. 14. 6, δουλικώτεροι τὰ ἤθη οἱ μὲν βάρβαροι τῶν Ἑλλήνων, οἱ δὲ περὶ τὴν

Ἀσίαν τῶν περὶ τὴν Ἑυρώπην. The other references are I. 2 § 4, 5 § 8 f., 6 § 4, 7 § 3 f., 8 § 12: IV (VII). 2 §§ 15, 16, 9 § 18, 14 § 21 with the note

In his whole doctrine Aristotle follows, in the main, the indications of his master. Plato in like manner condemns the enslavement of Hellenes by Hellenes; Rep. v. 469 B f., 471 A f. Oncken remarks: “what Aristotle requires however as the visible and palpable mark of innate slavery is not the deformity which Theognis has in view, but a greater endowment of rough muscular force. He overlooks the fact that the domestic service of the slave hardly demands more strength than the military service of the freeman, who needs a good deal besides mere erect stature”. SUSEM. (55)

Eudemian Ethics, VII. 9. 2 1241 b 17 ff., withdraws the concession: since there is the same relation between soul and body, craftsman and tools, master and slave, in these cases there is no association (κοινωνία) possible. οὐ γὰρ δύ' ἐστίν, ἀλλὰ τὸ μὲν ἐν, τὸ δὲ τοῦ ἐνός (the two members of such a relation are not independent). οὐδὲ διαιρετὸν τὸ ἀγαθὸν ἐκατέρῳ, ἀλλὰ ἀμφοτέρων τὸ ἐνός οὐ ἑνὲκά ἐστιν (the good of the one is not separable from the good of the other, the good of both is the good of that one of the two for whose sake the other exists). τό τε γὰρ σῶμά ἐστιν ὄργανον σύμφυτον, καὶ τοῦ δεσπότου ὁ δούλος ὥσπερ μύριον καὶ ὄργανον ἀφαιρετόν. That even a slave is a man is emphasized in another fragment of Philemon, besides the one quoted on 3 § 4, viz. Ἐξοικισζόμενος 28: κἀν δούλος ἦ τις, οὐθὲν ἦττον, δέσποτα, [ἄνθρωπος οὐτός ἐστιν, ἂν ἄνθρωπος ἦ. Cp. Becker Charicles III. 12 (ed. 2), Eng. tr. p. 357. Consult further Pol. IV (VII). 8 §§ 1—4 n. c. 7. Δεσποτεία then, or rule over slaves, is not the same as statecraft: § 1. Nor does the relation of δεσπότης depend upon science: § 2. In what sense there may be a science of the duties (1) of slaves (2) of slaveowners (the latter quite distinct from ἡ κτητική, sc. δούλων): §§ 3—5.

"It is plain that here and I § 1 Aristotle is thinking of Plat. Polit. 258 E sq. esp. 259 B. It is however a mistake to attribute the doctrine, without qualification, to Plato, who at 268 D introduces a long and elaborate myth with the express intention of warning us, that though the shepherd-king of the theocratic period exercised all regulative functions indiscriminately, this state of things ended with the Saturnian age. See by all means 274 E sqq. From this point to the end of the dialogue the Eleate is mainly engaged in discriminating the πολιτικός from a host of rivals. Clearly the doctrine in question is at variance with the whole tenor of the Republic. May we not attribute it, on the strength of Xenoph. Memorab. III. 4 § 12, Oecon. 13 § 5, to Socrates?" (Jackson).

20 A similar distinction between ἡ τῶν ἐλευθέρων καὶ ἴσων ἀρχή and ἡ δεσποτική is seen in Nic. Eth. v. 6 § 4, § 8, where Jackson refers to Pol. IV (VII). 14 §§ 6, 7, § 19. See his notes.

As was shown in n. (54) on c. 6 § 8, Plato is very far from denying the one because he asserts the other. He too, like Aristotle, regards the more capable as the natural ruler, but for that very reason assigns the perfect art of ruling, of whatever kind, to those alone who in the strict sense have knowledge, i.e. to the philosophers: for, on the Socratic principle that all virtue or

But it may be inferred from c. 8 § 12, διὸ καὶ ἡ πολεμικὴ φύσει κτητικῇ πως ἔσται (ἢ γὰρ θηρευτικὴ μέρος αὐτῆς), ἢ δεῖ χρῆσθαι πρὸς τὰ θηρία καὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ὅσοι πεφυκότες ἀρχεσθαι μὴ θέλουσιν, that under the one genus 'offensive war' Aristotle includes two species: (1) the chase, a war against wild animals, (2) war conducted for the capture of slaves.

πρὸς τὰ θηρία (θηρευτικῇ)

πρὸς τοὺς φύσει δούλους

If this be so, he knows nothing of an art of 'man-hunting': and the words at the end, 38 ἢ θηρευτικῇ, must be an interpolation. Cp. further I. 2 § 4 n. (11), 6 § 8 nn. (54, 56), IV (VII). 2 § 15 οὐ δεῖ πάντων πειρᾶσθαι δεσπόμεν, ἀλλὰ τῶν δεσποστῶν, ὥσπερ οὐδὲ θηρεύειν ἐπὶ θοίνην ἢ θύσαν ἀνθρώπους ἀλλὰ τὸ πρὸς τοῦτο θηρευτὸν nn. (727, 728): IV (VII). 14 § 21, where one object of military training is τὸ δεσπόμεν τῶν ἀξίων δουλεύειν. SUSEM. (65)

This view, that θηρευτικῇ is a species of πολεμικῇ, Jackson cannot accept. On the contrary, from 8 § 12 (just quoted) he infers that to Aristotle (as to Plato Soph. 222 B, Laws 823 B) πολεμικῇ is a species of θηρευτικῇ: see his note on that passage. He translates here, "the art of acquiring slaves, that is, the just art of acquiring slaves, is distinct from both of these," from δουλικῇ and δεσποτικῇ, "being a species of the art of war or the art of hunting."

cc. 8—11 περὶ πάσης κτήσεως καὶ χρηματιστικῆς.

c. 8 In what relation does χρηματιστικῇ stand to Economic? Is it (1) the same science, or (2) a branch of it, or (3) a subsidiary science? It is not the same, for it serves a different purpose, accumulation: §§ 1, 2. Whether it is a branch or not is disputed, and must be decided for each of the various species of χρηματιστικῇ separately: § 3.

Review of the various natural modes of subsistence: §§ 4—12.

The natural art of production (κτητικῇ), which has for its object the accumulation of natural wealth within due limits, is a branch of Economic: §§ 13—15.

For this section of the work consult Ludw. Schneider Die staatswirthschaftlichen Lehren usw (The theories of Political Economy in the Politics), pt. I Deutsch-Krone, 1868, pt. II Neu-Ruppin, 1873: Glaser De Aristotelis doctrina de divitiis (Königsberg 1856. 4) with Bendixen's review in Philologus xvi. 498 f.: Hampke Bemerkungen (Remarks on Pol. I.) There can be little doubt that Aristotle wrote with especial reference to Plato: Rep. II. 370 B—372 A, Laws XI. 918 A—920 C (cp. VIII. 831 E, 849 D), Soph. 219 A f., 222 B ff., 223 C, D, Politicus 287 C—290 A, etc.

§ 1 1256 a 1 χρηματιστικῇ is applied (1) to the whole art of acquisition, being thus completely identical with κτητικῇ. In this sense the term was introduced at 3 § 3 (cp. 4 § 1 n.) and this holds throughout c. 8, and in 9 § 4. In a narrower sense it is used (2) for the acquisition by exchange, μεταβλητικῇ, of the kind of wealth which in Aristotle's view is unnatural, i.e. not for use, but to exchange again at a profit. In this sense χρηματιστικῇ 'money-making, profit-making' = καπηλικῇ 'trade.' So from c. 9 § 1 onwards. Again in 9 § 12, 10 § 2 it is used (3) for that part of the art of acquisition which, as opposed to (2), is directed solely to natural wealth and is intimately connected with Economic. Plainly (3)=ἡ ἀναγκαία χρηματιστικῇ,

5 καὶ εἰ ὑπηρ. κτλ.] The more precise way in which this third possibility is expressed leads us to anticipate a decision in its favour (Hampke). However when the decision comes to be made, 10 §§ 1—3, it only has a preference given it; it is not exclusively adopted, as Hampke thinks. That the question, in which of the two senses χρημ. is auxiliary to Economic, is never taken up is most surprising. We can only conjecture the answer from passing hints: see on 10 § 2. SUSEM. (67)

7 ἢ μὲν ὄργανα...ἢ δὲ τὴν ὕλην] The one provides tools to work with, the other raw material to work up (Oncken). SUSEM. (67 b)

This distinction comes from Plato Politicus 287 C, ὅπως <τέχναι> παρείχοντο ὄργανα περὶ τὴν ὑφαντικὴν...ἐτίθεμεν ὡς συναιτίους: 288 D, E τὸ δὲ πᾶσι τοῦτοις

σώματα παρέχον ἐξ ὧν καὶ ἐν οἷς δημιουργοῦσιν ὁπόσαι τῶν τεχνῶν νῦν εἰρηνται (Jackson). So too the conception of ὑπηρετικὰ τέχναι comes from the Politicus 281 E: ὅσαι μὲν τὸ πρᾶγμα αὐτὸ μὴ δημιουργοῦσι, ταῖς δὲ δημιουργούσαις ὄργανα παρασκευάζουσιν...ταύτας μὲν ξυναιτίους <τέχναι>. The Eleate quotes τὰς μὲν περὶ τε ἀτράκτους καὶ κερκίδας as the first examples of ξυναιτίαι τέχ. (Eaton).

§ 2 8 ὕλην τὸ ὑποκείμενον κτλ.] Plato denotes this by τὸ πρωτογενὲς ἀνθρώποις κτῆμα Politicus 288 E: but ὕλη occurs in Phil. 54 C φημὶ δὴ γενέσεως μὲν ἕνεκα...πάντ' ὄργανα καὶ πᾶσαν ὕλην παρατίθεσθαι πᾶσι.

14 Two alternatives are given in § 1, ἢ μέρος τι ἢ ὑπηρετικὴ, and it is not easy to see what has become of the latter in the statement here πότερον μέρος αὐτῆς ἢ ἕτερον εἶδος and in § 3, 17 ἢ γεωργικὴ πότερον μέρος τι ἢ ἕτερον γένος. For reasons given in Excursus III. on Bk. I. p. 209 q. v., both alternatives of § 1 should be supposed included under μέρος, that term being so loosely used as to include even an auxiliary science. § 3 15 Vahlen (see critical notes) takes εἰ γὰρ to mean "if namely" as in Alkidamas De soph. II, 12 ἀρ' οὐκ εὐθες ἡμᾶς ἄλλην τινὰ ποιέσθαι μελέτην λόγων; εἰ γὰρ οἱ τοῖς ὀνόμασιν ἐξεργασμένοι... ἀπιστίας καὶ φθόνου τὰς τῶν ἀκούοντων γνώμας ἐμπιπλάσι, and Aris. Rhet. III. 17. 11 εἰ γὰρ Ἀχιλλέα λέγων Πηλέα ἐπαινεί, εἶτα Διάκον, εἶτα τὸν θεόν, ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ἀνδρίαν, ἡ (ms. ἦ) τὰ καὶ τὰ ποιεῖ ἡ τοιούδε ἐστίν. Elsewhere γὰρ appears redundant, or rather, no apodosis is expressed to the sentence introduced by it: Nic. Eth. VIII. 8. 6 οἱ χρήσιμοι δὲ καὶ ἡδεῖς ἐπὶ πλεον διαμένουσιν· ἔως γὰρ (so long namely as) ἂν πορίζωσιν ἡδονὰς ἡ ὠφελείας ἀλλήλοις: so ἐπεὶ γὰρ Rhet. II. 25. 10, ἡ γὰρ Pol. VI (IV). 8. 6, ὅτε μὲν γὰρ VIII (V). 1. 8. "See however Spengel Aris. Poet. u. Vahleus neueste Bearbeitung p. 13 ff." (Susemihl).

16 The elements of wealth enumerated in Rhet. I. 5 § 7 (and Pol. II. 7 § 21) are γῆς, χωρίων κτήσις, ἐτι δὲ ἐπίπλων κτήσις καὶ βοσκημάτων καὶ ἀνδραποδῶν: also νομίσματος πλῆθος which, according to c. 9 below, is not true wealth.

17 πρῶτον] There is no word like δεύτερον which expressly corresponds to this, cp. Poet. 13 § 2. What, we may ask, answers to it in substance? Either (i) the expression is again inexact, and ἡ περὶ τὴν τροφὴν ἐπιμέλεια must be extended to the industries concerned with all the other necessities of life—shelter clothing tools, all things in general which Aristotle calls 'instruments for life and wellbeing,' including slaves—if directly produced or acquired by plunder without resort to exchange. If so, Exchange is the δεύτερον. This view is supported by the actual use of τροφή in a wider sense than food, for sustenance generally; "subsistence," § 8, 10 §§ 1, 3. (In these passages acquisition by exchange must be understood as well as that branch of χρηματιστικῆ which, because directed to procuring the requisite subsistence, really belongs to economic science: but this does not affect the present question.)

Or, (ii) if all that is meant is direct production and appropriation of food, in the strict sense of the term, then we must look for "secondly" in the remarks on the procurement of clothing and tools from the proceeds of the chase or from animals under domestication, § 11, and on the capture of slaves, § 12. In any case, whatever the grounds for supposing the text defective (see on § 12 n. 74), this is not one. SUSEM. (70)

§§ 6—8 Smith Wealth of nations Introd. Chap., Mill Pol. Econ. I. pp. 11 ff. rightly place lowest in the scale the savages who depend upon casual hunting or fishing, although in such a life fits of prolonged and strenuous exertion alternate with periods of indolence. In Homer the cannibal Cyclopes are a pastoral people. As Aristotle thought that all domesticated animals had once been wild, Hist. anim. I. 1. 29 488 a 30 ff., he must have overlooked the labour of taming them; cp. n. above on § 5 7.

31 The Scythians, or such North African tribes as Herodotus describes, IV. 186, would represent these νομάδες. They are wholly distinct from the non-migratory νομεῖς of Hellenic democracies, VII (VI). 4. 11.

32 "The cattle being forced to shift their quarters for pasturage the owners must also go about with them, as farmers to whom live-stock serves instead of land."

§ 7 36 ληστείας] It is highly characteristic of the Greek philosopher that while he is indignant against trade and particularly against lending money on interest, 9 § 9 ff., 10 §§ 4, 5, he includes piracy as one species of the chase amongst the direct natural modes of acquisition or production, and therefore as appropriate to a householder. He was led to this by the observation that not only do certain uncivilized tribes live by plunder, and combine with a nomad life a life of brigandage, but also amongst the most ancient Greeks, as Thuc. I. 5 precisely informs us, piracy was rather honourable than disgraceful οὐκ ἔχοντός πω αἰσχύνην τούτου τοῦ ἔργου φέροντος δέ τι καὶ δόξης μάλλον, cp. Hom. Od. III. 73, IX. 252: and even later it was usual amongst the Locrians and other Hellenic peoples (Thuc. I. 5, II. 32, IV. 9. 2). Here he has forgotten his own principle, that the true nature of a thing must not be sought in its beginnings, but in its perfect development, 2 § 8. A strong national prejudice is apparent in all this, but it is well known that the earlier centuries of the Christian era had the same aversion to lending on interest (see Introd. 30), while many barbarities were allowed without scruple, as for instance the right to plunder wrecks, which Schlosser (I. 47 n.) adduces as a parallel. See Introd. 27 f. SUSEM. (71)

§ 10 12 ὅσα σκωληκοτοκεῖ ἢ ῥοτοκεῖ] Aristotle erroneously believed that insects lay no eggs, but produce worms or maggots which are then transformed through several metamorphoses into the perfect insect: see Aubert and Wimmer Introd. to the De generatione animal. p. 14, Meyer Thierkunde des Ar. p. 201 f. What he says of the difference between worm and egg serves in particular to explain this passage. Thus De gener. anim. II. 1 §§ 8—12, 732 a 25 ff.: one species of animals, the viviparous, bring forth young like themselves fully developed; others bear offspring not yet organized or of perfect form, and of these the vertebrates

(τὰ ἐναίμα) lay eggs, while the invertebrates (τὰ ἄναιμα) breed worms. The difference between egg and worm is this: if the young animal is developed from a part and the rest serves as nourishment for it, it is an egg: but if the whole of the young animal proceeds from the whole of what is produced, it is a worm. Also Hist. anim. I. 5. 3. 489 b 6 ff.: a perfect germ (κύημα) is called an egg when one part of it serves for the formation and another for the nourishment of the young animal developed out of it, a worm when the whole animal is developed out of the whole of the germ by its organization and growth: cp. ib. v. 19. 2. 550 b 28 ff. ἐκ δὲ τῶν σκωλήκων οὐκ ἐκ μέρους τινὸς γίνεταί τὸ ζῶον, ὥσπερ ἐκ τῶν ψῶν, ἀλλ' ὅλον αὐξάνεται καὶ διαθροῦμενον γίνεταί τὸ ζῶον, and De gener. anim. III. 2. 4. 752 a 27 f. οὐχ ὥσπερ οἱ σκώληκες αὐτὰ δι' αὐτῶν (sc. τὰ ψά) λαμβάνει τὴν αὐξήσιν. It follows from these explanations that what Aristotle asserts in the present passage of worms is in reality only true of eggs. All that the former receive from the parent worm is that capacity for perfect self-development which is wanting in the egg. Cp. also 10 § 3 n. (96). SUSEM. (73)

§ 11 15 γενομένοις] "after they are born." The crude teleology of §§ 11, 12 is common to all the Socratics and was probably derived from Socrates himself: Xen. Mem. I. 4. 5 ff.

§ 12 23 διὸ καὶ ἡ πολεμικὴ κτλ] This does not directly follow from the foregoing. Some intermediate thought has to be supplied: < it must further be assumed that amongst men themselves the less perfect are formed for the service of the more perfect >. Cp. also n. (70) on § 3. SUSEM. (74)

"There are at least four ways of taking this passage. (1) Vettori Giphanius Schneider Bojesen make αὐτῆς and ἡ both refer to πολεμικῇ. (2) Lambin, Schnitzer, Stahr refer αὐτῆς to πολεμικῇ, ἡ to θηρευτικῇ. This is plainly absurd: for if θηρευτικῇ can be used against men as well as wild animals it is no longer μέρος πολεμικῆς, but at least as extensive as πολεμικῇ. (3) Garve, followed by Hampke p. 16, refers αὐτῆς to κτητικῇ, and ἡ to θηρευτικῇ. There are three objections to this: (α) It proves too much; for if we deduce the right to make war from the right to hunt, why should not captives be eaten?—a notion which Aristotle (?) IV (VII). 2. 15 expressly repudiates with abhorrence. (β) Wars of following order ἐστίν· οὐ ἐστὶ θησαυρισμός...ἢ οἰκίας ἀ δεῖ ἦτοι...ὅπως ὑπάρχει defence or to regain liberty can hardly be called hunting: the notion of hostility is the wider. (γ) The clause ὥς φύσει δι-καιον assigns a separate justification for the kind of war in question, which is not therefore deduced from the chase. It depends upon the view of slavery laid down in cc. 5, 6. (4) Sepulveda renders:

quo fit ut opes bello etiam parandi ratio
a natura quodammodo profisciscatur, making πολεμική an epithet of κτητική and μέρος αὐτῆς=μέρος πολεμικῆς κτητικῆς;
 he also refers ἦ to θηρευτική. But though this gives excellent sense it involves transposing φύσει after κτητικῆς;
 and there is hardly good evidence of two adjectives in -ική so combined, the one as attribute the other as substantive." SUSEM. Quaest. Crit. III. p. 6 f. Then translate: "hence the natural art of war will belong in a sense to the art of acquisition (for the chase is only one branch of it)" viz. of natural warfare, and θηρευ-τική, § 7, is αὐτόφωτος ἐργασία. "It" i.e. war "has to be employed not only against wild animals but also against all such men as, though naturally slaves, refuse submission, this species of war
 having a natural justification."

The view given above as (3)—αὐτῆς= κτητικῆς, ἣ=θηρευτικῆς—is supported by Jackson, who would extend the parenthesis to πόλεμον. He translates: 'natural warfare will in a sense be a branch of acquisition: for (1) the chase is a mode of acquisition, and (2) can be applied either against wild animals (in which case it is θηρευτική proper) or against natural slaves, who refuse to obey, that being a branch of war which has a natural justification.' He adds: "The διαίρεσις then is

From 7 § 5 it would appear that πολεμική is still further divided. So Plato, Soph. 222 c, includes ληστική, ἀνδραπο-διστική, and τυραννική under the general head of πολεμική, which is one of the two branches of ἡμεροθηρική."

 change ὃ, or else extract from it the sense

Money is an artificial means of facilitating this, not of natural origin but only due to custom and convention, see §§ 8—11 nn. (82, 83): though when applied within due limits it is not contrary to nature. The whole explanation would have been clearer, Fülleborn rightly observes, had Aristotle definitely stated what he means by 'trade' (καπηλική=huckstering, retail trade): viz. that it is a buying and exchanging "not for one's own wants, but in order to sell again". As it is, this is left to be inferred from the context. SUSEM. (79)

18 ὅσον γὰρ κτλ] "For the necessity of exchange is confined, as we saw, to the satisfaction of the exchangers' own wants." Cp. τοσαύτης=only so much 13 § 12.

§ 5 21 ἀλλ' ἤδη] but not until the society extended. Since trade is introduced at a later stage it is not 'natural'. Possibly directed against Plato's primitive state, the ἀθηναίη, ὑγίης, ὥν πόλις, Rep. II. 371 A—D: ἀγορὰ δὲ ἡμῖν καὶ νόμισμα ξύμβολον τῆς ἀλλαγῆς ἐνεκα γενή-σεται.

22 οἱ δὲ κεχωρ. κτλ] Bernays thought the addition of a word for "lacked" unnecessary, 'because this idea is implied in κεχωρισμένοι'. If so, as κεχωρ. <ἔτεροι> ἐτέρων=separated (or divided) one from this thing, another from that, so κεχωρ. πολλῶν should mean 'separated from many things'. But as Bernays gives 'division of possessions' i.e. separate property 'was introduced for many things' he must intend κεχωρισμένοι πολλῶν to stand for 'living in divided possession of', or in respect of, 'many things': a sense hardly possible in any case and quite inconceivable if the participle has a different construction with ἐτέρων. SUSEM.

Postgate would govern πολλῶν καὶ ἐτέρων by ἐκοινώνουν, supposing πολλῶν to be opposed to πάντων (as πλείστον is, II. 5. 27), and understanding ἐτέρων of the primary division of the joint-household into two: "again when the original household split into two, each half continued to hold in common a large part of the stock, viz. all that the other half left it".

§ 8 34 οὐ γὰρ εὐβάστακτον κτλ]
 Yet money is not by nature, but has its origin in mere convention! Here again Aristotle falls into the contradiction noticed in n. (71), seeking the true nature of man in violation of his own principle, before instead of in the normal development of civilization. Hence he ignores the fact which on other occasions (Poet.
 4 §§ 1—6) by no means escapes him, that there is no unconditional antithesis between nature and art, nature and convention, nature and civilization: that innumerable arts institutions and conventions take their origin from man's inmost nature in the course of its development.
 It is precisely so with the state, and as with the state so with money. That in history too the law of a rational necessity controls chance is a thought not sufficiently acknowledged in his works: see Poet. 9 §§ 2, 10, with my notes, and Reinkens op. c. 289 ff., who somewhat exaggerates. Cp. also below on II. 9 § 12 n.
 (296), § 30 n. (339), III. 3. 9 n. (466).
 SUSEM. (82)

35 διὸ πρὸς τὰς ἀλλαγὰς κτλ] On the origin of money compare Nic. Eth.
 v. 5 §§ 10—16 (1133 a 19 ff.): of which the substance is as follows.

All things which are to be exchanged must be somehow commensurable: and for this purpose money has been introduced, which serves as a sort of medium, for it measures all things, e.g. how many pairs of shoes are equivalent to a given house. The standard or common measure is in reality demand; but demand is conventionally represented by money which gets its name (νόμισμα = currency) because it is not by nature but by convention (νόμῳ), so that it is in our power to change and demonetize it (i.e. render it no longer current). If we do not require a thing now, money is still the guarantee of a future exchange, to take place if we require the thing at some other time.
 And although the value of money itself occasionally changes, yet it tends to be more constant than that of any other thing. All other commodities should therefore have a price set on them, that so exchange may always be possible.
 SUSEM. (83)

36 δ τῶν χρησίμων αὐτὸ ὄν] Schneider thinks this is not implied by the nature of money, since certain tribes use cowries as a medium of exchange, and the Ethiopians stones with marks engraved upon them (λίθοις ἐγγεγλυμμένοις Ps-Plato Eryx. 400 B). We admit the truth of this; yet only a metallic currency can fulfil the proper end of money, and from the nature of the case the really civilized races have always availed themselves of it.
 Aristotle however has failed to recognise this sufficiently: see § 11 n. (87) and Introd. 29. SUSEM. (84)

sion to the derivation of νόμισμα = money, currency, from νόμος = convention, current custom: see n. (83). It may be for the same reason that money is more pointedly said to be νόμος rather than νόμος, 'conventional', as we should expect. The same allusion in Pseudo-Plato Eryxias l. c. 5, n. (85) (Schneider). SUSEM. (86)

ὅτι μετατιθεμένων κτλ.] Although Aristotle himself, § 12, adopts the opinion that this form of wealth is οὐδὲν φύσει, yet here the view is carried much farther than he goes in § 8, see n. (84). 16 Μίδαν] This mythical king of Phrygia is said to have captured Silenos and restored him to Dionysos, who in return for the kind treatment of the prisoner allowed him to wish for whatever he liked. The fatal boon was subsequently withdrawn by the god at Midas' request, see Ovid Metamorph. XI. 90—145. Aristotle must have had a version of the story in which, instead of this happening, Midas died from hunger and thirst. Would the Midas of the legend have fared any better in the end, if all his food had been converted into drink, or all his drink into food? In the one case he would have been starved to death, in the other killed by thirst. SUSEM. (88)

27 τὰ πρὸς τὸ τέλος = means to the end.

28 πέρας...πάσαις] "For all arts are limited by their ends." True in cases where, after a certain limit has been passed, the number and amount of the means applied do not contribute anything to the attainment of the end, nay even hinder it. But does it also hold for the all-embracing end of human life, the happiness and perfection not of individuals but of whole nations and finally of the human race? Aristotle did not think of that: and no wonder, when we consider it is only the discovery of modern Political Economy, that capital is simply accumulated labour: that the means to continued progress in national civilization are guaranteed solely by the transmission and growth of the national wealth from generation to generation, which money first made possible. We ought rather, with Stahr and others (Introd. p. 28), to recognise Aristotle's penetrating insight, the ripeness and maturity of many of his conclusions in this

9th chapter, "the unpretending germ from which two thousand years afterwards grew the science of society". Cp. further IV (VII). I § 5 n. (695), n. (700). SUSEM. (90)

§ 14 30 If οὐ be changed or omitted, take τῆς οἰκονομικῆς as an adjective: so perhaps l. 39 below, and undoubtedly § 18, 1258 a 17: "but to that branch" of accumulation "which concerns the householder there is a limit". See however n. on 8 § 12, p. 177.

31 τοῦτο = to attain this limit, χρήματα ποιεῖν as Schneider says. τῇ μὲν "in one sense", viz. when regarded as an instrument. Lambin Schütz Bernays take it as "to the one branch", viz. that which concerns the householder.

37 τῆς μὲν κτλ] 'The one application has a different end' (viz. enjoyment, use) 'the other aims at mere accumulation'.

39 διατελοῦσιν κτλ] "persist through life in the opinion that they ought at least to hoard their stock of money if not to go on adding to it indefinitely": νομίσ. οὐσίαν=their substance or capital in money, Bonitz s. v. Better thus taken than as a paraphrase of νόμισμα, for which idiom see Waitz Org. I. 283 and cp. ἡ τοῦ ἐρνιθος οὐσία 693 b 6.

§ 16 This gives the reason why men fall into the error just noticed, the external cause, the trap into which they fall, having been stated in § 14: ταύτης τῆς διαθέσεως=τοῦ διατελεῖν ἢ σφῆζειν κτλ. (Postgate).

40 αἴτιον δὲ κτλ] 'Perhaps the thought becomes clearer' says Fülleborn 'when expressed as follows: men have a universal desire for long life, and without setting a definite aim before them,' without making clear to themselves wherein the value and happiness of life really consist, 'they work on incessantly to procure themselves the means of living through this indefinite series of years. Now if they would consider how to provide for present enjoyment' and for the ennobling of life, 'their desire for gain would be rendered more definite and limited'. SUSEM. (91)

1258 a 2 ὅσοι δὲ κτλ] "those who set their hearts upon a life of happiness look for it in sensual enjoyments": whereas, on Aristotle's own theory, the true embellishment and perfecting of life, i. e. happiness, consists in the utmost possible cultivation of mental and moral excellence, of which the highest and noblest enjoyments are but a necessary consequence, a moderate share of external goods and bodily pleasures being required not as constituent element but merely as indispensable condition: all beyond this hinders rather than promotes true Wellbeing. See Zeller Phil. d. Gr. II ii 609: cp. IV (VII). I §§ 7, 8. SUSEM. (92)

3 ἐπιβάλλονται] 'throw themselves upon' (cp. Hom. Il. VI. 68, ἐνάρων ἐπιβαλλόμενος) 'desire' in the same metaphorical sense as ὀρέγεσθαι, ἀντέχεσθαι. But otherwise II. I. 1 'to adopt'. For the intransitive use of the active see I. 13 §§ 8, 13. In Nic. Eth. I. 5 §§ 1, 2 ὁ ἀπολαυστικός βίος is the life of sensual enjoyment. As Plato explains Rep. IX. 580 e f., money is the means to this life, so that φιλοκερδές, φιλοχρήματον are convertible terms with τὸ ἐπιθυμητικόν: hence ὁ χρηματιστικὸς ἀνὴρ comes to be compared with ὁ φιλότιμος and ὁ φιλόσοφος.

makes against him. For it shows that the fault lies with the men and not with the ‘arts’. If men misuse not medicine merely, but moral virtues like courage, as a means to their own avarice and craving for pleasure; if they can follow agriculture, cattle-rearing, etc. in the same spirit; why are commerce trade and banking to be unceremoniously rejected merely because they can serve such men as a still readier and more successful means to the satisfaction of their desires?
Why should it be culpable in any one to carry on such pursuits merely to gain a living by them? (Glaser). It is true that if there were no stock exchange

there could be no speculation in stocks, and then no one would be tempted to such excessive indulgence in it as is certainly liable at times to endanger the morality of whole nations [as e.g. at the time of the South Sea Bubble]. But without the shadow no light; civilization is impossible without luxury. ‘In spite of many great evils which money has brought into the world it is to this invention alone that we owe the fact that nine-tenths of mankind are now no longer forced to serve that fortunate minority, the owners of real property. Think of the time when money was still scarce in Europe; the land then belonged almost exclusively to the clergy and the nobility. Money alone introduced a new species of commodity of inexhaustible ownership, which stands open to all to acquire’ (Schlosser). “Aristotle forgets, too, that, even before money was invented, people might find no limit to wealth-seeking. The ζῶη ἀσπετος of Odysseus, Od. XIV. 96, went beyond the limit of his consumption, and its aim was, not nurture, but power, as he could make

And is not the total result attained in itself truly surprising, namely, that the landowner who sells just enough produce to defray all his other household requirements is the sole householder (οἰκονόμος); whereas the merchant, the tradesman and the banker are not? Not unnaturally Plato and Aristotle looked only at the dark side of trade. Like true Greeks (Introd. pp. 22, 29 f.) their standpoint was still that of the fortunate minority supported by the remaining nine-tenths who serve: as is seen in their approval of slavery and their scheme of a body of citizens living a life of free leisure, without work, finding exclusive unpaid occupation in science, æsthetic enjoyment, and civil administration. Physical labour in Greece was for the most part converted by slavery into slave-labour. Thus all respect for it was lost: "when agriculture, trade, and work in factories or on board ships, were given up to serfs and slaves, the contempt for these occupations was made permanent, just because men saw them carried on by such people, as conversely they had originally been given up to serfs and slaves because they were thought unworthy for free citizens to follow" (Schiller). Even Plato and Aristotle thoroughly despised physical labour as something servile and, in the bad sense of the word, mechanical (banausic), as intellectually and morally degrading: see c. 11 § 6 with the passages quoted in n. (103). Consequently, trade and commerce, even the pursuit of agriculture proper—see IV (VII). 9 §§ 3, 7; 10 §§ 9—14, Exc. III on Bk. I, and Plato Laws VII. 806 D f.—all paid labour, see n. (102), appeared to them more or less unworthy of true freemen. It is a further consequence that, though Aristotle forcibly rejects the extreme developments of Plato's social and political theories, yet after all he is taking the same line with more prudence and reserve. See Introd. p. 21 nn. (1) and (3), p. 33 n. (7). SUSEM. (93)

§ 1 19 δῆλον δὲ κτλ] "But it will now be easy to decide the further question started at the outset, namely, whether the art of wealth is the concern of the householder and statesman or not, but" ... Then comes a lacuna which may tentatively be filled as follows: "but, <so far as in general needed for the management of a household, is the concern of a subordinate science. Plainly the latter is the case, and the former only so far as the head of the house has to see that the art of acquiring wealth is practised, without exercising it himself; for it is his function, as we said, to use and not to acquire. Furthermore it is an auxiliary science for procuring instruments for living and not the mere materials: these> must be given already." But the briefer and somewhat different restoration given in the critical notes is also admissible: "but <of some one else. For it is not his business to procure all that is necessary for living:> nay there must be definite materials found him beforehand." SUSEM. (94)

23 οὕτω καὶ τροφήν κτλ] "so nature must provide land or sea or something else as means of support." Lambin and Götting make γῆν ἢ θάλατταν epexegetic of τὴν φύσιν and Jackson shows that this is not impossible by citing Plato Laws 891 C, τὴν φύσιν ὀνομάζειν ταῦτα αὐτά, sc. πῦρ καὶ ὕδωρ καὶ γῆν καὶ ἀέρα. 24 ἐκ δὲ τούτων] afterwards, postea (Bonitz): answering τοῦτο μὲν. "And then it is the householder's duty to dispose of these materials to the best advantage (ὡς δεῖ)."

§ 2 25 οὐ γὰρ κτλ] From this illustration it would be inferred that the domestic branch of χρηματιστικὴ is related to οἰκονομική as shuttle-making to weaving, and not as the production of wool to weaving. Thus the question proposed 8 § 1 and not expressly taken up afterwards would have to be decided as follows: the domestic branch of χρηματιστικὴ provides the household with the needful raw materials for use, by artificial appropriation of nature's stores, so far as nature herself, whose especial function this is, has made no direct provision. On the other hand the sum total of the necessities of life are certainly called elsewhere, 8 § 15, 4 §§ 1—4, the instruments (ὄργανα) for living or managing a household. As however this is not a mode of production but a practical, utilizing activity of consumers (ὁ δὲ βλος πράξις, οὐ ποιησις), the two answers to a certain degree coincide: so far, the question which remains unanswered need not have been proposed. But there is a difference, again, between earning a livelihood directly and indirectly procuring the appliances and tools required for it. The latter is undoubtedly the business of domestic χρηματιστικὴ, and therefore it stands to Economic in the relation of a subsidiary art that provides, not simply materials, but also instruments. Not only is c. 10 required as an indispensable conclusion to the entire discussion begun at c. 8, but even beyond that there is much that we look for in vain in it; whether Aristotle himself left it thus incomplete, or, as is not quite impossible though indemonstrable, we have here the inadequate execution of another hand substituted for a discussion that has been lost or was never really written. In the latter case there must have been a lacuna here. SUSEM. (95)

28 ἀπορήσειεν ἄν] χρηματιστικὴ (3) is just as much, or as little, a part of Politics or Economic as Medicine is, and no more. For health is just as necessary to the state as property, and yet the duty of providing health is not considered to belong to Politics or Economic.

Cp. also Aristoph. Clouds 1146, Antiph. Neot. frag. i, Meineke 92 in Athen. i. 108 E (Cope). The insecurity of the principal lent was the main cause of a high rate of interest. Thus upon bottomry the average rate charged was 20 per cent., which would go to cover insurance, [Xen.] De Vectigal. iii. 9. On house-rents the return was only 8½ per cent. Partly, too, the absence of a paper medium of the nature of bills of exchange, drafts, or bank notes, contributed to the same result: Büchschütz Besitz und Erwerb pp. 98, 496 ff.

3 διὰ τὸ ἐπ' αὐτοῦ κτλ] "According to the texts both of Bekker and Susemihl ὀβολοστατικὴ is hated because it draws a profit from coin instead of from commodities exchanged by means of coin. But the explanatory sentence—μεταβολῆς γὰρ ἐγένετο χάριν, ὁ δὲ τόκος αὐτὸ ποιεῖ πλέον—seems to show that ὀβολοστατικὴ is hated because it seeks to accumulate coin instead of using it in the furtherance of exchange. In order to reconcile the explanatory sentence and the sentence explained, read in the latter ἐπ' instead of ἀπ' or ὑπ', omit τὴν with M^a, and restore Bekker's ὅπερ. In this way we obtain an appropriate sense: 'ὀβολοστατικὴ is hated because it is directed to the acquisition of coin, instead of to the end with a view to which coin was invented: for it was to further exchange that coin was introduced, while interest multiplies coin itself'" (Jackson).

With 3—8 διὰ τὸ κτλ comp. Plato Laws
V. 742 C, VIII. 842 B. Every one will agree with Fülleborn that this proof is sophis-tical. But Stahr rightly observes: ‘it was not until capital itself attained its complete development, that is, only in recent times, that the justification and reasonable necessity of interest became clear. The history of capital recounts the gigantic efforts that had to be made,
the difficulties that had to be surmounted,
in order to its formation. From the point of view of universal history the high rate of interest in ancient times has perhaps been a favourable means to that end; yet its immediate effect, in conjunction with a cruel law of debtor and creditor, was to excite repulsion in men with moral natures and this led them decisively to condemn interest altogether, as Plato did.’

All this tends to give Aristotle’s whole theory of exchange the following shape:
‘he first includes under the term Exchange (ἀλλαγή) all buying and selling barter. Next he subdivides this genus into two species, the one good and praiseworthy, the other not so. The former belongs to Economic. It exchanges the surplus stock of the household for commodities which the household needs; or if this surplus stock be sold for money it is with no intention of making a profit, but only to purchase other necessities with the proceeds. The other species is distinguished by the intention of making a profit, and this exchange with a view to gain is χρηματιστικὴ in the narrower sense or trading proper. It is again subdivided into two branches: the one includes all traffic in commodities whether in exchange for other commodities or for money, the other is traffic in money alone by lending it on interest. Aristotle regards this last as wholly detestable: the former as less bad, but still bad enough’

§ 3 23 φορτηγία=inland trade. SUSEM. This is the view of the commentators generally, but Cope disputes it. He remarks: "φορτηγός and its derivatives φορτηγεῖν, φορτηγικός, φορταγωγός, φορταγωγεῖν, seem to be always applied to commerce carried on by sea, whether ναὺς or πλοῖα be expressed or not (the sense of 'porter' given in the lex. seems not necessary in any of the passages, cp. Theogn. Frag. 679, Aesch. Frag. Phryg. 242). For this reason, and because commerce by land at Athens and in Greece generally was so utterly insignificant in comparison that it might well be passed over without notice, I rather think that Aris. means by ναυκληρία building and letting out ships for traffic, and by φορτηγία commerce proper, the transport of goods on board of them, perhaps including also land transport. (see further Herod. II. 167). 'Servile' occupations like that of the hired labourer, § 4, form according to this description the proper antithesis to those which are 'artistic' (n. 102); mechanical trades are intermediate, yet even the artizan, to say nothing of the labourer, is only a superior kind of slave. Aristotle has really before him the "sedentary" crafts, τέχναι ἐδραῖαι End. Eth. I. 4. 2, 1250 a 30, which are not conducive to bodily health or a noble carriage; V(VIII). 2. 4 n. (980). Similarly we read in Plato Rep. VI. 495 D that manual labour disfigures the body and mars the soul; Xen. l.c. says that it hurts men's bodies by keeping them in a sitting posture (καθῆσθαι) cooped up indoors (σκιатραφεῖσθαι), or in other cases standing all day long over the furnace; and Pseudo-Plato Erast. 137 B that it makes them go about with stooping shoulders and backs bent κυπτάζοντα ζῆν (the references from Eaton). This is totally unlike the way in which Socrates thinks and judges: 'he speaks as the son of a poor craftsman, Plato Xenophon and Aristotle like men of rank and property', Zeller Phil. d. Gr. II i 142 (Eng. tr. Socrates and Socratics p. 170 n. 1). Compare Xen. Mem. III. c. 10. With the definition of servile employments compare c. 2 § 2 n. (6b) and c. 5 § 7 ff. SUSEM. (103)

For λωβῶνται see V(VIII). 4. 1: the workmen themselves 'spoil' or 'deprave' their bodies; i.e. render them feeble and unfit to do service for the state in war.

39 γαμική] There is here a considerable lacuna. For the sense some such restoration as the following may be proposed: "Economic science has, we saw, three branches, treating of (α) the relation of master and slave which has been discussed above, (β) the paternal and (γ) the conjugal relation. <Further we saw that in general a slave is only a piece of property, persons as well as things being included under that head; and it is not the acquisition but the use and maintenance of property which is properly a part of economic science. This science may therefore be divided into (1) the guidance and rule of the persons of the household, (2) the right use of the property. The former includes the treatment of the conjugal and paternal relations: the relation of master and slave would come partly under the one, partly under the other. The householder has to care for the improvement and excellence of all that belongs to the household, and hence for the improvement and excellence of the property; but property is only a means to the end which the household seeks to attain, and the living chattel is more important than lifeless objects. It is therefore the householder's main task to direct aright the free members of the house."> In c. 12 the differences in this rule as exercised over the different free members of the family are parenthetically specialized, but in c. 13 the leading thought itself is resumed and explained. "In most cases where citizens rule over citizens rulers and subjects change places, for they (τὸ ἄρχον καὶ τὸ ἀρχόμενον nom. to βούλεται and to ζητεῖ) tend to be on an equality in nature and to differ not at all": τὴν φύσιν an adverbial accus. as II. 2. 6 τὴν φύσιν ἴσους, IV (VII). I. 10 ποῖός τις τὴν φύσιν, cp. 15 below φύσει διαφέρειν. Yet some have taken τὴν φύσιν, as subject of εἶναι, to mean the spirit of republican citizenship, or the 'natures' of the citizens.

rational soul; moral virtue (ἠθικὴ ἀρετή, excellence of character) courage, temperance, etc. to the irrational appetitive soul; Zeller II ii 624—658. The dianoetic virtues are discussed in B. VI of the Nic. Eth. and the latest detailed investigation of this subject, Walter op. c. 283—537, gives the following results.

Each of the three kinds of reason, theoretic, creative, and practical in the narrower sense (see n. 40), has its particular dianoetic virtue, or it may be, virtues. Practical wisdom or insight (φρόνησις), if not the only virtue, is at all events the most indispensable and important virtue of the practical reason (Walter p. 356 ff.); see on 5 § 9 n. (45); III. 4 §§ 7, 8 nn. (474—6), §§ 16, 17 nn. To theoretic reason belongs (i) νοῦς in the narrower sense, intelligence, comprehending in itself the two extremes of all indemonstrable knowledge, which must be assumed for every syllogism and for scientific demonstration; at the lower end of the scale the immediate judgment of perception, and at the other end, by means of induction, the principles and axioms on which all demonstration, definition, and division rest :

(ii) ἐπιστήμη, demonstrated science with the exception of metaphysics; and
(iii) σοφία, wisdom, the highest or metaphysical knowledge which consists of elements of both kinds, demonstrated truths and truths immediately known. It is of slight importance whether Zeller and Walter are right, that Aristotle regarded all three as dianoetic 'virtues', or whether, as Döring tries to prove against Walter in Kunstlehre des Arist. (Aristotle's Theory of Art) p. 62 f., only the third, σοφία, was really so considered by him. In the creative reason, lastly, τέχνη, artistic skill, is not itself a dianoetic excellence, though it can lead to one, Nic. Eth. vi. 5. 7, 1140 b 21 f.¹

For the 'excellences of character' cp. 5 § 6 n. (40) in regard to temperance in particular II. 6 § 9 n. (206 b), 5 § 10 n. (162), 7 § 12, III. 4 § 16 n. (491), IV (VII). 1 § 4 n. (693). SUSEM. (112) 7 τολύων] See on § I. 'But' or 'now it is clear' (Bonitz).

§ 7 8 ff. "Since then there are by nature various sorts of things subjected to rule (the rule of a free man over a slave being different from that of a husband over a wife, and again from that of an adult over a child), and all have the elements of the soul present in them, only in different degrees (the slave in general being destitute of the deliberative faculty, which in the woman has not sufficient authority and in the boy is as yet undeveloped);

for this reason the ruler requires the intellectual virtue in perfection (for the work belongs simply to the master-workman, and here this is reason), while each of the others needs only his fitting share thereof. And so, too, must it be with the moral virtues: we must suppose all to need a share of them, though not equally, but only in so far as each requires for his work."

Bernays defending the order of the mss. translates from 14 ὁμοίως as follows: "A similar gradation must likewise be assumed for the moral virtues: all must possess them, though not equally, but only in such measure as is necessary for their respective duties. The ruler must have moral virtue in its perfection;—for every work depends in all its parts on the supreme master, and reason" i.e. that which makes the ruler a ruler "is supreme master"; if then the work is to be successful, the ruler must satisfy the demands of reason on all sides, and must therefore possess complete moral virtue. "Those again who obey need severally so much virtue as is proportional to their share of the total work." This however does not meet Thurot's objections, Études 16 ff. "The transposition is indispensable. From the proposition 'reason is the master-workman' it first follows that the ruler must possess the highest intellectual virtue, and only secondarily that he must have the highest moral virtue. Aristotle has been speaking (a 2—7) of a virtue of the rational, and of a virtue of the irrational, part of the soul, and he admits (a 10—14) that both these parts are possessed by slaves, women, and children. Before going on to inquire how they all share in the moral virtue of the irrational part he must have noticed the manner in which they share in the intellectual virtue of the rational part. Indeed the words which Bernays inserts 'the demands of reason on all sides' imply the dianoetic virtue." Cp. Hermes XIX. pp. 588—592, Quaest. Crit. VI. p. 9 f. Where it is a question of executing another's command, as it is always and unconditionally with the slave, there this virtue belongs only to him who gives the command, he who obeys having merely 'right opinion' about it. All the difference now is, whether he can attain this right apprehension more or less easily, thoroughly or carelessly: III. 4. 18 n. (498). Compare also III. on III. 4 § 16 (493), § 17 (497), §§ 7, 8 (474—6). But so far as a natural slave, who is denied every capacity for deliberation, can be said to have ever so small a share of approximate intellectual virtue in the department of practice, such virtue consists merely in the fact that one slave understands his master's commands and knows how to execute them better, more quickly, and more aptly than another. SUSEM. (115) more distinctly § 10 n. (118). Like Socrates in Xenophon I. c., Plato (Rep. v. 452 E f.) holds that, apart from begetting and bearing children, the difference between the sexes is a difference of degree: upon this is based his demand that women should share in the education of men, in war and public business, also (although this is expressly stated only in the Laus) in the public messes: see II. 5 § 1 n. (153), 6 § 5 n. (196), 7 § 1 n. (231 b). Further, community of wives in the two upper classes of his ideal-state (II. 1 § 3 ff., 7 § 1) is clearly connected with this; compare n. Aristotle is here defending Gorgias against that polemic and expresses his agreement with him in the main. 31 ἐπεὶ δὲ κτλ.] "Since the child has not yet fully developed, his excellence is not to be referred simply and solely to himself, but to perfect development and the standard of his educator."

The slave's moral excellence is restricted to that which fits him to be well employed by his master, the child's to that which fits him to be well trained by his father. In the child only the germ of human virtue is present (Nic. Eth. I. 9. 10, III. 12. 5 ff.); on this see IV (VII). 13. 5 n. (875): but in the adult slave, so far as he possesses the indispensable minimum of such a virtue at all, it is at least actually developed. Children and slaves have only to obey; the wife must indeed obey her husband, but then she has along with him to command the remaining members of the family. This implies that her virtue is not merely ὑπηρετικὴ, as Aristotle inexactly puts it § 9. Further with §§ 8—11 compare Poetics 15 § 3 and note (191 b) in Susemihl's edition. SUSEM. (120)

§ 12 35 ἀρετῆς.....36 ἔργων] But how on Aristotle's own psychology and theory of virtue is even this minimum of moral virtue, which is the condition of his serviceableness, possible in the slave, if he shows no trace of deliberation or purposed action of his own? See Nic. Eth. III. cc. 2, 3, Zeller op. c. p. 169 ff., 212 ff., Zeller op. c. II ii 590 n. (3). Yet all goodness or badness of character and conduct is derived from the quality of the προαίρεσις, i.e. from the bent of the will in intention and purpose: Poet. 6 §§ 5, 6, 17, 15 § 1, n. (884) on Pol. IV (VII). 13 § 9. Plato speaks far more humanely on this subject Laus VI. 776 D, where he admits that ere now many a one has found in his slaves men on all points of more approved virtue than his brothers or sons. But in this he contradicts the fundamental assumptions which he makes in common with Aristotle; cp. Zeller II i 755 f. [Eng. tr. Plato p. 459]. Aristotle himself grants that even slaves may have a noble character, Poet. 15 § 1, καὶ γὰρ γυνὴ ἐστὶ χρηστὴ καὶ δοῦλος, καίτοι γε ἴσως τούτων τὸ μὲν χεῖρον τὸ δὲ ὅλως φαῖλον ἐστίν. If he is more consistent elsewhere, his consistency only involves the whole theory in self-contradiction in another way, and discloses all the more its untenableness on internal grounds: see § 8 n. (43),

§ 9 n. (45); also p. 211. SUSEM. (121)

39 ἡ introduces Aristotle's own view: "or shall we rather say..." more freely; "surely here is a very great difference."

The verb intransitive but personal. Comp. III. 6. 3, καθ' ὅσον ἐπιβάλλει μέρος ἐκάστῳ τοῦ ζῆν καλῶς: IV (VII). 1. 10, ἐκάστῳ τῆς εὐδαιμονίας ἐπιβάλλει τοσοῦτον ὅσον περ ἀρετῆς: Herod. IV. 115, VII. 23, *Dem. Mr T. L. Heath objects to this, that if τοσοῦτον is the subject of ἐπιβάλλει, the change of subject from δὲ is surely very harsh. "Indeed, without αὐτῷ, is it not inconceivably harsh? I think the sentence would go much better, if we could make δ δὲ the subject of ἐπιβάλλει. I should translate 'the artizan is further removed and entrenches on virtue only to the same degree as he entrenches on slavery.' Cf. for the supposed use of ἐπιβάλλει De caelo I. 5 § 10, 272 a 25 ὅσον γὰρ ἡ ἐτέρα [γραμμὴ] ἐπιβάλλει τῆς ἐτέρας, καὶ ἡ ἐτέρα ἐκείνης τοσοῦτον, where ἐπιβάλλειν contrasts with ἀπολύεσθαι. Is there any reason why ἐπιβάλλει should not = ἐπαλλάττει?" In point of fact this is perhaps the right construction. That we require αὐτῷ with the other, was pointed out by M. Schmidt and by me in my first edition (1872). At the same time is not ἀρετῆς by itself also strange? (See Critical Notes). If something like δούλου or τῆς τοιαύτης has been lost, αὐτῷ may well have been lost with it. We certainly should expect 'he shares in servile virtue in so far as his condition approximates to a slave's.' SUSEM.

1260 b 1 ἀφωρ. τινὰ ἔχει δουλείαν = is under a definite, limited form of slavery. Comp. Rhet. I. 1 § 1, 1354 a 3, with Cope's note: also ὠρσμέναις above 4 § 1, n. (34). Some interpret wrongly, 'detached from the master.' That the slaves should be ranked as a natural class and the artizans (who had largely sprung from them, III. 5. 3) as an artificial class, is significant of the Greek contempt for labour. See n. (93).

§ 14 4 <τὸν> τὴν διδασκ. ἔχοντα] "the person who instructs him in routine duties." This is the possessor of, or proficient in, the δουλικὴ ἐπιστήμη which is more fully described above 7 § 2, where it is distinguished from δεσποτικῇ. The discussion on the 'virtue' of the slave results in a more precise determination of δεσποτικῇ and its elevation by an extension of its functions. The master may entrust his steward with the employment and direction of the slaves in his service, as Aristotle ironically remarks, 7 § 5: but he must himself develop in them the minimum of virtue which they require for this. Cp. n. (64) on 7 § 5. In line 5 δεσποτικὴν must be wrong: δουλικὴν is what we require, and Bender would accordingly insert it in the text. But neither δουλικὴν nor δεσποτικὴν is free from grammatical objections; I prefer therefore to bracket the word. SUSEM. (123)

Here δεσποτικὴ or δεσποτεία is the art of making good servants. The household like the state exercises a moral superintendence over its members, 13 § 1, and its head is responsible for their moral improvement.

5 οἱ λόγου...6 μόνον] "Those who permit no conversation with slaves, and hold that we should merely give them orders." Plato Laws 777 E, τὴν δὲ οἰκέτον πρόσρησιν χρῆσθαι ἐπιταξὶν πᾶσαν γίγνεσθαι. Elsewhere Plato strongly recommends a humane treatment of slaves: see n. (121) on § 12. SUSEM. (124)

Plato's view is still from time to time approved, as notably by George Eliot.

EXCURSUS I.

EPIMENIDES I. 2 § 5.

THE most detailed account we have of Epimenides is in Diog. Laert. I. 109—115 (cp. Suidas s. v.), whilst of modern writers Heinrich Epimenides of Crete (Leipzig 1801. 8), Höck Kreta III. 246 ff., and C. Schultess De Epimenide Crete (Bonn 1877. 8) give the fullest particulars. He was probably of Phaistos in Crete, but lived principally at Knosos and was held in unbounded esteem as an expiatory priest, a prophet, and a worker of magical cures. At the same time, it would appear, he was shrewd in practical statesmanship, so that some reckoned him among the seven wise men. His whole history is mythical. He is said to have reached the age of 154 or 157, or in the Cretans' version of the story, of 299 years, and further to have passed 57 years of his early life asleep in a cave. The story of his having effected the purification of Athens about 596 B.C. has been shown to be unhistorical by Niese Contributions to the history of Solon and of his time pp. 12—14 (in Historische Untersuchungen Arnold Schäfer gewidmet, Bonn 1882). Whether he owes his place among the seven sages solely to this work attributed to him as Solon's coadjutor, which is Niese's opinion, is not so certain. For to all appearance it is on better authority, at the least, that he is said to have played an important part in Sparta about 580 B.C., where he seems to have pronounced the oracles whereby the transference of the election of ephors from the kings to the popular assembly¹ received the requisite religious sanction². In connexion with this he introduced there the worship of the Cretan moon-goddess Pasiphaë and her oracular dreams: in their ancient official building the ephors had a memorial to him (Paus. III. 11. 11) and even preserved the hide, or animal's skin inscribed with oracles which he was alleged to have written. See Urlichs On the Rhetra of Lycurgus in the Rhein. Mus. VI. 1848. 217—230, Duncker History of Antiquity VI. p. 352 ff. ed. 5 (1882), Schäfer De ephoris Lacedaemoniis pp. 14—21 (Leipzig and Greifswald, 1863. 4); also Gilbert Studien (Studies in the history of ancient Sparta) p. 185, Frick De ephoris Spartanis p. 31 f. (Göttingen 1872. 8). There is a curious story which makes him come to Athens only ten years before the Persian wars, and there prophesy these wars, Plato Laws I 642 D. The works attributed to him in Diog. Laert. I. III—two epics, Κουρήτων καὶ Κορυβαίων

² Trieber (Forschungen Berlin 1871. 8) Researches into the history of the Spartan constitution, p. 130 ff., has indeed endeavoured to prove that the new position of the ephors did not begin until a considerably later period. Of course the ephors did not attain their new position at a single blow, as it were, by the mere fact that their election was taken out of the hands of the kings. On the contrary it must evidently have taken long and arduous struggles to change the disproportionate superiority of the kingly power into corresponding inferiority.

γένεσις καὶ Θεογονία, and Ἄργους ναυπηγία τε καὶ Ἰάσονος εἰς Κόλχους ἀπόπλους, with prose works περὶ θυσιῶν and περὶ τῆς ἐν Κρήτῃ πολιτείας—never had any existence : they are a mere invention of the romancer Lobon of Argos in his work περὶ ποιητῶν, as Hiller has shown in the Rhein. Mus. xxxiii. 1878. 525 ff. Other works really appeared under the name of Epimenides, of which some were forgeries attributed to him, others the writings of a later Epimenides. The Fathers mention a work On Oracles, περὶ χρησμῶν, which can hardly be a prose writing by him, but rather a collection of his oracles ; if it is here that the hexameter Κρήτες δὲ ψεύσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί occurs, which the writer of the Epistle to Titus, i. 13, attributes to one of the Cretan prophets, Ἰδιος αὐτῶν προφήτης, without mentioning his name. Theodoret indeed ascribes the verse to Callimachus, but in his hymn to Zeus (l. 8) only the first words are found : hence Epiphanius (c. haer. i. 14) and Hieronymus (T. vii A. p. 707 Vall.) remark that Callimachus on the contrary first took them from Epimenides : cp. Lübeck Hieronymus p. 12 f. However that may be, the word quoted by Aristotle most probably occurred in a hexameter, very likely in a collection of oracles which Aristotle had before him, of which Epimenides was the reputed author. Moreover, in Rhet. iii. 17. 10, 1418 a 23 f., Aristotle says that Epimenides did not divine the future, but only interpreted the obscurities of the past, περὶ τῶν ἐσομένων οὐκ ἔμαντεύετο, ἀλλὰ περὶ τῶν γεγονότων μὲν, ἀδήλων δέ ; and this could hardly be affirmed except upon the evidence of such a collection. What connexion there was between this published collection of his oracles and the one which was jealously guarded at Sparta, it is impossible to say. SUSEM. (17)

EXCURSUS II.

ON I. 6 §§ 1—8, 1255 a 5—b 3.

THE recent contributions of Jackson Postgate and Ridgeway to the explanation of this passage, referred to in n. (51) on 6 § 1, have not superseded the more successful results attained by Hampke in the Philologus xxiv. 1866. 172 ff. Jackson however has the credit of clearing up the sense of εὐνοια, and Ridgeway by restoring the right punctuation has helped to correct Hampke's interpretation and to remove apparent difficulties. He saw that in § 4 the words 17 διὰ γὰρ...19 ἄρχειν form a parenthesis, and hence that the ἐπεὶ following refers not to this parenthesis but to the sentence which precedes it.

Aristotle admits that not every form of actual slavery is natural ; a distinction must be drawn between a slave who is so by nature and a slave according to convention and law. The two may, but need not necessarily, coincide. There are natural bondsmen who are not as a matter of fact enslaved, and people who are not nature's slaves are actually in servitude: the former though not in slave's estate deserve to be so; while the latter, although held in bondage, are undeserving of it. The (unwritten) law in question consists in the universal agreement that prisoners captured in war are the slaves of their conquerors (ἐν ᾧ τὰ κατὰ πόλεμον κρατούμενα τῶν κρατούντων εἶναι φασίν). This brings Aristotle to the two extreme and opposite views between which his own holds the mean, the views of the unconditional opponents (A) and of the unconditional defenders (B) of each and every form of slavery. He first speaks of the former, remarking that they impeach the legality of the convention or positive law in question, inasmuch as the better man may become the slave of the stronger or more powerful, whereas in a rational state of society virtue is the sole title to rule¹. This then is their view (11 οὕτως): the others (B), on the contrary, take the former view, ἐκείνως, that namely prescribed by the foregoing positive law. The two views stand sharply opposed (19 διίστανται χωρίς) and in conflict (ἀμφισβήτησις), yet they have a common point of contact (ἐπαλλάττονται), both facts being due to one and the same cause. Aristotle might have prevented all misapprehension of these words if he had written ποιεῖ δὲ in line 13. This common cause of both facts is, namely, that virtue (ἀρετή) is that which primarily gives force and might, and that without some sort of excellence the exercise of force is impossible (ὅτι τρόπον τινα ἀρετῇ τυγχάνουσα χορηγίας καὶ βιάζεσθαι δύναται μάλιστα, καὶ ἔστιν αἰεὶ τὸ κρατοῦν ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ἀγαθοῦ τινός); only, of course, virtue still requires the indispensable condition of favourable external circumstances (χορηγία). This then is the common point in the two contending views, the point where Aristotle agrees with both, that in the first place only virtue deserves to rule, and in the second place the requisite force to rule essentially depends upon virtue (ὥστε δοκεῖν μὴ ἄνευ ἀρετῆς εἶναι τὴν βίαν). But from this common point the conflict between the two theories breaks out on the question, wherein right and justice consists (ἀλλὰ περὶ τοῦ δικαίου μόνον εἶναι τὴν ἀμφισβήτησιν). Just for this reason (διὰ τοῦτο) the opponents of all slavery make the essence of right to consist in the mutual good-will of rulers and ruled: i.e. in the fact that the ruler, on his part, does not govern in his own selfish interests, but for the welfare of his subjects; and in the willing obedience, on their part, of the ruled. In other words they transfer to the relations between master and servant the principle which Aristotle himself recognizes as the true one in the state, where he uses it to distinguish "normal politics" from "degenerate forms" (παρεκβάσεις). In this Aristotle discovers their mistake: they assume that the truly virtuous man cannot desire to exercise any other kind of lordship,—that it would be a misuse of his force, were he to do so: that he would thereby cease to be a truly virtuous man. So conversely, from the pro-

of their common statement μὴ ἄνευ ἀρετῆς εἶναι τὴν βίαν. Further (2) he regards the two propositions contained in ὅτι τρόπον τινα...ἀγαθοῦ τινός as the cause but not the matter of the partial agreement between (A) and (B): and he demurs (3) to the statement that the two views simultaneously διίστανται καὶ ἐπαλλάττονται, (4) to the sense given to ἄτεροι λόγοι, and (5) to the vagueness in which the whole passage is left, especially in the part about τὸ δίκαιον.]

position 'virtue gives force' the defenders of all slavery argue that 'might is right'—forgetting that it is not virtue alone that gives force, but that it must have favourable external circumstances; when this is not the case the better man may easily succumb to the inferior. Aristotle might well assume this to be actually the reasoning employed by (B), for no other is logically conceivable. In regard to (A), the philosopher is not so certain whether they do thus far agree with (B) and with himself; whether they all really assume that, as a rule, virtue leads to victory. As therefore the sole right of virtue to rule became doubtful, he feels obliged to give an explicit justification of his course in attributing to them the argument above. This is because, if the point of contact between the two views is lost, and both stand opposed without any community, the views of (A), ἄτεροι λόγοι, contain nothing tenable or convincing, since they would yield this result that those who stand higher in mental and moral capacity do not deserve to be rulers and masters (ἐπεὶ διαστάντων γε χωρὶς τούτων τῶν λόγων οὔτε ἰσχυρὸν οὐδὲν ἔχουσιν οὔτε πιθανὸν ἄτεροι λόγοι, ὥς οὐ δεῖ τὸ βέλτιον κατ' ἀρετὴν ἄρχειν καὶ δεσπόζειν). Postgate correctly remarks that it would have been clearer if Aristotle had written ἄτερος λόγος for ἄτεροι λόγοι.

Aristotle next passes to the view of a third party (C), agreeing in the practical result with that of (B), though not in the reason assigned, as its defenders simply (ὅλως to be taken with ἀντεχόμενοι) adhere to the principle "what is legal is right"; while even this result is restricted, because the principle is not allowed to apply to the case of non-Hellenes conquering Hellenes, but only to that of Hellenes conquering non-Hellenes or to the relations of the non-Hellenes to one another. The view of (C) is thus essentially nothing else than the popular opinion current in Greece, involved in this inner contradiction; and Aristotle shows that, in the main, his own coincides with it, since it maintains what is true in the popular opinion at the same time that it gets rid of its inconsistencies. For on Aristotle's theory also Greeks are, in the main, the natural rulers, barbarians the natural slaves, though this is a rule which certainly admits of many exceptions (see Introd. p. 25). SUSEMIHL.

[Some salient features of Dr Jackson's interpretation may here be appended in his own words. He distinguishes three theories in 1255 a 7—26: viz. i. that of (A) who argues that all slavery is unjust and unnatural, because violence is wrong; ii. that of (B) who argues that all slavery is just and natural, because might is right; iii. that of (C) who argues that all slavery is just and natural, because what is legal is just¹: while Aristotle declares that in practice some slavery is just, some slavery unjust. "In 1255 a 12—21" he continues "Aristotle seeks to show that the positions of (A) and (B) are open to attack precisely in so far as they differ from his own.

"Now the λόγοι of (A) and (B)

- i. All slavery is unjust
- ii. All slavery is just

ἐπαλλάττουσιν : i.e. slaveries which (A) pronounces unjust, (B) pronounces just. How is it, then, that these λόγοι ἐπαλλάττουσιν? What is the reason of the controversy between (A) and (B)?

The reason is, Aristotle tells us, that, as ἀρετή with proper appliances is able to exert force or violence, while force or violence implies ἀγαθόν of some sort or other, (A) and (B) agree in assuming that where there is βία, there there is ἀρετή, and consequently suppose that they differ fundamentally in their notions of δίκαιον. That is to say, on the assumption that βία is always accompanied by ἀρετή, (A), who conceives that in the cases which he has examined βία is detestable, and does not see anything to distinguish these cases from other cases, condemns all relations between inferior and superior which are not based upon 'loyalty', i.e. the willing obedience which an inferior renders to a kind and considerate superior; while (B) who conceives that in the cases which he has examined βία is respectable, and does not see anything to distinguish these cases from other cases, takes as his principle 'might is right'.

When however the two theories are withdrawn within their proper limits, so that they διεστῶσι χωρίς and no longer ἐπαλλάττουσι, the theory which (A) advances against (B) and the theory which (B) advances against (A), ἄτεροι λόγοι, have neither force nor plausibility as against the modified doctrine ὡς δεῖ τὸ βέλτιον κατ' ἀρετὴν ἄρχειν καὶ δεσπόζειν¹.

He adds in a note: "In other words, so long as (A) maintains that All slavery is unjust, and (B) that All slavery is just, (B) has something ἰσχυρόν and πιθανόν to urge against (A), (A) has something ἰσχυρόν and πιθανόν to urge against (B). But when (A) and (B) respectively fall back from their advanced and untenable positions to the position of Aristotle, (B) has no longer anything ἰσχυρόν or πιθανόν to urge against (A), (A) has no longer anything ἰσχυρόν or πιθανόν to urge against (B). It will be seen that I take τοὺς λόγους and τῶν λόγων to be 'the theories of (A) and (B)', ἄτεροι λόγοι to be 'the theory adverse to (A's) theory and the theory adverse to (B's) theory', i.e. 'the theories of (B) and (A)'." He agrees with Heitland (Notes p. 11) that ἐπαλλάττειν means primarily to 'overlap', whether by superposition or by juxtaposition, and continues: "But when may propositions be said to 'overlap'? At first sight two cases suggest themselves: (1) All X is Y might be said to overlap Some X is Y, and (2) Some X is Y and Some X is not Y might be said to overlap one another, provided that these subcontraries are incompatible. It appears however that ἐπαλλάττειν marks not so much the transgression of a limit, as the invasion of a region beyond, and consequently that All X is Y could not be said to ἐπαλλάττειν Some X is Y. For this reason, as well as because ἐπαλλάττειν understood in the former of the two senses indicated above, would not find a proper antithesis interest the unconditional supporters of slavery, (B), have to contest the right of τὸ βέλτιον κατ' ἀρετὴν to rule at all, or why they should seek to advance anything possessing force and plausibility against 'the modified doctrine.' SUSEM.

in διαστάντων χωρίς, I take ἐπαλλάττειν here in the latter of these senses, the whole field of slavery being a debatable ground which from opposite quarters (A) and (B) have overrun. With the phrase διαστάντων χωρίς, which represents the relative position of (A) and (B) when they have withdrawn to their own sides of the field, compare the kindred use of κεχώρισται in μκ I, 464 b 27. Thus while I agree with Heitland that 'overlap' is the best English equivalent for ἐπαλλάττειν, I demur to his unqualified statement that the latter word expresses the relation in which subcontraries stand to one another."]

Bernays' rendering of 6 §§ 3—5, 1255 a 12—24, mentioned in n. (51), is as follows (the words in italics being supplied by him to explain the connexion of thought).

"The reason for the difference of opinions, and the common ground taken by the divergent views, is that to a certain extent intrinsic merit, when it attains external means, becomes also most competent to do violence, and every superior force depends upon the excess of some good quality or other, so that violence seems not to be devoid of all nobler elements and the difference of opinion therefore concerns the question of justice only. For the one side discovers justice in benevolent treatment, which precludes slavery; the others even hold it to be just that the stronger should rule. Whereas if the views stood harshly opposed to each other, so that merely external or brutal violence according to the one, and intrinsic merit according to the other, justified the claim to rule, then the view which impugns the right of the man, who is the better by his intrinsic merit, to be ruler and lord would be unable to adduce anything cogent or even plausible on its own behalf. Others however fasten wholly on an assumed empirical justice, such as the law, and declare slavery brought about by war to be just merely because the law sanctions it; yet in the same breath they are forced to admit that it is unjust."

EXCURSUS III.

THE RELATION OF χρηματιστική TO οἰκονομική: I. 8. 2.

ὅτι μὲν οὖν οὐχ ἡ αὐτὴ τῇ οἰκονομικῇ ἢ χρηματιστικῇ, δῆλον...πότερον δὲ μέρος αὐτῆς ἐστὶ τι ἢ ἕτερον εἶδος, ἔχει διαμφισβήτησιν. The most obvious course is to understand ἕτερον εἶδος as only another expression for a mere auxiliary science (ὑπηρετική), or at least as including the relation of an auxiliary science under the case that the two are wholly distinct. In this sense all the commentators take it; both (1) those who think with Hampke—see n. (67) on I. 8. 1—that Aristotle simply wished to set up as an auxiliary science just so much of χρηματιστική as stands in a natural relation to οἰκονομική, and consequently in c. 8 § 13 would set matters right by omitting μέρος, so that the direct branch of χρηματιστική is not there said to 'be a part of', but only 'to belong to', οἰκονομική, as that with which it is concerned:—and (2) those who with Büchsenschütz rely on the received text of 8 § 13 and maintain Aristotle's decision to be this: that the direct branch of χρηματιστική is really a part of οικονομική, but that the 'natural' part of indirect χρηματιστική, the theory of exchange, is, on the contrary, merely an auxiliary science. Now there is no passage in which Aristotle makes even the slightest allusion to such a difference in the relation of the two to οικονομική. But he states explicitly that not until c. 10 does he proceed to give a definite answer to the question proposed in c. 8 § 1, viz. how that branch of χρηματιστική, with which the householder is concerned, is related to οικονομική; the answer being that it is in one respect a part of οικονομική, in another respect an auxiliary science, 10 §§ 1—3. The matter cannot therefore have been previously decided. And yet he had just said that οικονομική has to do with the use or consumption of commodities, χρηματιστική with their production, and that hence the two are heterogeneous, because consumption and production are not the same thing. Now, as Schütz remarks, this necessarily implies that for the same reason even the branch of χρηματιστική most closely allied to οικονομική cannot be a part of it except in a restricted and relative sense¹. This again is decisively confirmed by Aristotle's requirement, IV(VII). 9 §§ 3, 4, 7, 18; 10 §§ 9—14, that while none but landowners are to be citizens and none but citizens landowners, they shall not themselves carry on agriculture or cultivate their own estates, since in this way even agriculture really ceases, strictly speaking, to be a distinctive part of household management or domestic economy. Yet on another side the connexion still remains so close that Aristotle can distinguish between the functions of husband and wife in housekeeping by saying III. 4. 17 u. (496), that the one has to acquire, the other to keep; in other words that the external management of the property is more appropriate to the husband, the internal management to the wife. From all this it follows that ἕτερον εἶδος denotes something which is not connected with οικονομική either as a part of it, or simply as an auxiliary to it: the more subtle distinction between branch and subsidiary science is, for the present, to remain undecided; and μέρος is used in a vaguer sense, even covering the case of an auxiliary science, this being also true of 10 § 1, so that there is certainly no need to expunge the word there. Such instances of inexactness and careless expression frequently obscure Aristotle's meaning; but in this part of the work they are unusually numerous. Thus χρηματιστική has three meanings, (1) = κτητική, in the widest sense; 3 § 3 and c. 8: and, in a narrower sense, (2) = μεταβλητική or καπηλική, ἡ μὴ ἀναγκαία of 9 § 18 (so from c. 9 § 1 onwards); and again (3) = ἡ ἀναγκαία, ἡ κατὰ φύσιν, 9 § 12, c. 10 (cp. u. on 8 § 1). Several times only accurate observation of the context can determine which of the three senses the word has. Similarly μεταβλητική or μεταβολική as a general term for exchange includes under it both the natural and unnatural species of indirect acquisition, both that which comes under οικονομική and in the negative. To acquire and to spend, or consume, are really opposed; which is what Aristotle says briefly, but to my thinking quite clearly.

that which is alien to it : but sometimes it is found in the narrower acceptance of retail trade proper, καπηλική, as in 9 § 12, 10 § 4, 11 § 3. Teichmüller has some good remarks on the want of a strict terminology in Aristotle Arist. Forschungen II. 4 ff.

Besides, to ask whether χρηματιστική is a part of οικονομική, is, as Oncken has pointed out¹, a perverse way of raising the question. For χρηματιστική, conversely, has a wider field than οικονομική : even the finances of the state and the labour of the whole society of the citizens are intimately concerned in it, and the earnings which supply the wants of single households form only an important part of this sum total of the national income. Aristotle finds himself accordingly compelled to speak of a χρηματιστική (8 §§ 13—15 ; 11 § 13) which is not simply for the householder and the family circle, but for statesmen and the commonwealth. At the same time he is so inconsistent as to designate the accumulation of a stock of commodities or possessions which shall be useful for civil society, whether it be by direct production or by plunder, a branch or a concern of *οικονομική*². Cp. the notes on 8 §§ 13—15, and on 11 § 13. SUSEM. (69)

NOTE ON I. 13 § 12: REASON AND VIRTUE IN THE SLAVE.

The difficulty pointed out in notes (45) and (121) on 5 § 9 and 13 § 12, may perhaps be removed as follows. If the slave by nature is to be altogether without that lower part of reason, which Aristotle here calls τὸ βουλευτικόν, he would be without reason altogether ; for still less can he be said to have the higher part, τὸ ἐπιστημονικόν, scientific thought. But then he would quite cease to be a human being. The expression ὅλως οὐκ ἔχει τὸ βουλευτικόν, 13 § 7, should therefore be taken as hyperbolical and interpreted in the light of that other, and itself hyperbolical, statement κοινωνῶν λόγου τοσούτου ὅσον αἰσθάνεσθαι ἀλλὰ μὴ ἔχειν 5 § 9: reason is present in the slave only, so to speak, as a δύναμις, not as a ἐξίς ; and Aristotle avails himself of the

¹ Staatslehre II. 81 : "It is just like putting the question : Is the universal the same as the particular, or a part of it, or a distinct species ? For that χρηματιστική has the wider generality and that οικονομική is the particular, is evident. We should have expected to hear, what χρηματιστική is in itself, what comes under it, and then the relation of οικονομική to it would have followed of itself and have been arrived at very simply. Whereas by adopting the opposite" (?) "procedure, we can only with difficulty surmise that χρηματιστική is undoubtedly an independent branch of science, treating quite generally of the means to acquire property and increase wealth ; that οικονομική teaches us to apply to the maintenance of the household the means, which the other science indicates." It must be observed in reply to this, (a) that only the smaller and less essential branch of οικονομική in Aristotle's sense has this function, 13 § 1, (b) that as it has to do with consumption, while χρηματιστική is concerned with acquisition, even this branch of οικονομική is not related to χρηματιστική simply as particular to universal.

² Schütz alone saw this difficulty and vainly tried to get over it by the omission of καὶ πολιτικῶν and καὶ τοῖς πολιτικοῖς, 8 § 15. He failed to see that it was also necessary to reject πόλεως ἢ in 8 § 13 sub finem, that these words indeed must be the first to go.

hyperbole μὴ ἔχειν to denote that only the indispensable, or roughly speaking insignificant, minimum of rational deliberation, and therefore of reason generally, is found in such men. It is precisely similar with c. 6 of the Poetics, where first of all § 9, 1450 a 7, characters (ἥθη) are said to form a part of every tragedy, and then a little farther on § 14, a 23, we read ἄνευ μὲν πράξεως οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο τραγῳδία, ἄνευ δὲ ἡθῶν γένοιτ' ἄν. αἱ γὰρ τῶν νέων τῶν πλείστων ἀήθεις τραγῳδαί εἰσιν καὶ ὅλως ποιηταὶ πολλοὶ τοιοῦτοι. Comp. Hermes XIX. 1884, p. 592. SUSEM. Plato too, Rep. IV. 441 A, says λογισμοῦ δ' ἔνιοι μὲν ἔμοιγε δοκοῦσιν οὐδέποτε μεταλαμβάνειν, οἱ δὲ πολλοὶ ὀψέ ποτε. Taken strictly this would deny to children and many adults the possession, as well as the use, of reason.

ἀναιρουμένου γὰρ τοῦ ὅλου οὐκ ἔσται ποὺς οὐδὲ χεῖρ, εἰ μὴ ὁμωνύμως, ὥσπερ εἰ τις λέγει τὴν λιθίνην· διαφθαρεῖσα γὰρ ἔσται τοιαύτη, πάντα δὲ (? γὰρ) τῷ ἔργῳ ὠρίσται καὶ τῇ δυνάμει, ὥστε μηκέτι τοιαῦτα ὄντα οὐ λεκτέον τὰ αὐτὰ εἶναι ἀλλ' ὁμώνυμα. The words of n. (28) p. 150 "if τοιαύτη = a true hand" will admit of further elucidation. Schöll, who maintains this to be the meaning of τοιαύτη, 'talis qualis esse debet vera manus' (Susem. Quaest. Crit. IV. p. 5), cites as analogous the use of τοιοῦτος in De part. animal. I. 1 §§ 25, 26, 640 b 33; καίτοι καὶ ὁ τεθνεὺς ἔχει τὴν αὐτὴν τοῦ σχήματος μορφήν, ἀλλ' ὅμως οὐκ ἔστιν ἄνθρωπος. ἔτι δ' ἀδύνατον εἶναι χεῖρα <τὴν> ὁπωσοῦν διακειμένην, οἷον χαλκὴν ἢ ξυλίνην, πλὴν ὁμωνύμως, ὥσπερ τὸν γεγραμμένον ἱατρὸν. οὐ γὰρ δυνήσεται ποιεῖν τὸ ἑαυτῆς ἔργον, ὥσπερ οὐδ' αὐλοὶ λίθινοι τὸ ἑαυτῶν ἔργον, οὐδ' ὁ γεγραμμένος ἱατρός. ὁμοίως δὲ τούτοις οὐδὲ τῶν τοῦ τεθνηκότος μορίων οὐδὲν ἔτι τῶν τοιούτων ἐστὶ, λέγω δ' οἷον ὀφθαλμός, χεῖρ (where Schöll has himself added τὴν). The citation is the more apposite because Schöll takes διαφθαρεῖσα χεῖρ to mean precisely τοῦ τεθνηκότος χεῖρ, 'manus corporis extincti, ἀναιρουμένου τοῦ ὅλου, quae propter hanc solam causam simul corrupta est appellanda.'

There is however another suggestion. Even granting that, as Schöll contends, διαφθαρεῖσα is subject and τοιαύτη predicate, and that διαφθαρεῖσα means 'a dead man's hand,' may not τοιαύτη mean simply 'homonymous,' a hand in much the same sense as a hand of stone? Thus explained ἔσται τοιαύτη is parallel to οὐ λεκτέον τὰ αὐτὰ ἀλλ' ὁμώνυμα, there is no need to insert οὐκ, and πάντα γὰρ (which the best MSS. of the old translation attest) is a distinct improvement upon πάντα δὲ. So in effect Vettori p. 14 (ed. of 1576): "posset enim, inquit, aliquis manum vocare e lapide formatam, quae tamen manus non esse perspicitur: neque enim fungitur munere manus. manus vero hominis mortui talis profecto est."

Book II is the critical portion of the work, just as an examination of preceding theories serves for an introduction to other Aristotelian treatises, Metaphysics Physics Psychology &c. Here cc. 1—8 deal with Political Thinkers, cc. 9—12 with Existing Constitutions. See Introd. p. 32.

c. 1 Our object is to discover the best scheme of political society. We must therefore examine in detail the best existing forms of government and the theories of our predecessors: § 1.

First of all, should the community which in some measure is implied in every city (§ 2) extend to wives and children and to property, as in Plato's Republic? § 3.

§ 1 1260 b 27 προαιρούμεθα] This is evidence (as against Götting Preface p. xviii, and others) that Aristotle intended to construct an ideal state: see Spengel Ueber die Politik p. 11, and compare IV (VII). 13. 4.

κοινωνίας τῆς πολ.] This takes us back to I. 1 § 1. The imperfect 'associations' whose relation to civil society, ἡ πολιτικῆ κοινων., was the preliminary problem, have been dealt with in B. 1.

29 κατ' εὐχὴν] For this expression see 6 § 7 n. (202); IV (VII). 4 § 1, 2, 5 § 3,

10 § 13, 11 § 1, 12 § 9, 13 § 9; VI (IV). 11 § 1 with notes. SUSEM. (128)

In Plato εὐχαῖς ὅμοια = a chimerical scheme, e.g. Rep. 456 C, οὐκ ἄρα ἀδύνατά γε οὐδὲ εὐχαῖς ὅμοια ἐνομοθετοῦμεν, 499 C, δικαίως ἂν καταγελῶμεθα, ὥς ἄλλως εὐχαῖς ὅμοια λέγοντες; and in 540 D μὴ εὐχὰς εἰρηκέναι is explained by ἀλλὰ χαλεπὰ μὲν, δυνατὰ δέ πῃ. Thus εὐχὴ = an ideal, something visionary, impracticable, as in Demosth. c. Timocr. 722, 19, εἰ γὰρ αὖ καλῶς μὲν ἔχοι, μὴ δυνατόν δέ τι φράξοι, εὐχῆς οὐ νόμον διαπράττοιτ' ἂν ἔργον. Similarly optare in Latin. By ζῆν μάλιστα κατ' εὐχὴν Aristotle implies that no restrictions are placed on the realization of the scheme by circumstances.

Not directly named, as a rule, Plato lurks under Socrates (cp. nn. 116, 199), as under τινές, τις τῶν πρότερον, and the like. See Campbell's apt remarks on similar reticence in Plato, Introd. to Theaetetus p. xxxiv, ed. 2.

tiated from an offensive and defensive alliance (συμμαχία) and a race or tribe (ἔθνος): § 3. It is this which makes reciprocity the political safeguard, § 4, allowing the citizens to become alternately rulers and subjects, although a permanent governing body would be better, §§ 5, 6; allowing also a change of functions among the officials, § 7. Further, the greater independence (αὐτάρκεια) secured in the city essentially depends upon a degree of unity lower than that of the family, § 8.

See Grote's Plato c. 35, III. pp. 160—242, Oncken I. 171—193 and various monographs quoted in the Introd. p.
32 n. 4, p. 33 n. 7. The main defects of this criticism are at once apparent; Zeller, Platonic Studies p. 203, 290, has rightly traced them to an excessive striving after logical clearness; a tendency to reduce the Platonic utterances to a number of precise dogmatic propositions and to test the independent validity of each empirically, without regard to its inner connexion with the whole system of idealism. Hence it comes about that the spirit of the Platonic teaching is hardly ever adequately appreciated, while now and then there is a captious, almost pedantic, disposition to get at external results and to fasten on details with but little insight into their true relative importance. "Several objections urged by him turn more upon the Platonic language than upon the Platonic vein of thought, and if judged by Plato from his own point of view would have appeared admissions in his favour rather than objections" (Grote). This is the sober fact, and serves to account for the piquant charges of injustice, sophistry, and mala

fides sometimes brought against Aristotle.

§ 1 IO πάντων and II κοινὰς are unintentional misrepresentations of the kind just criticized. The 'marriage laws' in question affect only Plato's Guardians, and do not establish community of wives
at all, in the strictly literal and unfavourable sense of the term (which would be a gross libel, we are told, on the philosopher who made marriage, so to speak, a 'sacrament'). Indeed they 'seem to aim at an impossible strictness,' hardly less exacting than vows of celibacy (Zeller Plato p. 489 Eng. tr.). And this must have been Aristotle's judgment: he never attacks them on the score of license, but only on grounds of public expediency.
Moreover the aim of these laws and the arguments by which they are defended are such as to lay them open to the inexact and invidious appellation even at the hands of impartial modern critics.
See e.g. Dr Jowett's remarks Plato III.
p. 160 ff.

II δι' ἣν αἰτίαν = αἰτία δι' ἣν "that which he assigns as the reason why such legislation is necessary does not appear to result from his proposals": συμβαῖνον following as if τοῦτο δι' ὃ had preceded. In 4 § 5 is a similar attraction.
The 'reason' in question is the fundamental assumption of the Platonic state that the utmost possible unity is desirable: communism, within certain limits, is a means to this unity.

13 Thurot would translate: "further in view of the end which he says ought to be set before the city his present statement (of his scheme) is impracticable." But it is simpler to take τέλος as subject; πρὸς may be adverbial (see Crit. Notes): "the

The discussions in this book supply the further relation that the maintenance of the state itself is conditioned by the maintenance of the family. SUSEM. (131)

§ 3 The state is an organized unity. The plurality of parts which it contains are specifically distinct and properly subordinated. This however is one distinctive thought of the Republic, the ground of Plato's analogy between the state and the individual.

24 οὐ γὰρ...ἐξ ὁμοίων] Apparently contradicted by III. 8 § 4, 16 § 2, VI(IV). 11 § 8; but there equality of rights is intended by ὁμοίων (Eaton). The present statement is repeated III. 4. 5 where uniformity of moral excellence is disclaimed: here the sense is similarity of functions (Postgate), as is illustrated by N. Eth. v. 5. 9, οὐ γὰρ ἐκ δύο ἰατρῶν γίνεται κοινωνία, ἀλλ' ἐξ ἱατροῦ καὶ γεωργοῦ, καὶ ὅλως ἐτέρων καὶ οὐκ ἴσων· ἀλλὰ τοῦτους δεῖ ἰσασθῆναι. separate autonomous states, the Lacedaemonians and their allies, for example, are homogeneous.

25 τὸ μὲν answered by 29 ἐξ ὧν δὲ. The one (the alliance for war) will be of advantage from its mere size however much alike in kind, just as (it will be of advantage) if a weight shall pull more (than another): i.e. like a heavier weight which turns the scale. The more members the stronger the alliance.

27 διοίσει κτλ] "Upon something similar", the character of the constituents, whether heterogeneous (so as to allow of reciprocity) or homogeneous, "will depend the difference also between a city and a race, provided the race does not live with its population separated over a number of villages, but like the Arcadians." Not observing the parenthesis and taking ὅταν μὴ ὥσι κεχωρ. as epexegetical of τῷ τοιούτῳ the editors have referred this remark to the process of συννοικισμός, the change from village life by which a Greek ἔθνος was consolidated into one city. But (1) the Arcadians must surely be cited as an example of a race and not (as they would be upon that view) of a city: (2) this is not a distinction between ἔθνος and πόλις universally, but between one ἔθνος and another. (3) We should then expect μηκέτι, or οἷον <νῦν> or something equivalent: and the exact force of the future and of τῷ τοιούτῳ (not τούτῳ) would be missed. (4) In that case Arcadians means simply Megalopolitans, whereas Tegeatans, Mantineans and others might equally claim to belong to the Arcadian league (τὸ Ἀρκαδικόν). Hence Dittenberger, in Gött. gel. Anzeigen 1874 p. 1381, rejects the supposed reference to συννοικισμός and takes ὅταν μὴ κτλ as a limiting clause, which excludes from the comparison the cases where the people live κατὰ κώμας and opposes to the city-state only such 'races' as the Arcadian.

29 Ἀρκάδες] Who are meant? The interpretation of the passage turns upon this. When Plato, Symp. 193 A, writes διωκίσθημεν ὑπὸ θεοῦ καθάπερ Ἀρκάδες ὑπὸ Λακεδαιμονίων the words spaced show that the Mantineans are meant. Demosthenes Or. XVI uses Ἀρκάδες nine times and Μεγαλοπολῖται seven times of the same people whose city was entitled in full ἡ μεγάλη πόλις τῶν Ἀρκάδων. There everything is clear from the interchange of terms. But if the words "when they live like the Arcadians" indicate an ἔθνος so well known as to spare Aristotle further explanation the instance chosen ought, as Dittenberger urges, to be before all things perspicuous. Understand then neither the Mantineans with Schneider, nor the Megalopolitans with Camerarius, nor with Giphanius the Maenalian and Parrhasians in the southwest before the founding of Megalopolis; none of these exclusively; but the entire population of Arcadia, as the word naturally means. See Note on Arcadia at the end of B. II.

"Further compare I. 2 § 4 n. (II), § 6 (19): III. 13. 19 (607); IV(VII). 4. II (760)." SUSEM. (132)

ἐξ ὧν δὲ δεῖ] Whereas (in the case of the city-state) the elements which must coalesce into one are (? must be, see Crit. Notes) specifically distinct. So that it would not make a single city, III. 3 § 5, 9 § 9, to join by an external tie two such similar units as the civic body of Corinth and that of Megara: the conditions for reciprocity would be wanting.

§ 4 30 τὸ ἴσον τὸ ἀντιπεπονθός] Not 'equal retribution' but the propor-

31 σῶζει τὰς πόλεις, ὥσπερ ἐν τοῖς ἠθικοῖς εἴρηται πρότερον' (I) tional adjustment of claims, i.e. reciprocity of services and functions.

"As 'reciprocal proportion' regulates the exchange of different wares in Nic. Eth. v 5, so here it regulates the relations between the magistrate for the time being and the ordinary citizen, who render, the one service, the other τιμὴ καὶ γέρας Nic. Eth. v 6 § 7, 1134 b 7. On the application of the principle of ἀντιπεπονηθὸς κατ' ἀναλογίαν, 'reciprocal proportion', to commerce, friendship, and exchange generally, see my edition of the Fifth Book of the Ethics p. 88 ff. In Nic. Eth. v 5 § 6, 1132 b 32 it is ἀντιπεπονηθὸς κατ' ἀναλογίαν καὶ μὴ κατ' ἰσότητα, i.e. 'reciprocal proportion' as opposed to the 'retaliation' of the Pythagoreans, which is said to hold the πόλις together. The inconsistency is however only apparent. Here, where it is not necessary to emphasize the distinction between ἀντιπεπονηθὸς κατ' ἀναλογίαν, i.e. κατ' ἰσότητα λόγων, and ἀντιπεπονηθὸς κατ' ἰσότητα, i.e. κατ' ἰσότητα ἀπλῶς, τὸ ἴσον τὸ ἀντιπεπονηθὸς is the equivalent of ἀντιπεπονηθὸς κατ' ἀναλογίαν in the other passage. By a similar inexactitude in Nic. Eth. ix 1 § 1, 1163 b 33 geometrical proportion takes the place of reciprocal proportion as the rule of exchange. Just so, although τὸ ἀπλῶς δίκαιον is τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν viii(v) 1, 1301 b 37, at vii(vi) 2 § 2, 1317 b 3 τὸ δίκαιον τὸ δημοτικόν is said to consist in τὸ ἴσον ἔχειν κατ' ἀριθμὸν ἀλλὰ μὴ κατ' ἀξίαν, τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν in the former passage including, and in the latter excluding, τὸ κατ' ἀριθμὸν ἴσον. See my notes on Nic. Eth. v 3 § 7." JACKSON.

From the apparent inconsistency Grant inferred, Ethics i. p. 52 f., that the remarks on Retaliation in the Ethics are a development and improvement of those in the Politics. The common source may be Plato's Διὸς κρίσις, the true πολιτικὸν δίκαιον, of Laus vi 757 B, C: τῷ μὲν γὰρ μέizonι πλείω τῷ δ' ἐλάττονι σμικρότερα νέμει, μέτρια διδοῖσα πρὸς τὴν αὐτῶν φύσιν ἐκατέρω, καὶ δὴ καὶ τιμὰς μέizonι μὲν πρὸς ἀρετὴν ἀεὶ μέizonις κτλ.

31 ἐν τοῖς ἠθικοῖς] Nic. Eth. v. 5. 6, where from the nature of the case and the explanations given τὸ ἀντιπεπονηθὸς is not to be understood negatively of retaliation for evil suffered, but positively as a recompense for good received. (As there explained the one, retaliation, repays like with like; the other makés requital by the corresponding term in reciprocal proportion: for in reference to his demand the builder is to shoes as the shoemaker to the house.) More precisely thus: of the different members of a community A transfers to B the goods which he (A) has and B has not, receiving in return that which he lacks himself and B has: thus a shoemaker exchanges shoes with a baker for bread. Hence we read in § 9 of the same chapter that an association (κοινωνία) of two similar members, as two physicians, is impossible: it can only be formed by a physician and a farmer, or generally by members dissimilar and unequal, between whom equality or proportion is thus said to be produced.

Now the dissimilar members in the state are rulers and subjects. The former afford the latter a wise and intelligent guidance in return for which they receive respect (N. E. viii. 14. 3, 1163 b 6), willing obedience, and skilful execution of their commands: and the subjects, in return for this obedience, receive from their rulers the wise government before mentioned. On this depends the continuance and well being of the state. Compare further i. 2. 16, iii. 10. 2, with notes (28 c, 562).

But as the greatest possible equality amongst the citizens is the aim of Aristotle's best polity no less than of Plato's—i. 7. 1 n. (58 b), iv(vii). 8. 4 (797), vi(iv). 11. 8 (1293); iii. 16. 2 (672), 17 § 2, i § 10 (440, 441), 13 § 9 (595), § 12 (597-9)—a seeming inconsistency arises; compare also iii. 4. 5 n. (471). The fuller explanation which follows in the text is intended to remove this inconsistency by showing that even in the ideal state there is the same difference between rulers and subjects and the same adjustment of the difference, and to what extent this holds. Thus §§ 4—7 διόπερ τὸ ἴσον...ἀρχὰς are a digression, but one indispensable to Aristotle's argument, which, putting this aside, runs as follows: the state has more need than the family of a plurality, or more precisely of a plurality of dissimilar members, § 2. Remove the dissimilarity and you destroy the state which is still more evident if independence (αὐτάρκεια) be also taken into account, § 8.

Camerarius, and long before him Eubulos, blame Aristotle unfairly for not seeing that Plato's unity of the state meant only the utmost possible unity concord and unanimity among the citizens. From

3 § 3; 4 § 5 ff., § 4; 5 § 11, §§ 14, 15, §§ 19, 20 it is clear that Aristotle was well aware of this fact. Nevertheless it may easily be seen that this does not affect the soundness of his reasoning which, as even the language shows, is directed more especially against Republic V 462, where Plato is showing how the abolition of family life would be the means of making all the citizens of his ideal state feel as the members of a single family (cp. n. 140) or even of a single man (καὶ ἥτις δὴ ἐγγύτατα ἐνὸς ἀνθρώπου ἔχει, αὐτῇ sc. πόλις ἀρίστα διοικεῖται). Is this not, as Aristotle rightly puts it, to prescribe for the state the end of representing so far as possible an individual man? Thurot Etudes pp. 22—24 has shown the usual modes of interpreting this text to be unsatisfactory. The infinitive may indeed be governed by βέλτιον, and εἴξαισι (or ἀρξασί) may be understood with τοῖς ἐξ ἀρχῆς: but whether τὸ...εἵκειν be taken as subject or object of μιμεῖσθαι the result mischievous? It is not (1) 'unanimity', i.e. community of political principles and aims, the ὁμόνοια of Nic. Eth. IX. 6, 1167 a 22, as appears from c. 9 § 22, 1270 b 21 &c. Nor is it (2) 'uniformity', i.e. the suppression of individuality, so that all the citizens are of one type: for the discrimination of functions, carrying with it diversity of character, is, under the name of justice, the very foundation of the Platonic πόλις. Hence it is not (3) 'organization', as organization implies discrimination of functions combined with unanimity in the sense here given to the word. Rather it is (4) 'centralization'. Plato is anxious that his citizens should be bound together by a common interest in the πόλις, and, with a view to this, proposes to eliminate all those inferior κοινωνίαι which induce subordinate affections and create separate interests, thus, he conceives, weakening the supreme tie of patriotism. On the other hand Aristotle regards the subordinate affections which are induced in the inferior κοινωνίαι—for example, οἰκία, σύμπλοι, συστρατιῶται, φυλέται, δημόται, θιασῶται, ἐρανισταί Nic. Eth. VIII. 9 § 4 f, 1160 a 9, q.v.—as valuable in themselves, and therefore does not desire that they should be merged in patriotism. Further he maintains that the elimination of the inferior κοινωνίαι, which μορλοῖς εἰοικασί τῆς πολιτικῆς sc. κοινωνίας Nic. Eth. VIII. 9, 1160 a 9, will not cause the subordinate affections to be merged in patriotism, i.e. to be transferred, unimpaired in force, from the inferior κοινωνίαι to the supreme κοινωνία. He thinks, in fact, that the πόλις is properly a complex organization containing lesser organizations within it, rather than a large family or a colossal man. It will be observed (1) that Aristotle's criticisms arise directly from the theory of the πόλις which he has developed in the first book, and (2) that they indicate the same appreciation of φιλία in all its forms, which has led him to devote to it two out of the ten books of the Nic. Eth. JACKSON.

cc. 3, 4 Objections to communism, chiefly to the abolition of separate families. Even supposing Plato's end, i.e. the most perfect civic unity, to be desirable, his communistic scheme is not the best means to secure it. A series of detached remarks, so closely allied in some cases that it would not have been difficult to bring them together under one and the same head. See fuller details Analysis pp. 102, 103; and compare throughout Pl. Rep. v.

The Platonic scheme, as Grote (III. 207) reminds us, is only partial communism. Modern communistic theories contemplate individual producers handing over the produce of their labour to be distributed among themselves by official authority. But the producing and labouring classes in the Republic are not communists at all: they are private proprietors with separate families, taxed only with the maintenance of a body of public functionaries, the guardians. Hence the arguments advanced by Aristotle, however just in themselves, have little direct application to the scheme which he is ostensibly criticising; they belong to a far wider enterprise on which he has embarked, an advocacy of the principle of individualism against socialism in general, beginning (I § 2) with the inquiry into the limits of community and subsidiary

Again, while the peculiar marriage system of the Republic would unquestionably result in the abolition of the ordinary separate family, Aristotle is unable, perhaps from a defect of imagination, fully to realize the new state of things which Plato intended to create. He persists in attaching the old meanings to words (3 §§ 5—8, 4 §§ 6—9), whereas it is Plato's avowed aim by an extension of the affections into an intimate and equal sympathy with a whole class (esprit de corps) to supersede nearer family relationships and extinguish private interests.

Walford and Postgate would take περιττά καὶ ἄρτια to be predicates of πάντες and ἀμφοτέρα. But five in the passage quoted above is at once an example of ἀμφοτέρα, 2 + 3, and of περιττά. As ἀμφοτέρα = sum of two things, so περιττά = an odd sum total, ἄρτια = an even sum total. In all three cases the fallacy is not really due to ambiguity in the terms themselves, as Aristotle admits De Soph. El. 20 § 2, 177 b 7, οὐ διττὸν τὸ παρὰ διαίρεσιν, unless the confusion of two things as distinct as ὅρος and ὄρος be said to be due to ambiguity.

§ 4 Then comes a sensible practical suggestion. Comp. Jowett, Introd. to Plato's Republic p. 166 f., who refers to the statistics of mortality in founding

πρὸς δὲ τούτοις κτλ.] 'In the next place, the scheme in question has another disadvantage. The property shared by the greatest number meets with the least attention. For men care most about their private matters and less for the public concerns.' The zeal and attention of individual owners are checked and chilled by division of ownership. So with the sons who are a 'common possession' of the Guardians.

35 ἢ ὅσον ἐκάστω ἐπιβάλλει] 'or (only at most) in proportion to their stake in them.' Since the whole clause answers to μάλιστα and ἥττον, the verb would seem to be impersonal: 'as much as it falls to each man's share' to care. For the impersonal use, see I. 13 § 8. For the meaning, Herod. VII. 23 μόριον ὅσον αὐτοῖσι ἐπέβαλλε: hence Herod. IV. 115 ἀπολαχόντες τῶν χρημάτων τὸ ἐπιβάλλον = their due share. Camerarius cites Ptolemy as using the word to express 'proportional parts' in astronomical calculations. The same thought recurs 1262 a 3 in the words ὁπόστος τυγχάνει τὸν ἀριθμὸν ὧν. If the society consists of a thousand members, the interest of each is represented by the fraction $\frac{1}{1000}$. But such is the tendency of human nature that the interest felt and care bestowed will be even less than this.

39 οὐχ ὡς ἐκάστου] Not as being children of his individually; but to any of the children (of a given year) any of the fathers (of that year) stands in a paternal relation.

νυνδῇ ἐλέγομεν τὸ ῥῆμα, τὸ ὅτι τὸ ἐμὸν εὖ πράττει ἢ ὅτι τὸ ἐμὸν κακῶς; i.e. when any individual member fares well or ill, they will all with one accord use the expression 'it is well with mine' or 'it is ill with mine.' Hence translate: "As [or if ἐτι be retained, "Further] each of the elder citizens, when he uses the term 'my son' to express his sympathy in the joy or sorrow of a younger comrade, uses it only in the sense of the fractional part which he himself forms of the whole body of citizens. That is, he says 'my son' or 'so and so's'; and this 'so and so's' applies equally to each of the thousand citizens or whatever the number of which the state consists." To take ἐμὸς = my son (not my brother or my father) is justified by υἱός in the preceding line, 6 τέκνον, 14 υἱόν (cp. 4 § 7). In spite of the χίλιοι υἱοί (b 38) it is the elder generation, the 'fathers', that are meant by τῶν χιλίων ἢ ὅσων κτλ. In fact the hypothetical round numbers (see § 6 δισχιλίων καὶ μυρίων) serve merely to present the case definitely and vividly. To οὕτως corresponds ὁπόστος... ὧν, as τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον τοῦ δεινός; mine or A's or B's, and so on through all the thousand. When a 'father' uses the term 'my son' in Callipolis he will be aware that he shares the relation with a number of other 'fathers'.

§ 5 καὶ τοῦτο κτλ] 'And even this he says dubiously, for it is never certain who of the citizens actually had a son or whose son, if born, was reared.' At first sight this seems to make against Aristotle; for if less than the thousand had sons, the fractional interest of each elder citizen, or 'father,' in the younger generation is increased. But then his chance of being childless is proportionately increased.

§ 6 "And yet is it better in this fashion for each of the 2,000 or 10,000 elder citizens to use the term 'mine' (of any one), all calling him by the same name" viz. son 'or as it is used under the present system' with the addition of different names, as nephew, cousin, &c?

7 ἑκαστον...8 μυρίων] Of course only those citizens are meant whose age entitles them to call a boy 'son' and not 'brother' or 'grandson'. Here τὸ αὐτό=son. SUSEM. (141) With αὐτὸ μὲν κτλ may be mentally supplied ὀλιγωροῦντας δὲ πάντων (Thurot).

8 δισχιλίων] Is this genitive after ἑκαστον, as above? Is it not more forcible if taken after τὸ αὐτό=the same relation? Each calls him 'mine', (which will result in) the whole body (plural) calling one person the same relation of some 2,000 people (T. L. Heath).

A different construction of § 6 is proposed by Bonitz; viz. to take ἑκαστον as the object, instead of the subject, of λέγειν, and to make δισχιλίων the genitive after τὸ αὐτὸ ὄνομα, which is a correction for μὲν:—"is it better in this sense to call each (of the younger generation) 'mine', using the same name [i.e. son] for 2,000 or 10,000?" In the same essay

(Hermes VII pp. 102—8) Bonitz defends the ms. reading ἔτι (a 1) on the ground that a new objection, No. 3, is there introduced. The last, No. 2 (§ 4 πρὸς δὲ τοῦτοις...ὀλιγωρήσουσι) dwelt on the depreciation which the term 'my father' suffers. "The multitude of fathers, whom each of the younger men has, is prejudicial and fatal to the loving attention which a son otherwise receives from a father." In the passage which follows (1 ἔτι οὕτως...14 υἱὸν) "the fact is viewed from the opposite side. The name 'my son' loses all value, as each one who uses it shares the problematic relationship with an indefinitely large number." With all deference to authority so weighty, it may be doubted if the two sides are opposed: at all events in a 13 (κρεῖττον γὰρ κτλ) the point of view is the advantage of the younger generation no less than in a 1 (ὀλιγωρήσουσι). Comp. Susemihl Quaest. Crit. VI p. 16 ff.

§ 7 9 δ μὲν γὰρ κτλ] "For one and the same person is called by one man his own son; by another his own brother, or cousin; (by another) according to some other kinship either by blood relationship or by some connexion and affinity to himself in the first instance or else to his kin: and furthermore by another his clansman, his tribesman. For it is better to be actually an own cousin than in Plato's sense a son." There is at present a kind of community in relationship: only it does not extend so far and is compatible with dis-similar individual interests.

See also Zeller's Plato p. 455 f. SUSEM. (146)

34 τὸ δ' ἐρᾶν μὴ κωλύσαι κτλ.] This objection might apparently be met, like the last, n. (145), by some sort of defence. It would however be open to reply on behalf of Aristotle that if the relation of Guardians to one another is seriously to be taken as that of parents and children, brothers and sisters, it is unseemly at any rate to make such strong concessions to sensual passion—whatever may have been Aristotle's own opinion on the direction it took in Greece (see on 10 § 9). Besides, the Platonic institutions take precautions against the "marriage" of those who are actually parents and children,—a fact overlooked by Oncken, who (I. 181) attributes to Aristotle an objection which he neither did nor could bring against Plato on that score—but none at all against the "marriage" of actual brothers and sisters: comp. Rep. v 461 E, ἀδελφοὺς δὲ καὶ ἀδελφὰς δώσει ὁ νόμος συνοικεῖν, Susemihl Plat. Phil. II. 171. As Aristotle does not take especial exception to this it must be assumed that he did not feel his Greek sentiments excessively outraged, any more than Plato, by incest under this form. It is also significant that he has no word of blame for the deception whereby the rulers in the ideal state are directed to ensure that as many as possible of the ablest guardians of both sexes procreate children, and as few as possible of those who are inferior, Rep.

35 ἃς πατρὶ.....ἀπρεπέστατον] But the words ὡς πατρὶός, Rep. III. 403 B, do not bear this implication. Plato permits to the ὀρθὸς ἔρως only such familiarities as would be unimpeachable as between father and son.

36 καὶ τὸ ἐρᾶν μόνον (ἀπρεπέστατον ἐστὶν) according to Greek ideas. Such power lay in a 'little word' to extinguish the fiercest passions, Lacus VIII 838 B.

§ 3 37 δι' ἄλλην μὲν αἰτίαν μηδεμίαν] True there is no other reason assigned, but there may well be irony under the terms ἀμουσία and ἀπειροκαλία (see the quotation n. 146): especially when viewed in connexion with the noble conception of Socrates' moral character and the language of gallantry at the same time put into his lips by Plato. See Appendix I to Dr. Thompson's Phaedrus, esp. pp. 153, 161 ff. The attempt to trans-

figure and etherialize gross passion was pitched in too exalted a strain of romanticism. Plato himself renounced it afterwards. His matter-of-fact disciple simply ignores it.

§ 4 is out of place here; perhaps it is a later marginal note by the author.

§ 5 1262 b 3 ὅλως δὲ] Comp. I. 6. 5 n. "Such a law must bring about the very opposite to that which ought to be the result of well-framed laws and to that which was Socrates' own reason (c. 2. § 1) for thinking that the institutions regarding women and children ought to be thus ordered."

This criticism seems unfair. Such private friendships and affections as Aristotle is thinking of do not, according to Plato, promote concord in the state generally, but rather divert men's attention from the whole community into private channels, and by creating private interests tend to selfishness and disunion. So the Spartan love of domesticity is censured; Rep. VIII 548 A, B.

This slight alteration is certainly preferable to that proposed for διαφροντίζειν (see below), but, as Vahlen rightly judges, not absolutely necessary: either ἀναισθητον εἶναι can be supplied with Vahlen, or the acc. τὴν οἰκειότητα κτλ taken as the object of διαφροντίζειν, with Congreve and Susem.¹; then ἀναγκαῖον δν is to be construed, as Bernays does, omitting the comma; in the former case it is an absolute accusative. Hug in p. x of his edition of that dialogue considers ἐρωτικοὶ λόγοι to be another title for the Symposium; but this could only be allowed if the text read "Plato in the discourses on love" whereas it is "Aristophanes in the discourses on love," and there is nothing to hinder our supplying "contained in Plato's Symposium." Moreover Plato's own theory of love in its fulness and integrity is there given to Socrates alone, who expressly combats the suggestion made by Aristophanes that it is "seeking the other half of ourselves" 205 D; cp. 212 C. Yet no doubt, in so far as Aristotle here makes use of the thought expressed by Plato's Aristophanes, Plato agrees with the latter. This much is clear, that Aristotle intends to designate Plato as the author of the Symposium. SUSEM. (148)

The special affections would be lost in the general sense of comradeship. This seems simplest, though it is also possible to govern οἰκείότητα by διαφροντίζειν; so that either ἢ πατέρα κτλ is the subject of διαφροντίζειν, as Congreve and Susemihl think, or as Ridgeway Transactions II. 132 proposes ἢ πατέρα κτλ is to be regarded as exegetic of the wider term οἰκείτητα. He translates: 'so the result is that in such a constitution as Plato's least of all is it necessary to have regard for the mutual family feelings implied in these names' (of father and son).

21 πατέρα ὡς υἱοῦ κτλ] "that one citizen should care for another as father for son, or son for father, or as one brother for another." Ridgeway aptly compares VIII(V). 11. 21 ταμίαν ὡς κοινῶν ἀλλὰ μὴ ὡς ἰδίων, Metaph. M. 5 § 6, 1079 b 34 τῶν ὡς γένους εἰδῶν, species in relation to a genus. For other views of the construction see Critical Notes.

§ 9 23 τὸ ἀγαπητόν has been taken to mean (1) only, rare, unique;=μόνον (Eaton, quoting Odysey II. 365 μόνος ἐὼν ἀγαπητός): and (2) much desired, dearly prized, precious. SUSEM.

See Cope's note on Rhet. I. 7. 41: καὶ τὸ ἀγαπητόν (μείζον ἀγαθὸν ἐστὶ), καὶ τοῖς μὲν μόνον τοῖς δὲ μετ' ἄλλων, where it must have the second meaning, as unicus in Catullus 64. 215.

§ 4 1262 a 40 γεωργοῖς] Here as often the farmers stand for the entire third class of citizens in Plato's ideal state, τὸ τῶν ἄλλων πολιτῶν πλῆθος of 5 § 18, all who are neither ἀρχοντες nor ἐπίκουροι; properly including (§ 9) τεχνῖται and all who are engaged in trade as well as in agriculture. See 5 § 20, where all are enumerated. The strength of this class excites Aristotle's fears: see 5 §§ 19, 20, 22.

41 χρήσιμον] Comp. VIII(V). II. 15 (Eaton). This section is the only new application of the argument in the whole passage which follows § 3. For the rest, §§ 5—9 are essentially a repetition, with certain distinctive and appropriate nuances, of the objections contained in 3 §§ 4—7; yet they are not constructed like another version simply to supersede them. Neither passage gives the slightest cause for suspicion of its genuineness. We must be content to set down to the occasional negligences of Aristotle's style this reiteration of a previous line of argument without any indication that it has occurred before. Comp. n. (164) on 5 § 14. SUSEM. (149)

1262 b 2 τοιούτους=ἦττον φιλικούς: cp. I. 8 § 7 n. Plato would altogether disclaim such a policy; see Rep. 416-7, 463 b. See n. on 5 § 20, 1264 a 27.

§ 9 25 περὶ τοῦ μεταφέρειν] In Plato's ideal state, as children of the Guardians grow up they are to be removed into the third class of citizens if they appear to degenerate. Conversely the rulers are to observe carefully any exceptional children of this third class,

27 πολλὴν ἔχει παραχῆν] Schlosser remarks that this requires a more detailed proof. SUSEM. (151)

There does seem some variance between the rule laid down above, Rep. 423 C, Tim. 19 A (τὰ δὲ τῶν κακῶν εἰς τὴν ἄλλην λάθρα διαδοτέον πόλιν, ἐπαν- ξανομένων δὲ σκοποῦντας αἰετὸς τοὺς ἀξίους πάλιν ἀνάγειν δεῖν, τοὺς δὲ παρὰ σφίσιν ἀναξίους εἰς τὴν τῶν ἐπαινούντων χώραν μεταλλάττειν), and that other regulation about exposure Rep. V 460 C (τὰ δὲ τῶν χειρόνων, καὶ ἐάν τι τῶν ἐτέρων ἀνάπηρον γίγνηται, ἐν ἀπορρήτῳ τε καὶ ἀδῆλῳ κατα- κρύψουσιν).

28 καὶ γινώσκειν κτλ] But what harm could this knowledge do in the case of the children of Guardians who were degraded? As to the children of the third class adopted as Guardians, nothing could prevent the whole body of Guardians from knowing in the end that they were of different blood. But if we assume that all the other institutions of this ideal state are practicable, these adopted children would suffer no neglect, from any one or in anything, on that account. SUSEM. (152)

Aristotle implies that jealousy and dis-union would follow the recognition of the facts.

29 τίσι τίνας διδῶσιν] This clause depends on γινώσκειν.

§ 10 πάλαι=above, §§ 1—3. So in III. 14. 14 τὸν πάλαι λόγον, VIII(V). 11.

24. Obviously Aristotle shrinks with horror (as we should) from these crimes against blood relations: but there is no evidence that it is on the ground which Grote ascribes to him, "that serious mischief would fall upon the community if family quarrels or homicide remained without religious expiation."

34 ὥστε εὐλαβεῖσθαι] "so as to be on their guard," as they might be if they used these terms of relationship.

c. 5 Objections to community of property: §§ 1—13. See Analysis p. 103.

§ 1 37 τίνα τρόπον δεῖ κτλ] This issue is not decided in what follows, for the conclusion adopted in §§ 5—8 excludes the first and third of these alternatives in their application to all the land, but does not necessarily exclude the second. Later on however, IV(VII). 10. 10 n. (834), we perceive that even the second suggestion does not by any means correspond with Aristotle's view, which is more like the third, provided it be restricted to a part of the territory, whereas Plato had extended it to the whole. In Plato's Callipolis the Guardians are forbidden the possession of gold and silver and of money altogether, and so far they have no property of their own. Nevertheless the connexion of Platonic thought leaves no doubt that the entire body of Guardians is the sole proprietor of the soil, and that thus they hold landed property in common. The farmers of the third class are consequently tenants who pay a rent in kind for the farms they cultivate, this rent being a definite amount of the produce supplied to the Guardians, who have the other indispensable necessities of life provided for them by other members of the third class in lieu of a tax levied for protection. Lastly, the common dwellings and common meals of the guardians make community of property and community of life amongst them an actual accomplished fact. See Rep. III 416 C, IV 419, V 464 C, and comp. Zeller's Plato p. 481 Eng. tr. The extension of these common dwellings and common meals to women is not expressly mentioned by Plato, but it is implied in his complete equalization of male and female Guardians:—cp. n. (196) and I. 13. 9 n. (116). Thus, as Oncken I. 183 justly observes, "Plato has simply abolished the possession of capital by a theoretical fiat, while Aristotle B. I c. 8 has done his best to banish it to the remotest regions of economic life. Only landed property with the income derived from it is of any account in their philosophical deliberations." There is this difference between them that Aristotle believes community of property to be possible apart from community of families: whereas the fact is that there cannot be a true marriage in our sense of the term without settled and independent house-keeping of one's own. Here he is not so consistent as Plato, which is easily explained however by the fact that his whole economic theory rests upon the basis of slavery in the genuine fashion of antiquity, of Greek antiquity especially. And one consequence of this is that, as Oncken again justly observes, his conception of property does not involve that of personal labour. On this point see Introd. p. 27. SUSEM. (153)

39 πολιτείαν] Cognate accus. after πολιτεύεσθαι. The phrase recurs VI(IV). I. 4. We find καθ' ἃς πολιτεύονται, II. 7. 1; the accusative in I. II. 13 ταῦτα πολιτεύονται, and in τὰ πρὸς αὐτοὺς II. 7. 14, is not quite similar.

§ 2 40 χωρὶς σκέψαιτο ἀπὸ] separately from=independently of. Comp. Plato Phaedo 98 C διαφύας ἔχει χωρὶς ἀπ' ἀλλήλων, "to separate them." This is the sense of ἀπὸ in ἀπόφασις, negative predication, διηρημένον τοῦ δυτος as Aristotle puts it. Compare πόρρω ἀφ' ἡμῶν Problems XVIII. 10, 917 b 14, and Nic. Eth. IX. 8. I οὐδὲν ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ πράττει, nothing away from, i.e. unlike, himself.

public property, but the produce divided for private uses, or (3) when both lands and crops are held in common." Of modern theories, (3) alone answers to what Mill Pol. Ec. II. c. 1 calls thoroughgoing Communism: (2) to the milder forms proposed by St Simon and Fourier. γήπεδα, plots of ground, farmsteads, like οἰκόπεδον, emphasizing the site of the property.

4 ἔνια] Editors refer to Lacedaemon (§ 7) and Tarentum VII(VI). 5. 10. But these instances seem hardly sufficient to establish the first form of communism: and ἔθνη, see n. (11), would suggest here also non-Hellenic tribes, to whose customs Aristotle paid considerable attention to judge from the fragments of his Νόμιμα or Νόμιμα βαρβαρικά; cp. IV(VII). 2. 11. That work being lost, the most apposite references are from Diodoros v. 44, of the Vaccaeans, a Celtiberian tribe: v. 9, of the exiled Cnidians and Rhodians who colonized the Aeolian isles (Lipari): v. 41, of Panchaia, which Strabo thinks a fiction. Nearachus in Strabo xv. 1. 66 testifies to the custom amongst certain tribes of India. Further, the prevalence formerly of this system of land-tenure would serve to explain συσσίτια.

7 τινες] On this second system, if the soil is to remain common property there must be a periodic partition, such as is in force even now in Russia, in some Swiss cantons (e.g. Glaris) and amongst the village communities (dessas) of Java. This was the characteristic feature of the German mark, first known by Caesar's account of the Suevi (Bell. Gall. VI. 29). Strabo VIII. 6. 7 affirms it of the Dalmatians, and the Greek settlers on the Aeolian islands finally adopted this plan, Diod. v. 9. In fact, "there appears to be no country inhabited by an Aryan race in which traces do not remain of the ancient periodical redistribution," which preceded and at length ended in perpetuity of occupation: Maine Village Communities p. 81. To collect these traces is the object of M. de Laveleye's Primitive Property: see pp. 109, 145 ff. (of the English trans. by Marriott). It was a modification of this second system which appears to have prevailed among the Village Indians of North America at the time of its discovery. 'They still held lands in common: the lands of each Aztec "group" could not be alienated. They constructed joint-tenement houses and lived in large households composed of a number of related families, sometimes fifty or a hundred families together: and there are grounds for believing that they practised common living in the household': i.e. something analogous to συσσίτια; L. H. Morgan Anc. Society pp. 187, 200 ff., 535—538.

§ 3 8 ἑτέρων] a distinct body. αὐτῶν = the citizens themselves; αὐτῶν αὐτοῖς διαπονούντων = when they are αὐτουργοί, Thucyd. I. 126.

"This remark is quite true in itself, but it makes for Plato rather than against him. His guardians are a distinct body from the γεωργοί and are thus in the position described as most favourable to communism" (Oncken). SUSEM. (154)

10 τὰ περὶ τὰς κτήσεις is nomin., the subject of ἂν παρέχοι and not the object of διαπονούντων.

11. "For where all have not equal shares in enjoyment any more than in work, indeed have very unequal shares, dissatisfaction must needs be felt with those who have much enjoyment and little labour, by those who get less and have more work to do." This is the standing difficulty of communistic schemes, see Mill Pol. Econ. II. 1 § 3.

§ 5 22 ἄλλας τοιαύτας] Aristotle never urges (1) that communism will diminish the efficiency of labour, nor (2) that it will relax the checks on an increase of population. The Hellenic idea of the omnipotence of the state precluded these objections. The conclusion at which he arrives is endorsed in the remarks of Mill Pol. Ec. ib. p. 128: "We must compare communism at its best with the régime of individual property, not as it is, but as it might be made. The principle of private property has never yet had a fair trial in any country."

ὃν δὲ νῦν τρόπον κτλ] ὃν τρόπον νῦν ἔχει with the epexegetic ἐπικοσμηθὲν κτλ is the subject of διενέγκαι: "the order of things at present existing if improved by good manners and the enactment of wise laws would be far superior": ἔθεσι, somewhat wider than morality, see § 15; ways, habits, instincts.

"This is in reality not so much proved as stated; still it is not laid down simply on the strength of § 4. Oncken I. 184 goes decidedly too far in saying the attacks on community of property lack all precision and point, and that the doctrine is not refuted on its own merits like the community of families. He fails to notice what is pointed out by Zeller Platonic Studies p. 289 that the words of § 6—"all will thrive better under a system of private property because then each one labours assiduously for his own advantage"—apply to property exactly the same argument which was used with most effect to refute on its own grounds community of wives and children and was for that reason twice advanced, 3 §§ 4—7, 4 §§ 4—8 n. (149)." SUSEM. (156)

 Oncken I. 183, that in general wherever,
 as was the case in Greece, the freemen are principally supported by the labour of strangers who are not free, there the ruling caste as a whole stands in a certain communistic relation as opposed to the servile caste. Compare further n. (166).

 Xenophon De Rep. Laced. 6 §§ 3, 4 relates in the main the same facts, first, as to slaves and helots; and as to horses, with the more precise limitation that a sick man or any one requiring a carriage or desirous of travelling rapidly to a given place will, if he sees a horse anywhere, take it and after using it return it faithfully unhurt. As to dogs, he still more definitely restricts this usage to the chase. Those who require the dogs invite their owner to go hunting; while he,
 if he has not the time, readily sends them off with the pack. There is no such information in Xenophon about produce growing in the fields: what he does say is that after a meal in the country people left the remainder of the food they had prepared in store-chambers: others, detained while hunting and in need of food, might, if they had no provisions with them, break the seals of these store-chambers and take what they required, leaving the rest behind and replacing the seal. SUSEM. (159)

νομοθέτου ἔργον] Undoubtedly Aristotle hopes for results of human legislation which now we only expect from the training of the conscience by morality and religion; see on 9 § 12 n. (296). Herein he agrees with Plato; not however, like him, from any denial or underestimate of the rights or power of individuality (Oncken). See notes (161) and (162). SUSEM. (160)

40 ἔτι δὲ κτλ] "Again, even to the pleasure we feel, the difference that it makes to call a thing our own is unspeakably great." An expression like οὐράνιον ὄσον, θαυμάσιον ὄσον, nimum quantum.

41 μὴ γὰρ οὐ μάτην] By μὴ or μήποτε with the indicative, no uncertainty is intended; ibi quoque adhibita reperitur, ubi res affirmatur non negatur. "It may well be that our love for ourselves is not without a purpose."

8 ἀναιροῦσιν ἔργα] "destroy the functions."

9 σωφροσύνης] Even Zeller Phil. d. Gr. II ii p. 697, n. 7, thinks this an unfair objection, because in Plato's commonwealth a guardian is bound to continence in respect of all women to whom he is not married by the authorities, the Platonic 'community of wives' being the very reverse of free indulgence of the appetites. Quite true: but then neither is this the point of Aristotle's objection. What he urges is that voluntary self-restraint, which is nowhere possible save where monogamy is established, and in Plato's state is out of the question, alone deserves the name of continence, σωφροσύνη. We must admit with Oncken that he is right in this, and that §§ 9, 10 make an especially agreeable impression, as a defence of the individual's moral freedom. Further, see n. (206 b). SUSEM. (162)

10 ἔργον καλόν] Strictly, a goodly deed, fair to contemplate; then a 'moral action' (since the motive makes the act virtuous; it must be done τοῦ καλοῦ ἕνεκα), with that peculiar implication of 'nobleness' which runs through the Nic. Ethics.

12 πρᾶξιν ἐλευθέριον] for which private property, e.g. money, is required. Comp. Nic. Eth. x. 8. 4 τῷ μὲν ἐλευθερίῳ δεήσει χρημάτων πρὸς τὸ πράττειν τὰ ἐλευθέρια; ib. § 7. Can we ascribe acts of liberality to the gods? τίνοι δὲ δώσουσιν; ἀτοπον δ' εἰ καὶ ἔσται αὐτοῖς νόμισμα ἢ τι τοιοῦτον.

13 ἐν τῇ γὰρ χρήσει... 14 ἔργον ἐστίν] for the use of one's possessions is the field for the exercise of liberality. Cicero's usus virtutis, Acad. post. 1. 38 is analogous to ἔργον in this sense.

§ 11 17 φιλίαν τινὰ θαυμαστήν] Comp. Dante Purgatorio xv. 55—57, che per quanto si dice più lì nostro, | tanto possiede più di ben ciascuno, | e più di caritate arde in quel chiostro; 73—75, e quanta gente più lassù s' intende, | più v' è da bene amare, e più vi s' ama, | e come specchio, l' uno all' altro rende.

ἄλλως τε καὶ ὅταν κατηγορῇ τις] Here he evidently has in mind Plato's expressions, Republic IV 425 C: τί δέ, τὰ ἀγοραῖα ξυμβολαίων τε περί κατ' ἀγοράν ἕκαστοι ἂ πρὸς ἀλλήλους ξυμβάλλουσιν... τούτων τολμήσομεν τι νομοθετεῖν; 464 D δίκαι τε καὶ ἐγκλήματα πρὸς ἀλλήλους οὐκ οἰχῆσεται ἐξ αὐτῶν, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, διὰ τὸ μηδὲν ἴδιον ἐκτῆσθαι πλὴν τὸ σῶμα; Although not precisely the same evils are enumerated there and here, nor expressly derived from the institution of private property, yet in fact Aristotle's words quite accord with the view of the Republic. Comp. §§ 20, 21 with nn. (174, 175). SUSEM. (163)

Add Rep. 465 C: τὰ γε μὴν μικρότατα τῶν κακῶν ὁκνῶ καὶ λέγειν ὧν ἀπηλλαγμένοι ἂν εἴεν, κολακείας τε πλουσιῶν [πένητες] ἀπορίας τε καὶ ἀλγυδῶνας θσας ἐν... χρηματισμοῖς διὰ τροφήν οἰκετῶν ἀναγκαῖαν ἴσχουσι, τὰ μὲν δανειζόμενοι, τὰ δὲ ἐξαρνούμενοι. Eaton quotes Aristotle. Eccles. 657 sq.

§ 12 22 ὧν οὐδὲν γίνεται] This is begging the question, though it may fairly be surmised that communism would not cure all these evils.

23 ἐπεὶ καὶ τοὺς κοινὰ κτλ] “Since we see just those people who are joint owners and who share property quarrelling far more than those who have their estates separate.” Are these the συναπόδημοι of § 4? Or is the reference to commercial partnerships?

25 ἀλλὰ θεωροῦμεν κτλ] The cases of quarrels seen to arise out of partnerships are few, it is true; but then we compare them with the large number of those who have separate possessions.

§ 13 29 ἀδύνατος] Compare Grote III. pp. 217—222. “This supposed impossibility is the mode of expressing strong disapprobation and repugnance. Plato’s project contradicts sentiments conceived as fundamental and consecrated: the reasons offered to prove it impossible are principally founded upon the very sentiment adverted to. The truly forcible objection is the sentiment itself.” Plato impugns it and declares it to be inapplicable to his guardians: amongst whom as he conceives, a totally different sentiment of obligation would grow up. Similarly “if Sparta had never been actually established and if Aristotle had read a description of it as a mere project, he would probably have pronounced it impracticable.”

30 παρακρούσεως] “fallacy” as in De Soph. El. 17 § 3, 175 b 1, Demosth. c. Timocr. § 194, 760 27 φανακισμοῦ καὶ παρακρούσεως ἔνεκα.

§ 14 Here too it would have been as well to state that these remarks are nothing new, but only a repetition of c. 2, although as new points arise out of them (see Analysis p. 104) there is much greater justification than there was in the case of c. 3 §§ 4—7 and c. 4 §§ 4—8: cp. n. Similarly ῥυθμός, ἡ τῆς κινήσεως τάξις (Pl. Laws II 665 A), is the orderly succession of steps in dancing or notes of music of certain definite lengths. The unit or element of which long successions of 'times' are composed is βάσις, 'step' in dancing, 'foot' in metre. This is clear from Metaph. xiv (N) 1. 10, 1087 b 33, τὸ δ' ἐν ὅτι μέτρον σημαίνει, φανερόν. καὶ ἐν παντὶ ἐστὶ τι ἕτερον ὑποκείμενον, ὅσον ἐν ἀρμονίᾳ δισεις (in music a quarter-tone, the smallest interval), ἐν δὲ μεγέθει δάκτυλος ἢ πούς ἢ τι τοιοῦτον, ἐν δὲ ῥυθμοῖς βάσις ἢ συλλαβή. τὰ περὶ τὰς κτήσεις] Aristotle's fondness for social institutions of the Cretan and Spartan type—see § 7, n. (158)—is here seen in a new direction, of which we shall hear more in c. 9 § 31 n. (341), 10 §§ 7, 8, IV(VII). 10 §§ 9, 10 and notes. Compare further notes 168, 192, 208—11, 234, 236 b. SUSEM. (166) τοῖς δ' οὐ χρώνται] Much that is known is not introduced because it is regarded as impracticable. Assuming that the earth, and doubtless the race of men upon it (8 § 21 n.), has always existed and always will exist Aristotle shares the conviction of Plato and most other Greek thinkers that there has not been one single historical development of humanity, but it has begun and been carried on, in a manner similar if not quite the same, for innumerable times over and over again. extent everything has existed before, and there is nothing new under the sun: all discoveries have been already made and then lost again, so that they need to be rediscovered. See Zeller II ii 792. Comp. Susemihl in Jahrb. f. Philol. vol. CIII. 1871. p. 135 ff.: IV(VII). 10 §§ 7, 8 n. (828). Plato however would have had all the more right to reply to this objection that he himself has but made such a rediscovery: that, as Oncken observes, he has only followed Aristotle's advice and collected institutions hitherto widely scattered: that his innovation consists solely in this combination of old material, as all the elements of his ideal state were to be found previously isolated, some in Sparta and Crete, others amongst the Pythagoreans, and others again in Socrates. Comp. Zeller's Plato p. 483 f. SUSEM. (167)

§ 16 1264 a 3 οὐκ ἂν ἔλαθεν] An appeal to the evidence of history. It is like Aristotle to seek for the doctrines he approves some basis in tradition, authority, popular or wide-spread beliefs. "An institution which has flourished in many different ages and races must presumably fulfil some want and correspond to some deeply-seated instinct." Grote rejoins that the same objection (like the objection of impossibility) would apply to the novelties in his own ideal state. But Aristotle might fairly have argued that the long time which has elapsed without a communistic state makes it the less likely that one ever will be established, as no originating cause seems forthcoming adequate to start it.

4 οὐ συνῆκται] have not been systematized. A 'synthesis' is wanting.

This view found a strong expression from K. F. Hermann The historical elements of Plato's ideal of a state, in Gesam. Abhandl. VII. 140; "Plato has drawn every single feature in his picture of the state from the actual political life of Greece: he has but applied the abstractions of science to produce a formal and harmonious combination." It is at least obvious that the Spartan ἀγωγή is, in a manner, the true starting-point of Plato, as of Xenophon and Aristotle (Grote III. 209—211); but some caution should be exercised in the choice of precedents. Thus L. H. Morgan Ancient Society p. 417 conjectures that the system of relationship propounded in Rep. v 461 D, Tim. 18 C, D was derived from "traditions not known to us": and Curtius (History of Greece I p. 181 Eng. trans.) that the three orders of society Rep. IV were adopted from Crete (see n. 818):—two features of the scheme which bear in a high degree the stamp of originality. / Hick

§ 17 5 τοῖς ἔργοις] "actually in process of formation." The plural is used as well as the singular ἔργῳ with or without the article, in prose or poetry.

8 εἰς συσσίτια] See n. (166). That Plato too intended this, was shown in n. (153) on § 1. From the expression here and in § 15 we might be led to believe that this was not the case. Comp. § 19 n. (170), § 24 n. (179), § 27 n. (184): 6 § 3 n. (187), § 5 n. (195). SUSEM. (168) φρατρίας] The form φατρία (as in Aeschines II § 147), not φρατρία, is supported by the Corpus Inscr. Att. II. No. 599, l. 1 with Köhler's remark; Philippi Contributions to a history of the Athenian citizenship (Beiträge u. s. w. Berlin 1870) p. 177 nn. 55, 56; Bürmann Three Studies in Attic Law in Jahrb. f. Phil. Suppl. IX. p. 615. At the same time φρ is often written in the cursive MSS. with a small hook to φ, so that φ and φρ can hardly be distinguished with certainty from one another. In such a case therefore it may be advisable to depart from the one safe principle of following the oldest manuscript authority and to retain the only rational form φρ even against the codices. Comp. 3 § 6 n. (141). SUSEM. (169)

10 καὶ νῦν] Here again, as so often in these chapters and elsewhere, νῦν does not mean 'at the present time' but 'actually', and ποιεῖν ἐπιχειροῦσιν is but a limiting expression for ποιοῦσιν.

§ 18 11 ὁ τρόπος τῆς ὅλης πολιτείας κτλ] "has never explained what is the nature of the entire polity which (these) members of the community share. Yet the bulk of the state is made up in effect by the bulk of citizens other than the guardians." For οἱ ἄλλοι πολῖται, see § 20, and n. on 4 § 4.

§ 19 17 εἰ μὲν γὰρ κτλ] Aristotle might well have spared himself the consideration of this possibility. It is strange that he has not learnt from Plato whether this third order of citizens is to have community of families and of property; whether, in other words, just those characteristics which, like their education, are distinctive of the two upper classes in the ideal state, are to be extended to the third, or not. It is not easy to imagine a stronger case of inability to transport oneself to an opponent's sphere of thought. In fact he cannot be acquitted of very culpable carelessness in the use of the work he is criticizing. As regards community of property at any rate, Plato has most expressly said Rep. III 417 A, IV 419 that nothing of the kind is to exist amongst citizens of the third class, leaving room for no doubt whatever as to his real opinion. Nor is Aristotle even consistent. For in 4 § 4 above he has, with better reason, raised an objection which is only intelligible if these institutions are not supposed existing in the third class of citizens. Comp. § 24 n. (179); also n. (168) and the references there given. SUSEM. (170)

18 ἢ τί πλεῖον κτλ] See Critical Notes. The sense we require is not, "what compensation will those receive who submit to their rule?" (which is repeated in the next sentence), but "what advantage will the rulers have over their subjects?" The older commentators endeavoured to extract this by taking τοῖς ὑπομένουσι τὴν ἀρχήν=τοῖς ὑπομένουσιν ἄρχειν, "those who undertake to govern." But this is against the sense of ὑπομενοῦσι in the next clause: "or what inducement will (the rest of the citizens) have to submit to them?"

20 σοφίζονται]=devise or contrive (Eaton).

οἷον Κρήτες] See on 9 § 3 n. (281) and Exc. III. This statement is confirmed by the skolion of the Cretan poet Hybrias there quoted. See also IV (VII). 10. I n. (820). SUSEM. (171)

21 τοῖς δούλοις ἐφέντες] "while allowing their serfs the same rights with themselves in other things, have deprived them"...(ἀπειρήκασιν would be 'have prohibited'). As we now know, οἰκές was the proper term for these serfs, but they are called δούλοι passim in the inscription of Gortyn.

"The arguments in §§ 20—24 (εἰ δέ, καθάπερ...γεωργῶν γυναῖκες) are in the main quite correct, but apply just as much to Aristotle's ideal state as to Plato's (Oncken). Yet see n. (177)." SUSEM. (172)

 As Grote justly remarks, this is a larger

 we find elsewhere in Greece, even in Aristotle, who sets aside the rest of the people as not members of the commonwealth, IV(VII). 9. 3. Plato not only treats them as integral parts of the state, but in a sense makes them the ultimate object of his solicitude. It is for them that he sacrifices the private pleasure of the guardians, and compels his philosophic rulers to descend into the cave.

10 θυμοειδέσι...ἀνδράσι] The members of the second order of citizens, Guardians in the narrower and inexact sense (φύλακες = ἐπίκουροι) from whom the first class (ἄρχοντες) are drafted off. For after they have attained the age of twenty, only the better qualified amongst them proceed to the higher education in mathematics; and out of these again at thirty only the very ablest receive instruction five years longer in philosophy (διαλεκτική). Then after fifteen years more devoted to practical life, after serving in higher commands, they are at length received into the highest order, the rulers proper: see Rep. VII 536 D ff., comp. n. (970) on IV(VII). 17. 15 and Zeller's Plato p. 480 n. (69). In the Aristotelian model-state, however, all citizens in later life may attain to a share in the government and administration; provided, that is, their fellow-citizens elect them to the particular offices of state for which they are eligible. See on III. 1 § 10 n. (440), 4 § 5 (471), 13 § 12 (599), IV(VII). 9 § 9 (817), 13 § 9 (885) and Exc. 1 to B. V(VIII). As Eaton remarks, θυμοειδὲς = 'men of spirit' is Plato's own term (Rep. II 375 B, 376 C) for his caste of warriors: comp. III. 16 § 1 n. §§ 27, 28 This relates to one of the most brilliant and striking episodes of the Republic: the objection of Adeimantus at the opening of B. IV that Socrates has insufficiently provided for the happiness of his guardians: 419—421 C.

15 ἔτι δὲ...17 νομοθέτην] Here Aristotle is guilty of a further piece of carelessness. Plato certainly says, 420 B, οὐ μὴν πρὸς τοῦτο βλέποντες τὴν πόλιν οἰκίζομεν, ὅπως ἐν τι ἡμῖν ἔθνος ἔσται διαφερόντως εὐδαιμον, ἀλλ' ὅπως ὅτι μάλιστα ὅλη ἡ πόλις: but Aristotle has not attended to another passage V 465 D—466 B, where this thread is taken up (μέμνησθαι οὖν ὅτι ἐν τοῖς πρόσθεν οὐκ οἶδ' ὅπου λόγος ἡμῖν ἐπέπληξεν, ὅτι τοὺς φύλακας οὐκ εὐδαίμονας ποιοῖμεν) and to the later discussion IX 680—692 B, whence it appears that the former statement is only provisionally made. Plato's ultimate decision is the very opposite: that his polity is the sole means whereby the Guardians can attain to perfect happiness (465 D ζήσουσι τοῦ μακαριστοῦ βίου, δν οἱ Ὀλυμπιονῆται ζῶσι, μακαριώτερον). Thus this objection breaks down entirely. We have had instances of similar negligence already in § 17 n. (168), § 19 (170), § 24 (179): and there is another in 6 § 5 (195). Moreover in IV(VII). 9 § 7 Aristotle himself says εὐδαίμονα δὲ πόλιν οὐκ εἰς μέρος

28 περὶ ὀλίγων κτλ] "has precisely determined very few things." In this comparison of the Republic with the Laws Aristotle's tendency to look for definite results (noticed above, c. 2) is especially prominent. He is in no way concerned to exhaust the differences between the two polities: indeed the whole discussion started with the dogmatic inquiry, "what are the limits of community in civil life?" 1 § 2. But one cannot help seeing that the deepest ground of this difference, the altered philosophical standpoint and the change in the conception of the state, has escaped him: had he clearly recognised this, he would not have expressed himself as he has in § 5 (Zeller). See however § 4 (T. L. Heath).

τρίτον δ' ἐκ τούτων] Comp. n. 182 SUSEM. (186). Supply ἐστὶ. "The deliberative and supreme (executive) body of the state (is) a third order formed out of these latter." He quite correctly takes the ἄρχοντες to be a committee chosen out of the ἐπίκουροι: specially trained military officers, of mature experience and of great eminence in science, are from time to time coopted into the governing order. In the individual soul the gulf is fixed between the λογιστικὸν and the other two parts which make up τὸ ἄλογον: but in the state the wide distinction is between ἄρχοντες and ἐπίκουροι together, i.e. φύλακες in the vaguer sense, on the one hand, and οἱ ἄλλοι πολῖται on the other.

§ 3 34 περὶ δὲ τῶν γεωργῶν κτλ] Here Aristotle contradicts himself again: see on 5 § 17 n. (168), § 19 (170), § 24 (179), 6 § 5 (195). For at 5 § 25 above he recognised quite rightly that even the members of the second order are to have no real share in the administration: whereas now he expresses doubt whether some part in it may not fall to the third order, and whether they too are not to go out on military service! If there is one thing which Plato has made clear it undoubtedly is his principle of the division of labour. This, which he puts into the foreground, prohibits the shoemaker from ever attempting to be at the same time a tradesman or a carpenter or a farmer: à fortiori it prohibits the artisan or farmer from serving likewise as soldier; and either of them, or even the soldier, from ruling. See Zeller Plato p. 470 f. SUSEM. (187)

39 τοῖς ἔξωθεν κτλ] But in the Republic. II 376 E—III 412 B, VI 502 C—VII 541 B), of the women's share in the duties of the guardians v 449 A—457 B, so that this whole work is literally filled with what Aristotle has here cited; only the first two books lay the foundation for it and the eighth and ninth enlarge upon the other forms of government. Thus independently of the discussions on the immortality of the soul x 608 C—621 D nothing is left which could come under the head of these discussions which lie outside the subject. The treatment of the above questions is no doubt crossed over and over again by dissertations on metaphysics, the theory of cognition, psychology, and ethics. This is what Aristotle really means, and he might from his standpoint consider them as not properly belonging to the subject. But that is no correct standard of judgment. What should have compelled Plato to write a purely political work in the Republic? Why might it not have been his intention to present a work in which the specially political discussion was only an organic member of a more comprehensive whole? SUSEM. (189)

the subject of a given Platonic dialogue? it is convenient to distinguish the subject of the conversation from the subject or subjects of the work. Thus in the case of the Republic, though the thesis ὡς ἀμεινον δικαισύνη ἀδικίας is the subject of the conversation between Socrates and his friends, it may fairly be said that the work is concerned with the καλλίπολις, the theory of ideas, and some minor matters. It is however the thesis ὡς ἀμεινον δικαισύνη ἀδικίας which gives unity to the composition. Hence, although one of the incidental discussions may have, in consequence of its originality, both for the reader and for Plato himself (περὶ πολιτείας ἦν τὸ κεφάλαιον Timaeus 17 C), a special interest, it is unreasonable to regard what is alien to it as in any way irrelevant. In fact Aristotle's remark is no more than the expression of his characteristic dislike of Plato's indirect method of approaching the doctrines which he wishes to enforce." JACKSON.

§ 4 1265 a 1 τῶν δὲ νόμων κτλ.] This is quite incorrect: in the Laws about equal parts are taken up with constitutional theory and with legislation, and the constitution in the narrower sense is treated much more fully than in the Republic (Suckow Form der plat. Schriften 132 f.). Aristotle (n. 466 on III. 3. 9) agrees with Plato in including under the constitution, in the wider sense, the regulation of education. From his point of view therefore the whole of the Laws from the middle of B. v to the end of B. VIII with a large part of B. XII may be said to be περὶ τῆς πολιτείας, while books IX, X, XI and the rest of B. XII are a code of laws, νόμοι. SUSEM. (190)

Oncken (I. 194—199) appeals to this passage in support of his view that the first four books of the Laws, and part of the fifth, are a later spurious introduction (τὸ προοίμιον τῶν νόμων, 734 E) with which Aristotle was wholly unacquainted.

2 καὶ ταύτην βουλ. κτλ.] "and while endeavouring to make it more universally applicable to the existing states he gradually works it round to the other polity once more." κοινοτέραν=common to many states, an average polity. Cp. § 16 and VI(IV). 2. 4.

"When he wrote the Republic Plato looked upon the pattern constitution there described as by no means impracticable. He declares that its immediate introduction might be secured without difficulty under a definite condition, which though not indeed easy, nor of frequent occurrence, was yet by no means impossible: v 471 C f., 473 C, VI 497 A f., 499 B—502 C. In the Republic moreover he knows nothing of any pattern state of the second rank, holding an intermediate position between the first and the existing constitutions. But in the Laws he has changed his view on this point. The form of the state described in the Republic (though he still holds it to be the best) is an impracticable ideal: v 739 A f., VII 807 B, IX 853 C, cp. 874 E f.; III 691 C f., 692 B f., IV 713 C f. For that reason he now replaces it by a second best scheme of constitution which approximates much more nearly to the actual constitutions, not without expressing the apprehension that if the attempt were made to call this into life much in it would have to be abandoned, so that the actual result would be only a pattern state of the third order: v 739 A—E, 745 E ff., cp. VII 805 B. Here too the possibility of thus realizing it, though only to a limited extent, is made dependent on a condition, very similar though not entirely the same as the condition which is indispensable for the realization of the state planned in the Republic; namely, that it should be undertaken by an absolute prince (τύραννος) with an inclination for philosophy, young, of good disposition and as yet uncorrupted, in conjunction with a philosophic lawgiver: IV 709 E ff., v 735 D. Cp. Zeller Plat. Stud. 16 ff., Plato (Eng. tr.) p. 483, 522 f., 531, 538 f., 546; Suckow, op. c. 133; Susemihl Plat. Phil. II. 619, German trans. of the Laws 976 ff. Aristotle seems to have rightly apprehended this relation between the two: at all events he gives no expression here to the opinion which is supported by many moderns, most recently by Oncken op. c. I. 201, that the state of the Laws is only meant to be a transitional form to mediate and prepare the future introduction of the true ideal state,—an opinion which is seen from the foregoing to be utterly untenable. On the contrary his words plainly amount to this; that Plato intended in the state of the Laws to frame something intermediate to that of the Republic and the existing states, but in reality he has unconsciously followed the Republic so much more closely than the existing states, that all essential features of the former are still retained." SUSEM. (191)

§ 5 4 ἔξω γὰρ τῆς τῶν γυναικῶν κτλ.] But supposing—what is not indeed the case (see next note)—that this really were the only difference between the two schemes, is it not after all one so essential that any further discussion of a really essential identity between them is thereby precluded? And so far as this might yet be possible, does not Aristotle's ideal state come pretty nearly as close to that of the Republic as does that of the Laws? At any rate, of the three points which Aristotle lays stress upon as justifying his criticism, he too expressly approves of the two latter ones: c. 7 § 8 n. (238); 9 § 2 (279), § 31 (341); 10 § 8 f. (365); 11 § 10 (393); IV(VII). 9 §§ 3, 4, 8; 10 § 9 (831), § 10 (834), Introd. p. 22 n. (3). His own ideal of public education also, so far as he has developed it, coincides in very important particulars with the directions in the Laws: see on IV(VII). 17 § 1 n. (950), § 15 (970): V(VIII). 4 §§ 7—9, nn. True, Plato's divergence comes first in that dialogue also when he insists on the education of women in common with men, on their taking part in military service and in the common messes, thus rendering true domestic life impossible; nor perhaps is Aristotle willing to follow him in assigning by law a definite limit to personal property: see § 15 n. (213), 7 § 4 n. (233). But he, too, demands, exactly like Plato in the Laws, that the land in the possession of private persons should be divided into equal inalienable indivisible lots twice as numerous as the families of citizens (IV[VII]. 10 §§ 9—11, see also nn. on II. 5 § 1, 6 § 15); and that for this purpose the number of citizens be maintained perpetually the same, §§ 10—13, 7 § 5 nn. He is only more decided and consistent than Plato in not shrinking in the least from the horrible expedient of abortion, as a means of securing this (Introd. 34, 56, IV(VII). 16 § 15 f. nn.); while Plato, who had made the same regulation under certain circumstances in the Republic (see on II. 3 §§ 5, 6 n. 140), had in the Laws abandoned it, and had left the number of children to be produced unrestricted, in the hope of adjusting the matter in a milder way: n. (208) on 6 § 10. In this respect then Aristotle's ideal state stands even nearer than that of the Laws to the state depicted in the Republic, and makes a more severe and destructive attack upon married life. Lastly he too requires written enactments fixing the age at which marriage is advisable and compulsory (IV[VII]. 16 §§ 1—10, nn. 937, 940); in fine, whereas his view of marriage is wholly different from Plato's, and ethically regarded a modern view (Exc. I. to B. II p. 327), it is actually realized in only a very mutilated fashion. Thus in criticizing Plato he has at the same time unintentionally passed judgment upon himself. SUSEM. (192)

7 παιδεῖαν τὴν αὐτὴν] This is only relatively true. The all-essential feature in the state of the Republic is the rule of the philosophers; see Zeller Phil. d. Gr. II i 761 f. (Eng. tr. Plato 466, 467 ff.); and in the Laws this is dropped. Aristotle overlooks this fact. Further, in the earlier scheme those engaged in trade and agriculture are at any rate free members of the state: in the scheme of the Laws, the former are aliens not settled permanently in the country, while the latter are slaves: Laws V 741 E ff.; VII 806 D ff.; VIII 842 C f., 846 D, 850 D; XI 915 B ff., 919 D ff., 921 C; XII 952 D ff. Thus the third class of citizens is done away with. The second class is all that is left and the training prescribed for it is the same only so far as it extends; that is, not beyond the elementary principles of mathematics: Laws VII. However a certain survival of the philosophic rulers of the Republic is still retained by the formation of a higher council of state, the so-called 'nocturnal assembly.' It is to consist of the most educated and capable men in the community over fifty years of age; moreover certain of the most distinguished magistrates belong to it in virtue of their office; while younger qualified citizens, if at least thirty years old, may be admitted as extraordinary members by cooptation, and are then instructed by the council in its own sciences, philosophy, higher mathematics, including astronomy and theory of music. But this higher college is destitute of political power and is restricted to its moral influence simply; it endeavours thereby to guide public opinion in such a manner that the elections to public offices may fall, wherever possible, upon its ordinary and extraordinary members. 8 καὶ περὶ συσσιτίων ὡσαύτως] Here Aristotle is perfectly aware of the fact which he appeared to have forgotten before, 5 § 17 n. (168), § 24 n. (179), that even in the ideal state of the Republic Plato had required there should be common messes for the guardians. SUSEM. (195)

πλὴν ἐν ταύτῃ κτλ] As a matter of fact messes common to the women are assumed by Plato in the state of the Republic, as was stated in n. (153) on 5 § 1; but in the changed sphere of the state in the Laws he finds himself obliged expressly to lay down this requirement and assign reasons for it, as he intends to maintain it in the later scheme: VI 780 D ff., VII 806 E, cp. VIII 842 B, 847 E. Further compare I. 13 § 9 n. (116), II. 7 § 1 n. (231 b). SUSEM. (196)

Both better taken of the thought than with some editors of the style. (Thus Götting Commentariolum de Ar. Pol. II. 3 gives for κομψόν 'compta pulchritudo,' grace or finish.)

τοῦ Σωκράτους] Aristotle then erroneously takes the Athenian stranger in the Laws to be Socrates, although the time of the conversation falls long after his death. The ξένος should rather be considered as personifying enlightened Athens. See Susemihl Plat. Phil. II. 667 ff., Trans. of the Laws p. 998 f. SUSEM. (199) Yet all the same this stranger, 739 C—E, apparently assumes responsibility for the proposals of "Socrates" in the Republic.

 how much smaller must we imagine the number of citizens to be in Aristotle's own ideal state according to the data given IV(VII). 4 §§ 5—14? (Schlosser).
 Suppose these data reduce the number by one half, one half the same objection would still apply to Aristotle. On the other hand it is interesting to observe how near his penetrating intellect comes to a discovery of the fact, that the idleness which belonged as a right to a privileged minority of freeborn landholders was really the fundamental evil of the Hellenic state. Confined however to the circle of opinions current in his own age and nation, the philosopher turns back when on the very threshold of the truth:
 and follows Plato in adopting this fundamental evil as an inalienable primary good for his own model state. SUSEM.

Whether war is the end of the state is a question debated IV(VII). 14 § 13 f., 15 §§ 1—6. Plato in the Latws I 628 C, VII 803, VIII 829 A, holds that it is not.

28 τὸ πλῆθος really belongs to the dependent clause. "Whether perhaps it might not be better to define otherwise, by a clearer definition, the amount of property which one man may hold." It is characteristic of the writer to require analysis and precise definition, τὸ σαφές, τὸ διωρισμένον.

§ 9 σωφρόνως here and IV(VII). 5 § 1, and σωφροσύνη III. 4 § 16 can only mean 'parsimoniously', 'parsimony'. But in II. 5 § 10 n. (162), 7 § 12 n. (242), I. 13 § 2 f., § 6 (I 12), IV(VII). 1 § 4 (691), 3 § 3, 15 §§ 2—4, 16 § 8 the meaning is temperance or self-restraint in reference to eating and drinking and the appetite of sex; and it is from this side that the virtue is depicted in Nic. Eth. III. cc. 10, 11 (I 117 b 23 ff.). There however Aristotle himself explains how extravagance leads to profligacy and to excesses in this direction, and that ἀσωτος, properly a spendthrift, comes to mean a profligate; ib. IV. 1 § 3, I 119 b 30, § 35, I 121 b 17. In Nic. Eth. IV. 3 § 4, I 123 b 5, 4 § 4, I 125 b 13 σώφρων has yet another meaning: viz. modest. Lastly, Van der Rest observes that the next objection brought against Plato affects only a certain inexactitude of expression and not the thought, which is no other than that followed by Aristotle, of a right mean between excessive wealth and excessive poverty: see esp. Latws V 741 E: χρηματισμός γὰρ οὐκ ἔνεστιν ἐν τῇ τοιαύτῃ κατασκευῇ: and next note. "Tis strange that while equalizing their properties he should not regulate the numbers of his citizens."

39 ἀλλ' ἀφείναι κτλ] This too is very inexactly expressed. All that Plato in the Laws intends, indeed all that he is able to effect, is to keep the number of citizens unalterably the same: i.e. exactly 5040 elder men, as many younger men, with twice that number of women. All beyond that number must, as he expressly prescribes, go abroad, to found colonies.

One son and one daughter, then, is the normal family: only when there is childlessness or death does it become necessary that there should be other children in order to marry heirs or heiresses, and to be adopted by the childless (Schlosser). As it stands at present, the polemic does not touch Plato. If Aristotle held the means proposed by Plato to avoid an excess of the prescribed number to be impracticable or impossible to realize he should have proved his point, as he easily might have done. 8 These "accidents of life" are before Plato, Laws v 740 c—e, cp. Grote III. p. 229 n. (g). Perhaps what Aristotle deprecates is the 'laissez faire', ἀφείσθαι, to leave it to the citizens at their own discretion.

Φεῖδων ὁ Κορίνθιος] Nothing is known of any such ancient lawgiver of Corinth. He is supposed to be different from the better known Pheidon of Argos, about whom see VIII(v). 10. 6. Yet he is called a Corinthian by the scholiast on Pindar Olymp. XIII. 20; τοῦτο δὲ φησιν, ἐπειδὴ Φεῖδων τις ἀνὴρ Κορίνθιος εὗρε μέτρα καὶ στάθμα. This is one of the serious difficulties in this chapter mentioned Introd. p. 33 n. 4, 14 (4). There is always the heroic remedy; see Critical Notes and M. Schmidt in Jahrb. f. Phil. CXXV. 1882. p. 822.

16 ἐν δὲ τοῖς νόμοις κτλ] A decidedly unfounded assertion, as was explained in the note on § 10. Aristotle (?) repeats this objection against Phaeas, 7 § 5: comp. n. (204) on § 7. SUSEM. (210)

§ 14 17 ὕστερον] IV (VII). 10 § 11 f. and esp. 16 § 15 f. n. (946). From the latter passage it is seen of what means he is thinking. To prevent any increase in the fixed number of the citizens Aristotle sanctions the procuring of abortion. Cp. Introd. p. 56 and n. (192) on § 5. SUSEM. (211)

18 ἐλλέλειπται κτλ] Laws v 734 E: the warp is necessarily stronger and firmer than the woof, ὅθεν δὴ τοὺς μεγάλας ἀρχὰς ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν ἄρξοντας δεῖ διακρίνεσθαι τινα τρόπον ταύτη καὶ τοὺς μικρὰς παιδείᾳ βασανισθέντας ἐκάστοτε κατὰ λόγον. As a matter of fact this objection of Aristotle's is altogether unfair. In the Laws Plato has done exactly that which Aristotle here requires: he has prescribed for all the citizens of his model state the same course of training, on the ground of which he expects them to discover for themselves which among them are better fitted for the warp and which for the woof, and to vote accordingly at the election of magistrates. What other means has Aristotle at his command for his own ideal state? Besides it must not be forgotten that by the institution of the Nocturnal Assembly (as explained in n. 193 on § 5) Plato aimed at making especial provision for a staff (personnel) more highly qualified to administer the government and to hold offices of state. The assertion then that this simile is all that we learn from him as to the character of those qualified for the government is a mistake due to a too hasty perusal of the dialogue in question. There might certainly have been good reason for a doubt whether the institution was practicable; but here no such doubt is expressed. SUSEM. (212)

It is the professed object of the Epinomis to expound the course of study for the Nocturnal Assembly which is to aim at controlling the election of magistrates. But nothing can be inferred from Aristotle's silence respecting it: Zeller Plato p. 616 n. (59) Eng. tr.

20 στημόνιον... κρόκης] Zeller Platonic Studies p. 107 took these terms in the Laws to refer to the appointment of magistracies and of the laws for them. But in *Pl. § 15 It would certainly relieve the chapter to reject this section, as M. Schmidt proposes.

22 μέχρι πενταπλασίας] Here and 7 § 4 Aristotle (?) has mistaken Plato's meaning, as if he had permitted the accumulation of moveable property to the amount of four times the value of the real estate belonging to the family. As a matter of fact in Laws V 744 E (cf. VI 775 E ff.) he only allows the increase of the total property to this fourfold value; consequently only the acquisition of three times as much personal property. The recurrence of the mistake at least favours the assumption that both passages are by the same author. SUSEM. (213)

23 διὰ τί τοῦτ' οὐκ ἂν εἴη ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς κτλ.] This objection is simply incomprehensible. There is not the least provision for an increase of landed property in Aristotle's own ideal state: see IV (VII). 10 § 9 ff. SUSEM. (214)

25 δύο γὰρ οἰκόπεδα] One homestead near the city and the centre of the territory and one placed on its borders, the latter to be occupied and managed by the married son and heir to the farm: Laws V 745 E, VI 775 E ff., cp. VIII 848. Aristotle (?) here blames this arrangement, but in his own pattern state he has adopted something very similar IV (VII). 10 § 11. We might assume that when he wrote Bk. IV (VII). he had changed his mind and then forgotten to expunge from his criticism of Plato the passage before us as no longer in point. Here however M. Schmidt's suggestion of interpolation is quite as obvious, although it may be met by an inquiry whether a later editor would not have carefully avoided introducing this inconsistency. SUSEM. (215)

But is the inconsistency proved? "Plato would assign to each man two οἰκῆσεις Laws 745 E, or, as Aristotle puts it, οἰκόπεδα, οἰκίας: Aristotle recommends two κλήροι, not two οἰκῆσεις or regular establishments" (Jackson). To this I reply that Plato too repeatedly uses the expression κληροί. Even supposing that, in contradistinction to him, Aristotle really intended to provide only one of the two estates with a dwelling-house, how can he have believed that to farm two estates in separate localities would thus be made easier than if they had dwellings upon them? Is it not clear that the opposite will hold good? Nay more, what idea are we to form of two such detached properties, one near the town and one in the country, unless there are farm-buildings and a house upon the latter? If this be so, the above supposition is à priori impossible. Even Plato does not arrange that the country house shall be a regular establishment in the sense of being always inhabited, but the son who inherits succeeds to it as soon as he is grown up and married, and so sets up the second establishment there (Laws VI 775 E f.). In Aristotle's best state such an appropriation of the second dwelling-house is certainly excluded, because there, when the heir marries, he succeeds his superannuated father as citizen and consequently as proprietor of both the family properties (see note and Excursus on IV[VII]. 16 § 10, 1335 a 32—35): but that is the sole point in which Aristotle diverges from Plato in this matter. To what purpose he would destine this second house can only be conjectured: it may be to lodge the superannuated father, perhaps with the lands belonging to it as a sort of retiring pension. In any case the inconsistency, as Aristotle's text has come down to us, is unquestionable. SUSEM.

26 διελὼν χωρίς = distinct, separate homesteads.

§ 16 σύνταξις] The entire arrangement of the constitution tends neither to oligarchy nor to democracy but to something intermediate known as Polity. Plato's citizens are the heavy-armed men: Λαῖνος VI 753 B, πάντες μὲν κοινωνοῦντων τῆς τῶν ἀρχόντων αἰρέσεως, ὅποσοι περ ἂν ὅπλα ἱππικά ἢ πεζικά τιθῶνται καὶ πολέμου κεκοινωνήκωσιν. This is the criterion of a 'Polity'.

33 ἀριστοκρατικωτέραν] i.e. a constitution which, like the Spartan, has the character of an Aristocracy to a greater extent than Polity. The term may be thus explained: true Aristocracy coincides with Aristotle's best constitution; but in a transferred and secondary sense this name is earned by such constitutions as combine aristocratical with oligarchical and democratical elements, like Carthage, or only with democratical elements, like Sparta; this is stated VI(IV). 7 §§ 2—4, cp. VI(IV). 9 § 6 ff., 2 § 1 n. (1133), § 4 n. (1141), 10 § 1, 11 § 2. Further consult Excursus I. on Bk. Of course such mixed constitutional forms are nearer to the true Aristocracy than is Polity, which is a blending of Oligarchy and Democracy: VI(IV). cc. 8, 9. See on this the notes to

§ 17 33 ἐνιοι μὲν οὖν κτλ] Cp. IV(VII). 14 § 16 n. (911), VI(IV). 1 § 6 n. (1123). Thus we learn that two schools of political theorists, to one of which Ephoros perhaps belonged¹, dissented from the writer's opinion and agreed in regarding monarchy, oligarchy, and democracy as elements of the Spartan constitution; while the second school (40 οἱ δὲ) added tyranny as a fourth element. It is strange that in this passage Aristotle(?) takes up no definite position in relation to the two views and does not oppose to them his own. Presumably he judged it sufficient, in order not to enter on a longer digression, to have denominated this constitution a mixed aristocracy. From the explanations which he has devoted specially to it we learn that he looked upon the council of Elders as the aristocratical, the Ephors as the democratic element in it, 9 §§ 19—28, but at the same time also as in a certain sense related to τυραννίς: see on 9 § 20. He finds another democratic element, though such in intention only, in the common messes, 9 § 32. He regards the Spartan kingship as far too limited to give the constitution any particular colouring: III. 14 §§ 3, 4; 15 §§ 1, 2; 16 § 1. It is still more strange then that Aristotle(?) only mentions here the views of those other theorists on this subject, passing over in total silence that expressed by Plato himself in the Laws IV 712 C ff. (cp. III 692 A f., 693 E), a view which stands much nearer to his own, representing the Spartan constitution as mainly a mixture of aristocracy and democracy, but with the addition of the royal office and an element akin in one view to τυραννίς, in another to democracy, viz. the Ephors. Plato himself tells us, Laws XII 962 E, that he was not the first to pronounce a mixed constitution the most excellent in practice: οἱ δὲ σοφώτατοι, ὡς οἴονται, πρὸς ταῦτά τε (liberty and dominion over others) καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα ξύμπαντα [βλέποντες νομοθετοῦνται], εἰς ἐν δὲ οὐδὲν διαφερόντως τετιμημένον ἔχοντες φράζειν, εἰς δὲ τὰλλα ἀνατοῖς δεῖ βλέπειν; presumably his predecessors were to some extent the same who are here noticed. § 18 1266 a 1 ἐν δὲ τοῖς νόμοις κτλ] Laws III 693 D f. εἰσὶ πολιτειῶν οἶον μητέρες δύο τινές...καὶ τὴν μὲν προσαγορεύειν μοναρχίαν ὀρθόν, τὴν δ' αὖ δημοκρατίαν: Persia is the extreme case of the one, Athens of the other: δεῖ δὲ ὅν καὶ ἀναγκαῖον μεταλαβεῖν ἀμφοῖν τούτων: 701 E; VI 756 E μέσον ἂν ἔχοι μοναρχικῆς καὶ δημοκρατικῆς πολιτείας ἥς δεῖ δεῦσεύειν τὴν πολιτείαν: cp. IV 712 D f. However what Plato really says in these passages is somewhat different, viz. that a good constitution must hold the mean between democracy and monarchy. Moreover he expressly guards against being supposed to derive anything in his mixed form of the state from τυραννίς, IV 712 C: τίνα δὴ ποτε πολιτείαν ἔχομεν ἐν νῷ τῇ πόλει προστάττειν;...οἶον δημοκρατίαν τινα ἢ ὀλιγαρχίαν ἢ ἀριστοκρατίαν ἢ βασιλικήν. οὐ γὰρ δὴ τυραννίδα γέ που λέγοις ἄν: and in the Republic he has already himself pronounced democracy and τυραννίς to be the two worst governments, the latter as the extreme of despotic rule, the former as the extreme of liberty. Aristotle however everywhere else calls Oligarchy and τυραννίς the two worst forms of government, see on VI (IV). II § 21 n. (1305): so that here he contradicts himself. According to the statement in the Laws it is no doubt true that every unlimited, i.e. pure and unmixed, monarchy coincides with τυραννίς: III 691 D—701 E, IV 710 E, 712 C ff.: kingship or limited monarchy and limited democracy are intermediate or mixed forms. Hence it would certainly be no incorrect expression of Plato's thought in the Laws, that the right constitution should hold a mean between democracy and τυραννίς. But from this it does not in the least follow that it must be compounded of the two: for it would also be a mean between them if it were compounded of forms which approximate partly to the one partly to the other, in order thus to blend freedom with order or authority. 'In the passages in question Plato is speaking of monarchy and democracy as principles of all government, not of certain constitutions, since he finds the principle of authority more clearly stamped on the one, that of liberty on the other' (Henkel). Consequently, to make the state in the Laws a combination of oligarchical with democratical elements is not inconsistent with his requirement. Besides, it is also incorrect to call these the only constituents of the mixed form and so to make the constitution simply a Polity (πολιτεία): for it deserves to be called a mixed aristocracy with far greater right than the Spartan constitution: see on § 5 (193), § 14 (212), § 21 (229); Susemihl Plat. Phil. II. 624—631, Translation of the Laws p. 980; also Zeller Plato p. 535 f. Eng. tr. Nor is this state of the Laws without a certain monarchical head; for in so far as it too is preeminently an educating institution, such a post is filled by the highest official who presides over education. However Henkel (Studien 65) is quite right in inferring from all the foregoing that the monarchical element of the state is rather to be looked for in the magistrates collectively, in virtue of the extended powers assigned to them. But this by no means excludes the substantial correctness of Oncken's remark (op. c. I. 209): "taken literally monarchy and democracy are incapable of reconciliation: for where one rules, all cannot rule, and conversely. But if a reconciliation or blending of the two is thought of as possible at all, it can only be understood in this way, that the numbers are set aside as unessential and the mode of government emphasized as the essential feature. In that case, however, the nomenclature is quite suitable to the case before us." The highest magistracy, apart from the council, in Plato's state of the Laws, the 36, or (including the officer who presides over education) the 37 νομοφύλακες, have an approximately monarchical authority in consequence of the large powers entrusted to them*; in the sense in which Aristotle himself (?) admits that the double kingship of the Spartans is called monarchy, § 17, and the board of ephors a τυραννίς, though there were five of them: and further, designates the people in the most extreme democracy as a many-headed monarch. Taken literally, the union of oligarchy and democracy, as Aristotle finds it in the πολιτεία, is just as impossible as that of monarchy and democracy. SUSEM. (220)

4 βέλτιον οὖν κτλ] That is, in the particular case here given (cp. n. 223) they are more in the right: they either leave out tyranny, the worst form of government, altogether and combine other elements with democracy; or at any rate add two other elements, oligarchy and monarchy, one of which at least, viz. monarchy, is distinctly better. The two schools of political theorists and eulogists of the Lacedaemonian constitution noticed in § 17, are doubtless intended. If it were true (1266 a 1, 2) that the best polity according to Plato is one com-

ἡ γὰρ ἐκ πλειόνων κτλ.] 'This statement made thus universally is not in keeping with the philosopher's thought. He does not blame Plato for not combining elements enough, but because he would construct a polity out of the two corrupt elements' (Riese). On Aristotle's own principles a mixture of aristocracy and democracy, or even of oligarchy and democracy, must be better than one of oligarchy, democracy, and τυραννίς. As was shown in the last note, the preceding sentence, rightly understood, is a simple deduction from what has been laid down above, and needs no additional reason, least of all one which erroneously extends it beyond the limits of this right interpretation and lays it down as universally true. The chapter contains difficulties enough, but this is beyond the limits of all that we dare attribute to Aristotle himself: surely this illogical generalization is interpolated. We shall however be obliged to go some way further than this, I think. For even one who, like myself, either rejects or mistrusts Schmidt's other atheteses in this chapter will nevertheless be unable to deny that the entire passages §§ 16—18, 1265 b 29 ἐἰ μὲν...1266 a 6 δημοκρατικά, and § 22, 1266 a 22 ὥς...25 σκέψις, do most violently interrupt the connexion and leave the impression that they are non-Aristotelian. And on the following day the election shall be made from the second class in the same manner as on the previous day (τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ φέρειν ἐκ τῶν δευτέρων τιμημάτων κατὰ ταῦτά καθάπερ τῇ πρώτῃ); and on the third day an election shall be made from the third class, at which every one may if he likes vote and the three first classes shall be compelled to vote (τρίτῃ δ' ἐκ τῶν τρίτων τιμημάτων φέρειν μὲν τὸν βουλούμενον, ἐπάναγκες δὲ εἶναι τοῖς τῶν τριῶν τιμημάτων); but the fourth and lowest class shall be under no compulsion, and any member of this class who does not vote shall not be punished. On the fourth day members of the council shall be elected from the fourth and lowest class (τετάρτῃ δὲ φέρειν μὲν ἐκ τοῦ τετάρτου καὶ σμικροτάτου τιμήματος ἅπαντας); they shall be elected by all, but he who is of the fourth class shall suffer no penalty, nor he who is of the third, if he be not willing to vote; but he who is of the first or second class, if he does not vote shall be punished; he who is of the second class shall pay a fine triple the fine which was exacted at first, and he who is of the first class quadruple.' The number of candidates thus nominated is reduced first, by election, to 180 of each class and next, by sortition, to 90 from each class. The passage continues: 'On the fifth day the rulers shall bring out the names noted down, in the presence of all the citizens, and every man shall choose out of them under pain, if he do not, of suffering the first penalty; and when they have chosen 180 out of each of the classes, they shall choose one half of them by lot, who shall undergo a scrutiny: these are to form the council for the year' (Dr Jowett's translation).

Plato's object is to give the numerically smaller and wealthier first and second classes not only their half of the senators, but also a preponderant influence in the return of the other half, which they will secure provided there are abstentions enough among the poorer citizens. It is obvious that Aristotle is referring to the proceedings of the first four days. What is the number returned from each class? (a) Grote thinks 360, Plato III. 363 n. 9. (β) Stallbaum, J. G. Schneider follow older editors in assuming it to be ninety, but omit to explain what takes place on the fifth day. (γ) Mr Cope supposed that on each successive day each class voted for 90 candidates belonging to a given class, so that the abstentions of classes III and IV might, in the extreme case, reduce the roll of candidates published on the fifth day from 1440 to 1170 (360 + 360 + 270 + 180). Perhaps none of these suggestions is correct; the proceedings of the first four days are in reality a nomination of candidates, not an election: there is no limitation to the number of candidates nominated, each citizen presumably recording a vote, i.e. sending in one name. The votes recorded are taken down and published on the fifth day (ἐπειδὴν δ' ἐνεχθῶσι, τοὺς μὲν κατασημήνασθαι... ἐμπληττὴ δὲ ἡμέρα τὰ κατασημανθέντα δνόματα ἐξευεγκεῖν μὲν τοὺς ἄρχοντας ἰδεῖν πᾶσι τοῖς πολίταις). The voting on the fifth day is confined to these duly nominated candidates, and as 180 must be then selected from each class (ἐκλέξαντας) Plato appears to assume that more than that number will be nominated on each of the first four days.

αἰροῦνται μὲν κτλ] For all are bound to elect from the first class, and then again equally [i.e. in like manner] from the second: and next from the third, save that it is not compulsory on all (to vote), pared with the Platonic schemes (comp. nn. 255, 256 on 8 §§ 3, 4). According to Aristotle's account, Phaleas thought there was no more to be done when once he had demanded an equal division of the land into inalienable and indivisible lots, and the preservation of this equality by a uniform education which is not more minutely described, and when he had recommended the degradation of artisans to the position of public slaves. He had nothing to say about the size or number of these lots, about moveable property, or in fact hardly anything else. The spirit and tendency of these proposals strongly suggest the idea expressed by Böckh Staats-haushaltung der Ath. I. p. 65 and Roscher Thukydides p. 247 that they concealed a practical aim: that he wanted to restore, in his Dorian native town especially, the old aristocracy of well-born landholders. Henkel Studien p. 165 further remarks in support of this view that popular rule found its way first into Byzantium, B.C. 390, and thence to Chalcedon, under the influence of the reviving strength of the Athenian Demos: Xen. Hellen. IV. 8. 27, Theopompus Frag. 65 in Athenaeus XII 526 D. At the same time, he adds, it must be remembered that the absence from Phaleas' scheme of the warlike spirit of a chivalrous aristocracy, and his silence as regards everything military, are great hindrances to this hypothesis. SUSEM. (232)

And he reminds us of the custom in some parts of Germany where only one child (the eldest, or the youngest, or any one whom the father chooses) succeeds to the real estate and provides portions for the rest at a fair valuation. But he should have reflected that Phaleas Plato Aristotle all alike exclude the sons of citizens from engaging in any trade. SUSEM. (235)

§§ 6, 7 The influence which equality of possessions must exercise upon civil society was recognized (1) by Solon's legis-

 the law of Locri which forbids the sale of land, (4) by a law of entail, as at Leucas, where the disuse of the law altered the constitution to an advanced democracy.
 Yet the size of properties needs regulation,
 if, when equalized, they are not to be over-

should not make it profitable for the stronger to attack us, but should leave them no motive for so doing which they would not have had, even if our possessions had been less.' The ellipse may be filled up thus, ἀλλ' οὕτως πολεμεῖν λυσιστελεῖν ὥς ἂν ἐπολέμησαν καὶ μὴ ἔχόντων, sc. τῶν ἡττόνων, τοσαύτην οὐσίαν. Our wealth should never tempt aggression: we should then only be exposed to the same attacks as a poorer state in our place. That is, we should aim at being the 'lean wiry dogs' with whom their neighbours are glad to make common cause against 'fat and tender sheep': Republic IV 422 D.

A less simple rendering has been proposed: 'that is the best limit of wealth when a stronger power does not find it profitable to make war upon us for the sake of the excess of the booty to be gained over the costs of victory, but when (even if it conquers us) it is no better off than if it had not made so great an acquisition.' This suits the sequel better, but somewhat strains the meaning of ὑπερβολὴν and οὐσίαν, besides leaving a harsh genitive absolute: ἀλλ' οὕτως συμφέρεται ὥς ἂν συνέφερε μὴ ἔχόντων (τῶν κρείττονων) τοσαύτην οὐσίαν. It can hardly be right.

§ 17 During the last years of Artaxerxes Mnemon and at the commencement of the reign of Artaxerxes Ochus, the confusion in Asia Minor, more particularly owing to the revolt of Artabazos, the satrap of Phrygia Lydia and Paphlagonia, suggested the idea of wresting a part of the Hellenic lands on the coast of Asia from the Persians. The requisite means for effecting this were secured, and it was even possible to maintain the severance. Eubulos was a Bithynian by birth, a money-changer, i.e. banker, by trade, and at the same time ἀνὴρ φιλόσο-

φος, i.e. probably one of Plato's scholars, like his freedman and successor Hermeias. Through the medium of his business he found he could execute such a scheme as this, and make himself absolute ruler (τύραννος) of Atarneus on the Aeolic coast of Mysia, and of the stronghold of Assos in the Troad with the adjacent districts: Vita Aristotelis in Westermann's Biographoi p. 402, Suidas s.vv. Ἀριστοτέλης, Ἑρμείας, Strabo XIII. 6:0. Böckh (Hermeias of Atarneus in his Ges. Kl. Schriften VI. 183 ff.) tries to show, as others have done, that this event happened before 359 B.C.; that in 359 Autophradates as general of the Persian king marched against Artabazos and took him prisoner, and that in the course of this same campaign he laid siege to Atarneus. The suggestion by which Eubulos raised the siege is, as Böckh remarks, one worthy of a banker. We know that he maintained his power down to his death: also that it was not before 345/44 that his successor, the eunuch Hermeias, Aristotle's friend (see I. 6. 9. n. 56) was overthrown by the Rhodian Mentor, the Persian commander-in-chief, and that solely by stratagem deceit and treachery. § 19 1267 b 2 διωβολία] This refers to the so-called θεωρικόν, a grant of public money to provide for shows or public amusements introduced at Athens after Pericles' time. In the first instance at those festivals only at which plays were exhibited, the sum of two obols, the price of an ordinary seat in the theatre, was paid from the state-chest to the lessee of the theatre for every citizen present. (Every one who went to the theatre received a counter which he gave up on going in; the lessee collected from the state the two obols for every counter; but he had to pay a rent out of his receipts and to keep the theatre in repair. See Benndorf Beiträge in Zeitschrift f. d. öst. Gymn. XXVI. 1875. p. 23 ff.) Subsequently the poorer citizens received the like dole for all the other festivals, and these outgoings swallowed up no small part of the revenues.  thought that the handicrafts throughout

 Diophantos, we do not know when, was that only the artisans who worked for the community were to be public slaves"; Böckh Staatsh. I. 65. [not in the Eng.
 trans.] This was certainly the case at Epidamnus. With the present text this sense can only be obtained by interpreting the words τοὺς τὰ κοινὰ ἐργαζομένους to mean 'those who do common work for the whole community'; and we should be forced to assume that even Phaleas' proposal was no further than this, which is very improbable. Hence the alteration suggested by Bernays is tempting. The archon of the year Ol. 96, 2=395/4 was named Diophantos, but he can hardly have been the man. "Aelian relates that the people of Epidamnus allowed any one

22 ὅς καὶ... 28 βουλόμενος] Fülleborn remarked long since: "every reader must be struck with one strange thing in this introductory notice by Aristotle, viz. the picture he draws of Hippodamos. With what object has he preserved for posterity these proofs of the man's vanity and effeminacy? Do they serve to explain the spirit of his work? I doubt it." And Congreve, who rightly holds that this description would be more consistent with Theophrastos than with Aristotle, suggests that here we may reasonably suspect a later hand. SUSEM. (252)

23 κατέτεμεν] cut out, i.e. laid out the streets; Pindar Pyth. 5. 84 εὐθύτομον κατέθηκε... σκυρωτῶν ὁδόν.

25 ζῆν περιεργότερον] was held to be somewhat affected in his way of life.

In the following words ἐσθήτος must be taken with πλήθει according to the reading of Π¹ adopted in the text. It is plausible to make it depend upon some word like κόσμφ, the reading of Π² (so Ridgeway, who quotes Aeschyl. Supp. 246 for κόσμος, meaning fashion or style of dress), or possibly καλλωπισμῷ or κοσμήσεσι, which are the conjectures of Bender and Welldon respectively.

τριχῶν τε πλήθει καὶ κόμης] In Sparta it remained the custom, on account of war and warlike exercises, to wear long hair from the time of entering upon the military age. But at Athens from early times it became the practice to cut the hair upon attaining the full age for civic rights and to wear it short from that time onwards. Not to do so passed for vanity, foppishness, dandyism. The orator Hegesippos, a contemporary and supporter of Demosthenes, was on this account nicknamed Κρωβύλος or Top-knot. The knights alone are said to have kept the privilege of wearing long hair: μὴ φθονεῖθ' ἡμῖν κομῶσι, Aristoph. Knights 580. See Becker Charikles III. 233 ff. ed. 2, Eng. trans. pp. 453—55. SUSEM. 28 λόγιος] a man of learning, as in IV (VII). 10. 3 and often in Herodotos (Congreve). Suidas calls him μετεωρολόγος.

§ 2 30 τὴν πόλιν] Oncken I. 214 n. (1) takes this to mean that in the 10,000 are included not the citizens only but the entire free population. But according to the design of Hippodamos § 7, not merely those who bear arms but also the artisans and husbandmen are to be citizens, although it must be conceded to Aristotle's criticism §§ 8—12, that his end could hardly have been attained in such a manner.  a germ of Plato's ideal state, when we consider that the soldiers answer to the mers together to the third order of citizens in the Republic. However even when viewed in this light the differences between the two schemes are as great as the resemblances. But the state proposed anything more than an improved working loss or damage sustained, whether to person or property. See Rhet. I. 12. 26, II.

40 τὸ κύριον = the supreme court.

§ 5 1268 a 1 οὐ διὰ ψηφοφορίας] In the Athenian courts the voting was secret:
 each juryman (δικαστής) received two ballots, one for condemnation, the other for acquittal; and there were two urns, one of copper, into which the ballot containing the verdict was thrown, the other of wood, into which the other, unused ballots were thrown. The ballots for voting were either differently coloured stones or small metal balls, or even differently coloured beans or shells. At what time the one or other of these were used is not known. Stones were certainly the most common; a black stone served for condemnation, a white one for acquittal: with balls of metal, one with a hole in it served for the former purpose,

 a whole one served for the latter purpose.
 Equality of votes was counted as acquittal. (Meier and Schömann Attische Process 720 ff.) SUSEM. (257)

Aristotle himself is our authority for the voting at Athens: see Frag. 1548 b 5—41 of the Berlin ed.

2 ἀλλὰ φέρειν ἕκαστον κτλ] Nearly the same arrangement was actually introduced amongst the Romans: a fact which shows how clearly this proposal testifies to a legal mind of great originality. At Rome the voting was by tablets in the manner here proposed, leaving it to the iudices to affirm not simply condemnation (C) or acquittal (A), but also a verdict of "not proven" (NL, non liquet).
 That Aristotle (§ 13 f.) is as yet quite unable to realize to himself the proper meaning of the proposal is a further proof of its originality. (L. Stein.) Comp. n.

§ 6 9 ὥς οὐπω κτλ] "just as if this law had not been made before elsewhere."
 So K. F. Hermann De Hippodamo p. 44, who is defended by Dittenberger (*Gott.
 gel. Anz.* 1874 p. 1369) against Spengel.
 It is true that ὥς with the participle might equally mean (1) because in fact, as in Pl. Phaedr. 245 E ὥς ταύτης οὐσης φύσεως, or (2) because as he thought (ὥς οὐκ ὄν ἀδύνατον § 6): but νῦν is not decisive in favour of (1), see n. (259).

οὐπω, not μήπω; cp. Lysias 14 § 10
 ἐτόλμησεν ἀναβῆναι, ὥς οὐκ ἐξεσόμενον τῇ

 Xen. Cyr. v. i. 13 ὥς οὐκ ἀναγκαῖον τὸ κλέπτειν, αἰτία τὸν κλέπτοντα. The clause is virtually oblique, and the negative is reproduced unchanged.

10 ἔστι δὲ...νῦν] Here as often νῦν = as things are, "under the existing system"
 not simply = now, as Spengel explains it.
 Unless one follows Spengel in an untenable alteration of the text, the drift of the passage can only be a censure upon Hippodamos, which is even in this form quite intelligible, though it would certainly have been more clearly expressed as follows: "whereas a law like this was already at the time in force at Athens."

We cannot however prove the date of this Athenian regulation (on which Wila-mowitz Aus Kydathen p. 26 may also be consulted), but the present passage would seem to make it earlier than the treatise of Hippodamos. It is quite possible that Aristotle's censure is unfair;
 for who is to inform us that in its author's intention the scheme of Hippodamos was restricted to new proposals, never before realized? Cp. Hermann op.c. 43 f.

This seems slightly better than to understand πλεον, ἔλασσον, πέντε, τέτταρας of sums awarded by different jurymen (dicasts).

If the suit be for 20 minae, acquittal means that the defendant does not owe 20 minae, it says nothing about liability for a smaller sum.

21 ἤδη] when we turn to the judge who condemns while not believing the twenty minae to be owing, it is quite true that he commits perjury. Comp. VIII (v). 8. 6 ὥσπερ δῆμος ἤδη οἱ δημοιοι (Cope).

§§ 13—15 'L. Stein op. c. 162 n. rightly calls this whole criticism a misapprehension. If the judges, or jurors, are forbidden to converse with one another, it is certainly impossible for them to find non liquet in concert: it is however possible for all to reach the same result without consultation, and still more likely that only in this way can some one of them clear his conscience. And if, after the fact of a pecuniary indebtedness has been established, the jurors cannot agree upon the amount, then a conditional verdict is the only one possible, and in that case certainly there can be no final decision except by way of compromise. Thus this objection makes for Hippodamos, rather than against him' (Oncken). And lastly how is it made out that the 'majority of legislators' were right in excluding consultation amongst the jurors? At any rate our modern regulation (see n. 267) has pronounced them to be wrong. Cp. also n. (258) on § 5. SUSEM. (268)

41 τὰς γυναῖκας ἐωνοῦντο] The suitor purchased the daughter of her father by means of presents (ἔδνα): see Schömann Greek Antiquities I. 52 [Eng. trans. by Mann and Hardy p. 48 ff.]. Schneider compares marriage by comptio among the Romans. SUSEM. (271)

There is a valuable note on the ἔδνα or bride-price in the English translation of the Odyssey by Butcher and Lang. "The ἔδνα in Homer are invariably gifts made by the wooers to the father or kinsmen of the bride, that is, the bride-price, the kalym of the dwellers on the Volga... The father of the bride was thus said ἔδνονσθαι θυγάτρα (Od. II. 53), to accept certain ἔδνα as the price for his daughter,—what is called 'coming to terms about the marriage' in Iliad XIII. 381 (ὄφρα... συνώμεθα... ἀμφὶ γάμφ). As a rule the woman would go to the highest bidder, but in the case of a favoured wooer it seems to have been not unusual either to remit the price and give the bride ἀνάεδνον (cp. Agamemnon's offer to Achilles, Il. IX. 141), or to return a portion of the ἔδνα after marriage (Od. I. 278, II. 196), as is still the custom among the Kanekas in New Caledonia." Homer also mentions gifts from the wooers to the bride, and μεῖλια, gifts from the bride's father to his daughter: but φερνή, the later word for dowry, does not occur. Even in Pindar ἔδνα is used in the sense of φερνή: Pyth. 3. 94. (Eaton compares Tac. Germ. 18; but that is the 'Morgengabe,' something quite different.)

§ 20 1269 a 1 οἶον ἐν Κύμῃ] This forcibly recalls compurgation, the established legal usage in ancient times in England and amongst other Teutonic peoples. That the oath might thus be employed on behalf of the accuser is sufficiently attested, although cases where it is taken on behalf of the accused are usually mentioned. The Greek custom is confirmed by the inscription of Gortyn, column II, lines 36—44. The law has prescribed certain fines, the price to be paid for the ransom of an accused person charged with adultery and in the power of his captors. But he may plead that he was (wrongfully) seized by force: cp. [Demosth.] c. Neaeram § 66 1367, 10 ἀδίκως εἰρχθῆναι ὡς μοιχόν. If so, the captor must support his charge by compurgators, whose number depends on the amount of the fine or ransom. (α) Four are necessary if the fine is 50, 100, or 200 staters; i.e. if the aggrieved husband is a full citizen. (β) Two are necessary if the aggrieved husband is an ἀφέταιρος, i.e. free but not a full citizen: while (γ) if the aggrieved husband is a serf (οἰκέυς), the serf's lord (πάστας) and one other compurgator must appear. The fine for (γ) is 2½ staters, for (β) 10 or 20 staters. The Cretan text of the law runs thus: αὶ δε κα πονεὶ δολοσασθαι [i.e. ἐὰν δὲ φωνῇ δουλώσασθαι], ὁμοσαι τὸν ἐλοντα τὸ πεντεκονταστατερο [τοῦ πεντηκονταστατήρου] καὶ πλιονος πεντον αὐτον, Ἔιν αὐτοὶ [ἐαυτῷ] Ἐκαστον ἐπαριομενον [ἐπαρώμενον], το δ' ἀπεταιρο [τοῦ δ' ἀφεταίρου] τριτον αὐτον, το δε Φοικεος τὸν πασαν ατερον αὐτον, μοικιοντ' ἐλεν [μοιχῶνθ' ἐλεῖν] δολοσασθαι δε με [μή]. And if he shall plead that (the captor) overmastered him, the captor shall swear—in the case of the 50 staters or more, himself with four others, each imprecating on himself: in the case of a clanless man, himself with two others: in the case of a house-thrall, his lord with one other—(an oath) that he took him in adultery and overmastered him not. See Zitelmann in Das Recht von Gortyn, pp. 101—107: and Mr H. J. Roby The twelve Tables of Gortyn in the ἥ τε γὰρ Θετταλῶν πενεστεία κτλ] Compare 5 § 22 n. (178). Wherever in Greece bodies of serfs stood midway between freedom and slavery, it is well known that the relation invariably arose in consequence of a subjugation of the earlier inhabitants by victorious invaders. Thus the earlier inhabitants of Laconia obtained the freer lot of Provincials (Περίοικοι) or else were forced into a dependent position of this kind as Helots according as they submitted to the Spartans earlier or later, more or less easily, of their own free will or by compulsion. See Schömann Antiquities of Greece I p. 191—194, Eng. tr., to whose account of the Helots p. 194—200 it is sufficient to refer (comp. however Gilbert Studien p. 76 ff.). The Penestae were the descendants of that part of the old population of the country occupied by the invading Thessalians, which, instead of emigrating, made a friendly agreement with the conquerors and concluded a treaty, by which for a fixed rent they remained tenants of the land they had formerly possessed and were under obligation to furnish military service, but were not to be sold or driven out of the country or put to death. See Schömann, p. 132, Eng. tr. The authorities quoted by J. G. Schneider are Archemachos Fr. I, from Athenaeus VI. 264 A: Βοιωτῶν τῶν τὴν Ἀρναίαν κατοικησάντων οἱ μὴ ἀπάραντες εἰς τὴν Βοιωτίαν, ἀλλ' ἐμφιλοχωρήσαντες παρέδωκαν ἑαυτοὺς τοῖς Θετταλοῖς δουλεύειν καθ' ὁμολογίας, ἐφ' ᾧ οὔτε ἐξάουσι αὐτοὺς ἐκ τῆς χώρας, οὔτε ἀποκτενοῦσιν αὐτοὶ δὲ τὴν χώραν ἐργαζόμενοι τὰς συντάξεις ἀποδώσουσιν· οὗτοι μὲν οὖν οἱ κατὰ τὰς ὁμολογίας καταμείναντες καὶ παρὰ δόντας ἑαυτοὺς ἐκλήθησαν τότε μενέσται, νῦν δὲ πενέσται: and Theopompus Fr. 134 in Ath. We may render: "It would seem too that apart from everything else there is the irksome task of seeing that we behave to them as we ought: for when allowed their freedom, they grow insolent and claim equal rights with their lords: if treated harshly, they plot revenge and

11 δῆλον κτλ] The truth of this remark no one will wish to question. But does Aristotle really know of a remedy? He hopes to get over the difficulty in his own 'best state' by taking men of non-Hellenic race to till the soil, slaves or serfs, if possible; failing this, dependent freemen of different nations but only of the gentler races: IV(VII). 10 §§ 13, 14, n. 31 διὸ παρὰ κτλ.] Schömann Antiquities of Greece p. 268 Eng. tr. is certainly right in saying that the social position and influence of women in Sparta was not higher than it is amongst the modern peoples of the west, and that the prevailing condition of things with us in this respect would have appeared to an Athenian of the best time to be a species of feminine rule (γυναικοκρατία), although it does not at all alienate our women from their natural and most appropriate calling of housewives and mothers. But this does not thoroughly answer the question proposed by J. G. Schneider (see n. 295 b) and by Oncken: whether true womanliness can have thriven under so rough a treatment of the marriage relation as was customary at Sparta: whether a family life and true domesticity could be found when the Spartan full-citizen was, as a matter of fact, banished from the family, lived continually with his comrades in arms, ate at the public table, slept in a tent, and only paid stolen visits to his wife; where consequently the household was without a head, the wife without a home of common duty and mutual improvement, where parental duty was removed and the natural field for the wife's activity abolished. If in the latter respect Aristotle mistook the cause of the evil (as his retention of common messes for the men and his excessive public education prove), does this justify us in assuming that his description of the evil itself is wholly incorrect? In reference to the first question, if it was nothing unusual at Sparta to hand over one's wife to another, if, as Schömann himself thinks, op. c. p. 267, a Spartan woman, to whom proposals were made by another man, hardly felt herself insulted by them but referred the lover to her husband, then, (as Fülleborn and Schömann after him have remarked) the boast of the Spartans, that adultery was never heard of amongst them, does not amount to much: adultery here only means an intrigue with another man without the husband's permission. The further boast of the Spartan women, that they were in an especial degree good housewives (Schömann op. c. p. 268), must accordingly be reduced to its proper dimensions. Plato however concedes (Laws VII 805 E f.) that though the Spartan women did not weave and spin, occupations which they left to their female slaves, they yet led an active life: since they had nearly half the responsibility for the management of the household and the education of the children. Certainly there is some exaggeration in the charges of license and love of power brought against them, and this must be moderated from the above points of view: but it is quite as certain that they are not all pure inventions. Oncken refers his readers to the proof given by him Hellas and Athens II. 85. Cp. Introd. p. 36 n. (1). SUSEM. (290) speak much more strongly on this point.

 Oncken observes quite rightly, that this was the first opportunity the Spartan women had for putting into practice the brave speeches they had been making for centuries; they might at least have displayed a quiet bearing, even if they were not to be taken at their word. SUSEM. (293)

§ 11 1270 a 1 ἔξω γὰρ κτλ] According to Plutarch Lycurg. I, in his account of the constitution of Sparta Aristotle placed Lycurgus apparently no earlier than the time of Iphitos, about the beginning of the era of the Olympiads, 776 B.C.

 (J. G. Schneider). See this passage
 among the Fragments 490, 1558 a 13,
 Rose=485 in Rose Aristot. pseudep.=76
 Müller. Further compare especially Gilbert Studien 72 ff. 158 ff. SUSEM. (294)

The passage is as follows: οἱ μὲν γὰρ
 Ἰφίτῳ συνακμάσαι καὶ συνδιαθῆναι τὴν Ὀλυμπιακὴν ἐκεχειρίαν λέγονσιν αὐτὸν, ὧν ἔστι καὶ Ἀριστοτέλης τεκμηρίον προσφέρων
 τὸν Ὀλυμπιασὶ δισκον ἐν ᾧ τὸννομα τοῦ Λυκούργου διασώζεται καταγεγραμμένον.
 E. Curtius, History Eng. tr. I. p. 191, adopts this date. Even so, there would be a grave chronological difficulty if these Arcadian wars be supposed to precede Lycurgus. The first Messenian war is dated 743—723 B.C. But as to the main fact Aristotle is correct. A long period of camp-life, of war in which the Spartans lived perpetually in the field, must have preceded the complete establishment of the system and the institutions which are referred to the Lycurgean legislation*. Such a period we find in the tedious and difficult conquest of Laconia by its Dorian invaders.

 ble formation of perfect.

* I entirely agree with Wilamowitz Hom-erische Untersuchungen, Berlin 1884, p. 267 ff., that Lycurgus is only a mythical person, and that the supposed Lycurgean legislation never had an existence; and I also regard the account which he gives of the real state of things as altogether correct. SUSEM.

7 ὡς δ' ἀντέκρουον κτλ.] Precisely so Plato Laws VI. 781 A τὸ δὲ περὶ τὰς γυναῖκας οὐδ' αὖτως ὀρθῶς ἀνομοθέτητον ἐκτίθεται... ἀλλ' ὁ καὶ ἄλλως γένος ἡμῶν τῶν ἀνθρώπων λαθραίωτον μᾶλλον καὶ ἐπικλοπώτερον ἔφν, τὸ θῆλυ, διὰ τὸ ἀσθενές, οὐκ ὀρθῶς τοῦτο εἰζᾶντος τοῦ νομοθέτου δύσστακτον ὄν ἀφείθη. This Plutarch must have forgotten, when (Lycurg. 14) he attacks Aristotle alone on account of this same remark and tries to refute him. The facts which he adduces with this object prove simply nothing: but directly afterwards (c. 15) he gives a detailed account of the Spartan custom of lending wives, and this does not make the assertion, which he appends to it, very credible: viz. ταῦτα δὲ οὕτως πραττόμενα φυσικῶς καὶ πολιτικῶς τότε τοσοῦτον ἀπέειχε τῆς ὕστερον λεγομένης γενέσθαι περὶ τὰς γυναῖκας εὐχερείας, ὥστε ὅλως ἄπιστον εἶναι τὸ τῆς μοιχείας παρ' αὐτοῖς. Even he does not venture to deny the subsequent laxity of the women at Sparta. (J. G. Schneider.) SUSEM. (295 b)

§ 12 8 "These then are the causes of the events which happened and therefore clearly of this mistake: but the question before us is not who is, or is not, excusable; but whether as a matter of fact (a legislator) is right or wrong."

9 ἀλλ' ἡμεῖς... 11 ὀρθῶς] Thus Aristotle is not unaware that the author of a code or a constitution is by no means able to proceed simply at his own good pleasure, but is tied down to the given circumstances: cp. § 22 n. (322), 12 § 5 (409); VI (IV). I § 3 ff. n. (1116), c. 6, 11 §§ 7, 8, 12 § 1 ff.: VII (VI). c. 4. It is only in case these circumstances are highly favourable that he considers his own best constitution possible. But this is still a long way off the knowledge that a nation's constitution and code of laws are in general the product primarily of its individuality and history, and only secondarily of the legislator's wisdom or unwisdom. Nor does Aristotle omit forthwith to mark precisely the spirit of his own examination in that 'he never purposes to account for the constitution by the circumstances under which it arose, or to fathom the necessities which confronted the legislator. Instead of this, Lycurgus, who left behind him an actual state, is treated like Plato who constructed an imaginary state. Aristotle's criticism neither is nor claims to be historical criticism in our sense of the term, which is more concerned to explain the connexion of the facts than to award praise or blame. He is as one-sided in pointing out the defects of this political structure as the admirers of its excellences had been in earlier times and continued to be later on. Nor could it have been otherwise: for neither he nor they had the requisite historical data for appreciating the personal responsibility of Lycurgus.' Nor have we even now:—assuming that we still retain our belief in the existence of such a person as Lycurgus. Moreover in spite of his recognition of the force of circumstances Aristotle shares with Plato 'and all the political theorists of Greece the belief in the omnipotence of positive legislation, as if mighty historical developments which are not of today or yesterday could be simply swept out of the world by a command or prohibition. Besides, he makes Lycurgus responsible for things for which no legislator can be responsible, and he partly blames him for effects of certain laws, when the effects could not be imputed to him even if the laws in question had really been his own work, and that in the sense in which Aristotle attributes them to him' (Oncken). Cp. also n. (82) on I. 9 § 8: n. (238) on II. 7 § 8; Exc. II on Bk. II; n. (339) on § 30 below; (466) on III. 3 § 9; (552) on III. 9 § 8: II. 5 § 8 n. (160): IV(VII). 14 § 16 (916). Even that which rests on no express command or prohibition, but simply on the force of popular custom, that is, the so-called 'unwritten law' (cp. n. 48 on I. 6. 1 and Exc. II to Bk. II), is directly attributed by Aristotle, as by Plato, to the authorship of a definite individual lawgiver: this is especially clear from § 14 below, see n. (300). Exactly similar is his assumption of a first founder of the state: I. 2 § 15, ὁ πρῶτος συστήσας, n. (28 b): or his judgment as to the origin of the conceptions of popular mythology, § 8 above, ὁ μυθολογήσας πρῶτος, n. (288).

'In spite of these undeniable weaknesses the whole chapter may lay claim to a full measure of authority, as much as any other of Aristotle's historical statements. It is its merit to have most acutely corrected the aberration from sound intelligence revealed in the adoration paid to the Spartan state, and here also to have confronted romance with criticism' (Oncken). Nor was a reason stated in § 7; the passage where this was touched upon above (καὶ πρότερον, see last n.), which is referred to in § 13, see n. (286). Yet it may equally have been omitted there in order to be introduced here, when the subject comes up for further discussion: this may have been followed by a transition to the relations of property generally amongst the Spartans, in the form of a remark, to which the passage μετὰ γὰρ κτλ served as reason or explanation. This much is certain that these words are not at present related to what precedes either as reason or as explanation, and if no lacuna be assumed the γὰρ of the text is an inconsistency. SUSEM. ἐποίησεν οὐ καλόν] Aristotle implies that Lycurgus never expressly prohibited, by a declaration of illegality and a penalty, the sale of the old plot of ground or the purchase of a new one. When translated into our mode of thought and expression this means that the force of usage and custom was against the practice; it was held dishonourable to sell. 'With this agrees the omission of Sparta, 8 § 6, from the list of states where alienation or enlargement of the inherited estate was prohibited by law' (Oncken), as one means of restoring, in a certain sense, equality of possessions; comp. n. (237). (This decisive circumstance was quite overlooked by Gilbert.) Is it not then a fair inference that Aristotle was also unaware of any equal division of property amongst the Spartans, whether by Lycurgus or any one else, with the design that this equality should be perpetual? (This last is the only point here in question with Aristotle.) Otherwise, since such a division amongst those who are actual citizens was also his own ideal, IV(VII). 10 §§ 9—12 n. (835);—cp. nn. on II. 6 § 5 (192), § 15 (214)—would he not have expressly appealed to the authority of Lycurgus in support of it, and expressly commended him for this excellent design? Would he not also have expressly blamed him, no less than Plato or Phaleas—6 § 10 ff. (208—211), 7 § 5 (234)—for having neglected, to a still greater extent than these theorists, to take the appropriate means for bringing this about: nay more, for having taken as good as no means whatever? The 7th fragment of the Polity of the Lacedaemonians attributed to Herakleides (Müller Frag. hist. Gr. II. 211) undoubtedly goes back to the Aristotelian work On the Spartan constitution, see n. (360) on 10 § 6. But this by no means proves that these extracts must be wholly free from foreign additions, or that τῆς δ' ἀρχαίας μοίρας οὐδὲ ἔξεστιν is not one here. Cp. n. (310^{*}) on § 17. Gilbert, op. c. 162 ff., attempts in vain to show that it is quite natural that Aristotle should omit this limitation in the present passage. For, if he had known it, it is obvious how much it must have both weakened and again aggravated the blame he has here expressed. For whatever we may make of the 'ancient portion' (ἀρχαίας μοίρας), it would testify to a stronger care on the part of the legislator to preserve the family estates if the sale of this portion was absolutely forbidden by law and declared null and void, at the same time that it would be so much the stronger inconsistency if even this property was to be freely disposed of by will or given away. Besides Gilbert's whole method of explaining this ἀρχαία μοῖρα has already been briefly, but correctly, refuted by Frick in Jahrb. f. Phil. CV. 1872. 667. SUSEM. (300)

(Bender). Aristotle's statement concerning the great wealth of Spartan women is confirmed by Plutarch's from a yet later time Agis 4. 7 ἦν δὲ τότε τῶν Λακωνικῶν πλούτων ἐν ταῖς γυναιξὶ τὸ πλεῖστον. (J. G. Schneider.) SUSEM. (302)

The Spartan name for them is ἐπιπάμονες, ἐπιπαματίδες.

25 καίτοι βέλτιον] Here again later authors are apparently better informed of the facts than Aristotle. We are told that dowries had actually been prohibited, and that down to the time of Lysander none were ever given; see Schömann Antiquities of Greece p. 265 Eng. tr. SUSEM. (303)

26 νῦν δ' ἔξεστι κτλ] It is obvious that this sentence forms no antithesis to the preceding and thus νῦν δὲ gives no sense. All however is right if one imagines something like the following to have fallen out before νῦν δέ: <'And besides it would have been necessary to prescribe who had the right and obligation of marrying heiresses, > whereas at present every father can marry his daughter to any one he pleases, and if he die without a will his heir at law bestows her upon whom he pleases.' SUSEM. (304)

§ 16 29 δυναμένης] Of course Aristotle makes this calculation, as Oncken remarks, with regard to the total population of Laconia, whether Spartan or of non-Spartan descent. In any case it is rather too high an estimate, as this total population amounted to only 400,000 at the most: see Schömann Antiquities of Greece p. 195 Eng. tr. But on the other hand the reading, or rather conjecture, τρισχιλίους would not merely give a number far too small, but also one out of all proportion to that of the 1500 cavalry. SUSEM. (306)

again of course only Spartans proper are meant, not Provincials (Περίοικοι) and Helots. According to Xenophon, Hellen. VI. 4. 15, 1000 Lakedaemonians fell at Leuctra, including 400 out of the 700 Σπαρτιάται who took part in the battle. Xenophon also, De Rep. Lac. i. 1, calls Sparta one of the least populous of states (J. G. Schneider). SUSEM. (309)

§ 17 34 λέγουσι δ' ὡς κτλ.] 'It would appear as if Aristotle is our only authority for this fact. Herodotus, ix. 35, is very positive in his assertion that Tisamenos the Elean and his brother Hegias μόνοι δὴ πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἐγένοντο Σπαρτιάται πολῖται' (Congreve). Cp. also n. (312). (Plutarch Instit. Lac. 22 speaks somewhat differently. It is there stated that the strangers who submitted to the Lycurgean discipline were by the ordinance of Lycurgus also allowed a share in the 'ancient portion,' τῆς ἀρχῆθεν διατεταγμένης μοίρας, which they were not permitted to sell. Cp. n. 300.) Ephoros however, as Trieber shows, had the following story, Frag. 18 found in Strabo VIII. 364. The first kings Eurystheneas and Prokles had divided Laconia into four states, besides Sparta and Amyclae, and on account of the paucity of men had authorized the dependent rulers of these four provincial states to admit aliens to the right of citizenship: at that time the περίοικοι were as yet completely on an equality, political and civil, with the pure Spartans. Now it is indeed true that this account cannot have been the authority which Aristotle is here quoting, as Trieber and Susemihl once supposed: but this being the case the partial agreement of the two accounts is still striking enough to suggest that Aristotle has here cited some other passage of Ephoros. For Herodotus may possibly refer only to historical times, Aristotle to the earlier period, e.g. perhaps only the reigns of the oldest kings. No doubt he is also thinking of such old Spartan families of non-Dorian descent as the Aegidae and Talhybiadae: see Schömann p. 193, 208, 225 f., 249 Eng. tr.; Gilbert p. 52 ff., 57 ff., 149 f.; Frick in Jahrb. f. Philol. cv. 1872. p. 655 ff. It might again be said that Herodotus obviously has in mind only foreigners proper; whereas Aristotle might mean the μόθακες, as they were called, children of Helots brought up as Spartans, who were perhaps invariably the illegitimate sons of Spartan lords by Helot women. But then such μόθακες were not confined to the times of the earlier kings: even Lysander, Gylippos, Kleandridas, for example, belonged to their number, see Schömann p. 200 Eng. tr. Ridgeway, again, suggests that the reference is to the νεοδαμώδεις, i.e. Helots enfranchised for their services in war, and to their descendants. But a similar objection may be still more strongly urged: the earliest mention of νεοδαμώδεις is as late as the period of the Peloponnesian war, Schömann p. 198 Eng. tr.—Comp. § 11 n. (295) and esp. Introd. p. 35 n. (3). SUSEM. (310)

35 ὥστ' οὐ γίνεσθαι] 'and that therefore there was then no lack of men although they were at war for a long time.' The indicative would have been used in oratio recta: hence οὐ, not μή, in obliqua. Thucyd. v. 40 ὥστ' οὐχ ἡγείσθαι and Demosth. De falsa leg. §§ 166, 167, 351 with Shilleto's Appendix B.

36 καὶ φασιν εἶναι κτλ.] Evidently here again the pure Spartans are meant. Demaratos in Herod. VII. 234 reckons them at about 8,000 (Eaton). SUSEM. (311)

τέτταρας] Aelian Var. Hist. VI. 6 says 'five' (J. G. Schneider). Further Manso Sparta I. 1, p. 128 f., is undoubtedly right in asserting that this law was of a more modern origin, as the state certainly never dreamed of taxing pure Spartans in the olden times, and the remission of military duty as a reward appears to agree but ill with the spirit of ancient Sparta. The measure reveals that the decadence of the national power had already set in (Trieber). Aristotle however does not say that this law came down from Lycurgus: see n. (321) on § 21. SUSEM. (314)

§ 19 4 καίτοι φανερόν κτλ.] Since the Spartans lived simply and solely on the produce of their estates, this is plain enough. But considering the numerous wars, it is unfortunately not easy to see how decrease in the numbers of fighting men would be prevented by equality and inalienability of the estates. From the nature of the case the only effectual means to prevent it would have been that which according to tradition was adopted by the early kings, 'to repair gaps in the ranks of the old citizens by the admission of new citizens.' Compared with this effective remedy no great importance attaches to the encouragement given to families of three or four sons by a reward which from its character excited the dangerous surmise, that for distinguished services to the state Sparta had no better prize to offer than release from the honourable duty of serving the state. We know now that no stock which goes on breeding in and in can be preserved from extinction. Significant enough too is the proportionately large number of distinguished men in Sparta who came from the ranks of the μόθακες (see n. 310 on § 17): in whose case fresh blood was imported into the ancient stock. 'The peculiar feature in the social malady of the Spartan state was this, that inequality of property, which we know to be as old as property itself, gained ground here, not as usually, in the train of over-population, but as a consequence of the very opposite condition, viz. depopulation' (Oncken). The order (which Stahr, and apparently Congreve, have mistaken) is δεῖ πάντα τὰ μέρη (subject) τῆς πόλεως βούλεσθαι τὴν πολιτείαν τὴν μ. σ. (object of βούλεσθαι) εἶναι καὶ διαμένειν. If a constitution is to be preserved, all classes in the state must desire its existence and continuance. Hence we are led to Bernays' or Schneider's correction.

23 οὕτως ἔχουσιν=βούλονται τὴν πολιτείαν διαμένειν (Congreve). Comp. 10 § 10, of the δῆμος.

24 καλοὶ κάγαθοι] This expression in Aristotle—see e.g. VI(IV). 8 § 3 ff.—always denotes the more educated and capable men: and this meaning in the present passage is confirmed by the addition ἄθλον γὰρ ἡ ἀρχὴ αὕτη τῆς ἀρετῆς ἐστίν, which Trieber hardly has sufficient grounds for regarding as an interpolation. Hence Unger in Philol. Anzeiger v. 1873. p. 370 has rightly protested against the completely mistaken assertion of Gilbert op. c. 151 ff., and Frick De ephoris Spartanis 28 f. 7, who prefer to understand by it the nobles. From passages like II §§ 3, 4 and VI(IV). 7 § 4 (which Gilbert p. 153 incredibly mistakes) any one who reads without preconceived opinion will see beyond all doubt that Aristotle knows nothing of an election of Senators at Sparta, for which only certain families were eligible (as was the case in Crete c. 10 § 10), or of a privileged hereditary nobility within the pale of those pure Spartans who had the right to take part in the popular assembly. Nor can the opposite of this be inferred from VI(IV). 9 § 9, see n. (1264). But the mode of election may very well have been such that in practice members of certain families were successful time after time: see VIII(V). 6 § 21 n. (1586). SUSEM. (322 b)

ἄθλον γὰρ κτλ] To be a member of this body is a reward of special excellence, or at least it should be: see below § 25, Demosth. XX. Adv. Leptin. § 107 ἐκεῖ μὲν γὰρ ἐστὶ (at Lacedaemon) τῆς ἀρετῆς ἄθλον τῆς πολιτείας κυρίῳ γενέσθαι μετὰ τῶν ὁμοίων: Plut. Lyc. 26. SUSEM. (323)

§ 23 28 παιδαριώδης κτλ] Here Aristotle calls the whole method of electing the Ephors childish, yet he says of the election to the senate § 27, κατὰ τὴν κρίσιν ἐστὶ παιδαριώδης, it is childish as to the means of ascertaining the results. Consequently the mode of election was probably not the same for the two offices. Plato again describes it in the case of the ephors as approximating to a nomination by lot Laws III 692 A, ἐγγὺς τῆς κληρωτῆς δυνάμεως. This points to auspices (Ulrichs Rhein. Mus. N. S. VI. 1847. 223). But it is hardly possible to determine whether electors were chosen by the people and then, after observing certain signs, they appointed the new ephors, as Ulrichs thinks: or whether, according to Schömann's conjecture p. 240 Eng. tr., a larger number of persons were nominated by the people, and the five selected from them in accordance with certain auspices. the people voted by acclamation, which would generally favour those who have the right of proposing candidates. Oncken (I. 281 f.) adopts this view. Göttling (p. 468) assumed that the people nominated a certain number of candidates and that from these the Ephors were taken by lot. Stein (p. 20) puts forward a more complicated theory: that electors designated by lot nominated a number of candidates, and that the ephors were elected from the candidates by the same process as the senators.

κρίσεων μεγάλων] The ephors had the greatest part of the administration of justice in private suits, especially in all actions arising from contracts; see III. I § 10 τὰς τῶν συμβολαίων <δικας> δικάζει τῶν ἐφόρων ἄλλος ἄλλος nn. (443-4), Schömann op. c. 237, 246, 250 f. Eng. tr. SUSEM. (325)

§ 24 31 οὐχ ὁμολογουμένη] inconsistent with (the design of) the polity.

32 ἀνειμένη λίαν] The ephors had a separate mess-table to themselves, Schömann op. c. 245 Eng. tr., and there they were able, so great was their authority, amongst other things to provide a far more elaborate cuisine than the ordinary soup, the 'black broth' of Sparta (J. G. Schneider). SUSEM. (327)

34 ἀλλὰ λάθρα...ἡδονῶν] Cp. § 35 nn. (346—7), IV(VII). 15 § 6 n. (927). Thus amongst the Spartan men, too, the much-vaunted strictness of manners had its limits, and the all-important condition was merely not to be detected in excesses. How else would Spartan avarice even be explicable? SUSEM. (328)

§ 25 37 ἐπεικῶν...ἱκανῶς] 'If only honest men, sufficiently trained to manly excellence, entered the senate.' No doubt this was part of the original design of the institution; but frequently it was not carried out: see § 22 n. (323). SUSEM. (329)

39 κρίσεων μεγάλων] The Spartan senate had criminal jurisdiction in particular: see III. I § 10 n. (443 b), VI(IV). 9 § 9, ὀλίγους εἶναι κυρίου θανάτου καὶ φυγῆς n. (1266). SUSEM. (329 b)

40 ἔστι γάρ, κτλ.] In conformity with this principle Aristotle in his ideal state releases very old citizens from the administration of the state and allows them to retire as priests: IV(VII). 9 § 9 nn. (816—7). Plato too was of the same opinion on this point. In his state of the Lawos he prescribes that no one be allowed to be a member of the highest magisterial office, the board of νομοφύλακες (see above nn. on 6 §§ 18, 19), under 50 or over 70 years of age: Lawos VI 755 A f. 8 τὸν τρόπον οὗ τοῦτον] Because the superintendence and control exercised by the Ephors was far too unlimited and violent (J. G. Schneider). See above § 20 n. (318). SUSEM. (332)

§ 27 9 κατὰ τε τὴν κρίσιν κτλ] "The proceedings are described by Plutarch (Lycurg. c. 26) in the following manner. After the assembling of the 'people,' i.e. of all the Spartiatae who possessed the right of voting, some men selected for the purpose proceeded to a neighbouring building from which no view was afforded of the place of meeting, though the voices of the assembled crowd could easily be heard. Then the candidates for the vacant office passed silently one by one through the assembly in an order fixed by lot, while the people, according to the various degrees of favour with which they regarded them, made their feelings known by correspondingly loud or feeble acclamations. The party confined in the building, to whom the order in which the candidates appeared by lot was unknown, observed on which occasion the acclamation was the loudest, and the candidate who was thus greeted was regarded as the popular choice.....Aristotle's judgment upon these proceedings is quite intelligible in an age in which the manners of the people had long degenerated from their ancient purity and simplicity. For obviously there was nothing easier than to turn the whole election into a mere fraudulent farce, and to determine the result beforehand" Schömann p. 231 f. Eng. tr. One of the main questions that arise is, how the committee which decided on the loudness of the acclamations was itself appointed:—and on this point we have no information (Oncken). Besides, this mode of election is only a peculiar survival of the primitive election of chiefs by acclamation in a rude antiquity, retained in a time for which it had long since ceased to be adapted. In general the votes of the Spartans in the popular assembly continued to be taken viva voce, by acclamation, βοῇ; and only in case of a doubt as to the decision did an actual division of the 10 καὶ τὸ αὐτὸν αἰτεῖσθαι = (the obligation to) a personal canvass. Schlosser and Fülleborn think this a wise arrangement, since otherwise the proposers might nominate whom they liked;—as if it were Aristotle's meaning that any one who aspired to be a senator had the right to canvass, but need not do so unless he liked. But beyond all doubt, as is clear from n. (333), he means that the candidates are obliged to canvass personally. SUSEM. (334)

11 δεῖ γὰρ κτλ] This is the principle adopted in its entirety by Plato, in whose ideal state the philosophic rulers only undertake the government against their own inclination, Zeller Plato p. 463 Eng. tr. Compare also 11 § 12 n. SUSEM. (335) Add Rep. 347 B ff., 517 D, 519 C.

§ 28 13 νῦν δ' ὅπερ κτλ] But here the legislator is evidently acting with the same object as in other provisions of his constitution: in the endeavour to make his citizens covetous of honour he has adopted this device for the election of senators (τούτῳ = τῷ αὐτὸν αἰτεῖσθαι, a personal canvass). See Xen. De Rep. Lac. IV. 2.

16 τῶν γ' ἀδικημάτων τῶν ἐκουσίων] Here the term ἀδικημάτων is used in a sense different from that of Rhet. I. 13. 16, 1374 b 8 ἐστὶ δ' ἀδικήματα ὅσα μήτε παράλογα ἀπὸ πονηρίας τε ἐστίν, or the un-Aristotelian passage Nic. Eth. v. 8. 2 where every ἀδικημάτων is also ἐκούσιον. SUSEM. (336)

17 τὰ πλείστα συμβαίνει κτλ] Here Lycurgus would certainly have been able to reply to Aristotle on the same lines as the latter takes in his objection to Plato c. 5 § 9: ψέγεται δικαίως...τὸ μᾶλλον ἢ δεῖ <χρήματα> φιλεῖν. Besides as no one could become senator until he was 60 years of age, 'an ambition which is contented with this prospect until then must have a very tenacious life, such as is only attained under strict discipline, and cannot easily become dangerous to the state' (Oncken). § 30 22 ὅτι δὲ ὁ νομοθέτης κτλ.] In the developed state Aristotle only recognizes kingship as an actual form of government in the case where the preeminently best man exercises an unlimited monarchy: III. 13 § 13 n. (601), §§ 14, 24 n. (614), § 25; 17 § 5 n. (678); VI(IV). 2 § 1 ff. nn. (1133, 1136—7); 10 § 3 n. (1280), see also the notes on III. 5 § 10 (521), 13 § 9 (595), § 11 (597), 14 § 15 (633). It is only consistent in him therefore to set up an analogous standard even for a very limited monarchy, and to ignore hereditary descent altogether, except in a family where special capacity may be inherited. Compare I § 3, 4 nn. (381—3). But when again, cp. n. (296) on § 12, he treats such a peculiar fact as the dual kingship at Sparta, a fact rendered intelligible only by historical events of a very special nature, exactly as if it had come from the brain of a single legislator, then, as Oncken (I. 287) rightly remarks, here if anywhere is a point of view foreign to historical criticism: and such criticism is hardly anything more than superficial. See C. Wachsmuth The historical origin of the two kings at Sparta in the Jahrb. f. Philol. xcvi. 1868. 1—9; E. Curtius History of Greece I p. 186 ff. Eng. tr.: Schömann op. c. 208, 225 f., 541—4 Eng. tr. But when they come to particulars, these authors diverge seriously from one another in their conception of the subject. SUSEM. (339)

24 ἐξέπεμπον κτλ.] Two ephors regularly accompanied the king on an expedition: see Schömann op. c. 242 Eng. tr. SUSEM. (340) Cp. Xen. Rep. Laced. 13 § 5, πάρεσι δὲ καὶ τῶν ἐφόρων δύο, οἱ πολυπραγμονοῦσι μὲν οὐδέν, ἦν μὴ ὁ βασιλεὺς προσκαλῇ· ὀρώντες δὲ ὅτι ποιεῖ ἕκαστος πάντας σωφρονίζουσιν, ὡς τὸ εἰκός. Ten ἐύβουλοι were given to Agis, Thuc. v. 63.

25 συμπρεσβευτὰς] A less forcible word, like συναποδημούντας, might have been expected.

26 τὸ στασιάζειν] Grote II. p. 464. Schneider compares Plut. Agis c. 12, τοῦτο γὰρ τὸ ἀρχεῖον (the Ephors) ἰσχύειν ἐκ διαφοράς τῶν βασιλέων τῷ τὰ βελτίονα λέγοντι προστιθέμενον τὴν ψήφον, ὅταν ἄτερος ἐρίξῃ πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον.

The public messes: §§ 31, 32.

§ 31 27 φιδίτια] The derivation is uncertain: Plut. Lyc. 12 guesses wildly. Perhaps √σεδ to sit; if indeed φειδίτια is the true form and φειδίτης = [ἐ]φ-εδ-ι-της (?) , see n. on 1272 a 22. Clearly ἀνδρεία was the older Doric name, and συσσίτια is only an Attic term.

28 ἔδει γὰρ κτλ.] Cp. 10 §§ 7, 8 nn. (363, 365): IV(VII). 10 § 10 (834). Plato's criticism, Λaws VIII 847 E, is precisely the same: τροφῆς δὲ καὶ διανομῆς τῶν ἐκ τῆς χώρας ἐγγυὺς τῆς τοῦ Κρητικῆς νόμου ἔοικεν ὁρόδης ἂν τις γιγνομένη κατὰ τρόπον γίγνεσθαι κτλ. 'But on Spartan ground this was once for all impossible; for Aristotle himself knows best, § 36, that the Spartan state as such (τὸ κοινόν) possesses no property at all, neither in land, nor in money and money's worth' (Oncken): or at least, to put it more correctly, the state treasury for the most part was not well supplied; cp. Schömann op. c. p. 291 Eng. tr. SUSEM. (341)

For σύνδοον = πρόσδοον the lexx. quote Herod. I. 64 χρημάτων συνδόουσι = contributions. But here the singular (σύνδοον) and the entire phrase ἀπὸ κοινοῦ (sumptu publico) εἶναι, favour the rendering 'the gathering should have been a state affair.' Cp. VII(VI). 4 § 13, 1319 a 32; τῆς συνόδου ταύτης = τῆς ἐκκλησίας. The original design of public messes was military comradeship: see Schömann pp. 271, 282 Eng. tr.

 Compare also II. 10 § 6 n. (360). We can hardly follow Oncken (I 293) in assuming that Aristotle's criticism here implies a further reference to Lysander's plans for the entire overthrow of the kingly power, VIII(v). 1 § 10 n. (1498).
 A design entertained by one distinguished holder of the office, such as Lysander undoubtedly, cannot be attributed without further ado to the institution of the ναύαρχος as a whole. Certainly a startling anomaly was introduced into the political structure of Sparta by the necessity which gradually arose for the employment of a fleet: and it is significant 'that of four native Admirals (ναύαρχοι) in whom Sparta trusted in the last period of the Peloponnesian war, two, Phrynīs and Deinīades, were Provincials (περλοικοὶ) and two, Lysander and Gylippos, were μόθακες' (Oncken).

§ 37 16 τοὺς δ' ἰδιώτας φιλοχρημάτους] As early as the first quarter of the sixth century B.C. Alcaeus (Fr. 50) quotes
the saying of Aristodamos, a Spartan,
'money makes the man' as in full force at Sparta: ὡς γὰρ δῆποτ' Ἀριστόδαμόν φαισι
οὐκ ἀπάλαμνον ἐν Σπάρτῃ λόγον | εἴτην· χρήματ' ἄνηρ, πένιχος δ' οὐδεὶς πέλετ' ἔσλος οὐδὲ τίμιος. Amongst well-known instances of peculation or corruption Eaton quotes Leotychides, Pleistoanax, Astyocho, Kleandridas, Gylippos, Ly-sander: to which he adds Plutarch's own admission, Lycurg. 30; Ἀγιδος δὲ βασιλεύ- οντος εἰσερρῶν νόμισμα πρῶτον εἰς τὴν Σπάρτην καὶ μετὰ τοῦ νομίσματος πλεονεξία καὶ πλοῦτον ζῆλος ἐπέβη διὰ Λύσανδρον, ὅς αὐτὸς ὦν ἀνάλωτος ὑπὸ χρημάτων ἐνέπληξε τὴν πατρίδα φιλοπλουτίας καὶ τρυφῆς.
Besides the corruption of the ephors,
§ 19 n. (316), and senators, § 26 (331 b), 11 § 4 (384), Aristotle might have spoken confidently of that of the kings and admirals. There was a well-known oracle, ἡ φιλοχρηματία Σπάρταν ὀλεῖ, ἄλλο δὲ οὐδέν, quoted in Aristotle's Polity of Lacedaemon Frag. 501, 1559 b 28 (= Aristot. pseudepi. 496 = 88 in Müller's Fr. hist. Gr. II. p. 131), and even Tyrtaeus (?) seems to have cited it, Fr. 3.

122 E f., quoted by Eaton; χρυσίον καὶ
ἀργύριον οὐκ ἐστὶν ἐν πᾶσι Ἕλλησιν ὅσον be an exaggeration; the writer of the dialogue is however generally well informed on historical matters, see Cobet Mnemos. N. S. II. 1874. 369 ff. Compare with this the instances of great wealth possessed by Spartans, some of which have been collected by Grote Greece IX.

321 f., Gilbert op. c. 154 f. If the Spar-tiatae, with the exception of the kings, ever were prohibited from possessing gold and silver—a statement which H.

Stein in the dissertation quoted in n. (85) on I. 9 § 8 seeks to disprove—it was at a very early time that the prohibition was removed. For gold and silver money were first coined by Pheidon king of Argos (whose age is, I admit, very variously estimated, 760 or 670 B.C.), and even down to the time of Croesus gold and silver were scarce in Greece; see n.
(1653) on VIII(v). 10 § 6 and Böckh
Public Economy I. p. 6 f. Eng. tr. H.
Stein, Oncken, and others would reduce this supposed prohibition to the fact, that gold and silver money remained unknown for a longer time in the secluded valley of the Eurotas than in the trading districts on the coast; and thus the Spartans retained their old iron money in use for a long time, first in bars, and afterwards as a sort of coinage (see Schömann op. c. p. 275 Eng. tr.) and employed it even later along with gold and silver money for internal trade. See

§ 2 24 φασὶ γὰρ τὸν Δ.] Ephoros l.c. (Strabo X. 482) relates that Lycurgus, as guardian of Charilaos the posthumous child of his brother Polydektes, for certain reasons which are stated went to Crete and did not return until Charilaos himself had assumed the government. Compare Plutarch Lycurg. cc. 2—5; Trieber op. c. p. 65 ff., 100; Flügel Die Quellen in Plutarchs Lykurgos 22 ff. (Marburg 1870.) SUSEM. (352)

28 κατέλαβον δ'...κατοικοῦσιν] "And the settlers who had gone out to Lyttos had found the system of the laws established at that time amongst the inhabitants." In just the same way Ephoros (l.c. 481) replies to those who claim a Lacedaemonian descent for the Cretan institutions on the ground that the Lyttians were a colony from Sparta and that colonists generally preserve the usages of the mother state. He urges that many colonies did not do this and that many Cretan towns, not colonies from Sparta, yet had the same institutions as the Spartan colonies in Crete. On these considerations of Aristotle and Ephoros, then, the Lycurgian institutions at Sparta, so far from being genuinely Spartan, were not even of Dorian origin, but had belonged in the first instance to the pre-Dorian population of Crete; unless indeed even these earliest inhabitants of Crete are to be regarded as Dorians (as they are by Otfried Müller The Dorians

1. p. 36 ff. Eng. tr.). But this view has been refuted by Trieber p. 81 ff. In opposition to the view of Ephoros and Aristotle, which is in itself improbable, he has sought to maintain the truth of that combated by Ephoros, that Spartan institutions actually passed over into Crete with the Spartan settlers. Compare n. (356) on § 4. Polybios moreover IV. 54. 6 describes Lyttos (Λύττος being the reading there also) as the oldest of the Cretan towns and likewise as a colony of Lacedaemon. Trieber has shown conclusively p. 105 ff. as against K. O. Müller that there never really existed any specially 'Dorian' political or social principles, such as are presumed to have found their highest and completest embodiment in Sparta. SUSEM. (354)

§ 3 30 οἱ περίοικοι] Why mention merely the περίοικοι i.e. the descendants of the pre-Dorian population, if after all the Spartan and other Dorian settlers had accepted the same institutions? Aristotle cannot have contradicted himself in such a manner as this, or have written such nonsense. It is much more likely that some learned Peripatetic added this in order to tack on the following remarks about Minos, his maritime power, and his death. He did not however perceive that they are not at all appropriate to this connexion, and that to speak of Crete as favourably situated for maritime supremacy over the Hellenes agrees but ill with Aristotle's own statements §§ 15, 16: where the remoteness of the island is said to have shut it off from external complications and from foreign dominion. SUSEM. (355)

Grote II. 484 n. 2 has another way out of the difficulty. He takes the word as in Thuc. I. 17, "the neighbouring 41 ἔχει δ' ἀνάλογον...Λακωνικὴν] Trieber p. 86 ff. shows that, although the points of difference as well as of resemblance are not brought out forcibly enough, yet in the main the whole comparison is just. He tries to make it probable that from its quite peculiar character the similarity can only be explained by a real transference from Sparta to Crete. Oncken on the other hand, II.

377, finds a reason both for the resemblance and the limitations to it in the one point which Aristotle has not mentioned, "the fact that in Sparta as in Crete a dominant race of the same Dorian descent broke in from a foreign land upon an old political order, overcame it by violence, and then directed their whole energies to the task of maintaining themselves uncontaminated and unassailable at the head of their new settlement." Polybios VI. 45, 46 goes still farther and even denies that there were any resemblances at all between the two polities. SUSEM. (356)

He insists (1) on the absence of any legal restriction on the possession of land or money, and (2) on the annual tenure of offices (as contrasted with the life-long tenure of Spartan Kings and Gerusiasts) and the democratic character of the Cretan governments. Undoubtedly as we approach Roman times the power of the ἐκκλησία increases: Höck III. pp. 64—97, who supports his case from inscriptions, infers that a democratic revolution had subverted the governments of Aristotle's time.

SUSEM. (359)

This constitution analogous to that of Sparta was the constitution of every independent Cretan town. We learn from the inscriptions that little places like Hierapytna, Praisos (Praesus), Saxos, Allaria, had each its own κόσμοι, βουλὴ, and ἐκκλησία.

§ 7 10 ἐκκλησίας δὲ κτλ.] Cp. 11 §§ 5, 6 with Exc. IV. Although the simple verb ἐπιψηφίζειν does not mean “to vote,” but “to put to the vote,” yet so far as I know συνεπιψηφίζειν is everywhere found in the sense of “vote approvingly,” i.e. “confirm by a vote,” auctores fieri: Polyb. XXII. 13. 1, Plutarch De Garrulitate § 11 F. Here it can have no other meaning. The only doubt is whether we should take it literally (1) that the popular assembly was bound to ratify by its vote, or (2) that it only had the right, without proper debate and without amendment, simply to confirm or reject the proposal previously decided by others. That question will be discussed in n. (389). SUSEM. (362)

Aesch. De Fals. Leg. 35 has the middle voice in the same sense. Compare κατασιωπᾶν with both meanings (1) to be very silent, (2) to put to silence (Cope). 20 ὥστ' ἐκ κοινοῦ κτλ] If we understand this as e.g. Schömann does, op. c. 307 Eng. tr., that the mess-funds maintained the members of the family, wives daughters younger boys and slaves, who had their meals at home, then the whole of Oncken's proof (II. 385), that καὶ γυναῖκας καὶ παῖδας καὶ ἄνδρας is a spurious addition, falls to the ground. Such slight inaccuracies of expression, due to excessive brevity, are no uncommon thing in

Aristotle. The sense might be made clearer by a slight insertion thus: 'one part is set apart for the worship of the gods and for the state expenditure, the other for the public messes <and the entire maintenance of the households of the citizens>, so that all, men women and children, are kept at the public cost.' Schömann rightly remarks that this explains why an Aeginetan stater had to be paid for each slave: see Exc. III. p. 337. Oncken however gives a different explanation (II. 387), he makes each of the subject population (?) contribute an Aeginetan stater. SUSEM. (366)

have been strange if he had not intended to take this question into consideration when describing the best state. See Introd. p. 49 n. 4, p. 53. How he would have decided it, we have no means of knowing. For, taken alone, Nic. Eth. VII. 5. 3 hardly justifies an immediate inference that he would have disallowed such means. Thus the grounds on which Oncken, II. 389 ff., tries to prove that § 9, as far as καιρός, is interpolated, are wholly untenable: and it is a misapprehension on his part that I bracketed the clause. But he is right in one point, that the introduction of this subject is not very fitting here; we must however put up with it, as it would be still less appropriate in any other part of the chapter. § 10 30 γίνονται γὰρ οἱ τυχόντες] Ephoros Fr. 64 (in Strabo p. 482) gives the same statement as Aristotle here, that the senators were chosen from those who had been Κόσμοι but adds that only tried and approved men were selected. There is no divergence in the facts here, but only in the judgment upon them: though it is of such a kind that, as is stated in Exc. III. p. 336, Aristotle must have depended upon other accounts than those of Ephoros for the facts on which he based his judgment. Furthermore even in Sparta those who had been Ephors must frequently, to say the least, have entered the senate. SUSEM. (369)

οἱ ἂν μὴ κτλ.] Oncken (II. 393) is quite wrong in inferring from this passage that even the judicial office probably passed from the kings to the Κόσμοι. From the complete analogy which Aristotle finds between the Spartan and Cretan senators, and between the Ephors and Κόσμοι, in all the essential features of the authority of these offices, it is clear on the contrary that, as in Sparta III. I. 10 nn. (443-4), so in Crete, the Senate had criminal jurisdiction over the most serious offences, and the Κόσμοι appeared, like the Ephors, as accusers in the case of crimes against the state. Eng. tr. SUSEM. (373)

§ 16 18 διὸ καὶ τὸ τῶν π. κτλ.] Consult however n. (281) on 9 § 3: where also a different reason, it should be observed, is assigned by Aristotle himself, viz. that the Cretan states, even if at war, assist one another against the revolted περίοικοι. SUSEM. (374)

19 οὔτε γὰρ] It is the isolation, not the strength, of the Cretans that secures their independence; for (1) they are not strong enough to acquire foreign dominion (ἐξωτερικῆς ἀρχῆς), while (2) their internal weakness is now patent.

20 νεωστί τε πόλεμος κτλ.] There are two events to which this passage, taken by itself, may refer. (1) With Höck, Kreta III. 61 f., we may understand it of the Phocian war. Phalaecus, the last leader of the Phocians, after withdrawing from Phocis came at last with his mercenaries to Crete: by a stratagem he conquered Lyktos and drove out the inhabitants who turned to their mother city, Sparta, for aid. This aid they received under the command of Archidamos, who beat the mercenaries and reestablished the Lyktians in their city. Phalaecus however stayed in the island and fell at the siege of Kydonia B.C. 343. See Schäfer Demosthenes II. 339 f. Or (2) we might with Fülleborn (II. 253) refer it to the despatch of Agesilaos with the mercenaries of his brother Agis II, who was allied with the Persians and sent the expedition directly after the battle of Issos (333) to conquer Crete. The Lacedaemonians with their mercenaries effected a landing successfully and met with no material resistance; see Schäfer III. p. 163 f. As therefore both events suit, if, when he wrote the passage, Aristotle had been acquainted with the second he would certainly have spoken of two foreign wars, and not of one only: thus it seems as if this passage were composed before the latter of the two events took place. But it need not be inferred from this that the completion of the book, so far as Aristotle did at all complete it, could not have been of a much later date. Aristotle often worked at several of his treatises at the same time. Cp. Introd. p. 66. SUSEM. (375)

Ξενικός = of mercenaries (Congreve). Better, 'foreign.' For III. 14. 7 ξενικόν as opposed to οἱ πολῖται means a foreign force, though a force of mercenaries.

c. 11 The constitution of Carthage.

On this chapter consult Kluge Aristoteles de politia Carthaginiensium. Accedit Theodori Metochitae descriptio reipublicae Carthaginiensis (Breslau 1824): Heeren Ideen vol. II. pt. I, Works XIII. 108—147: Movers Die Phönizier (Berlin 1849) vol. II. pt. I. p. 479 ff.; Mommsen History of Rome, vol. II. pp. 15—23 Eng. tr. SUSEM. (376)

§ 1 24 πολιτεύεσθαι δὲ κτλ “are thought (a) to enjoy a good constitution, (b) with many features of unusual relative excellence, and (c) some which most nearly resemble the Spartan constitution.” Of these three points Aristotle adopts two, (c) and (a), in the next two sentences giving more definite reasons for (a) in § 2, and passing on to (c) in § 3. But the further discussion § 3 ff. proves sufficiently that he also accepted the second point. Isocrates III. 24, and Julian, Or. I. p. 14 (Spanh.), also point to a similarity between the Carthaginian and Spartan constitutions which they declare to be the best actually established. Polybios VI. 51 f. and Cicero De Rep. II. 23 § 41 ff. compare them both with one another and with the Roman constitution, while Eratosthenes (in Strabo I. p. 66) praises the admirable character of the Carthaginian and Roman constitutions. SUSEM. (377)

The exciting struggle with Dionysios for Sicily must have called attention to the government of Carthage: see note on 1273 a 36 (Wyse).

§ 2 30 It is a sign that a government is thoroughly <well> organised when the popular element is attached to the system of its own free will.

31 διαμένειν, like μένειν 10 § 16, = abide by, remain loyal to, a government.

32 μήτε τύραννον This assertion seems true. For the efforts of Hannon (about B.C. 344) to make himself tyrant, mentioned by Aristotle himself VIII(V). 7 § 4, met with no success, see n. (1597); while the attempt of Bomilcar was not until after Aristotle's time, B.C. 308. That also ended at last unsuccessfully: see the same note. Lastly there was one Malchus between 600 and 550 B.C., who having been banished because he had been defeated in Sardinia procured his return by force of arms. He then summoned the popular assembly, justified his conduct before it, and had ten senators put to death, but made no change in the existing constitution. However he fell under suspicion of aiming at tyrannical power; in consequence, and as a punishment for his former violent proceedings, he was executed, Justin. XVIII. 7, so that this instance does not contradict Aristotle's statement. With regard to VIII(V). 12 § 12 see n. (1772). SUSEM. (377 b) τῶν δὲ πρὸς τὴν ὑπόθεσιν κτλ] The whole passage requires to be read in the light of c. 9 § 1 where the two standards of the criticism are more definitely stated: μία μὲν εἴ τι καλῶς ἢ μὴ καλῶς πρὸς τὴν ἀρίστην νενομοθέτηται τάξιν, ἑτέρα δ' εἴ τι πρὸς τὴν ὑπόθεσιν καὶ τὸν τρόπον ὑπεναντίως τῆς προκειμένης αὐτοῖς πολιτείας. The second, then, which is now under consideration is, how far the Carthaginian constitution, although not the best, that is, a true Aristocracy, nevertheless remains faithful to its own distinctive principle. It is still to be regarded as an aristocracy: i.e. a so-called, or mixed aristocracy: more precisely a combination of aristocracy with oligarchy and democracy; see VI(IV). 2 § 4 n. (1141); 7 § 4 n. (1235), and cp. VIII(V). 7 § 4 n. (1597), 12 § 12 n. (1772), § 14 n. (1780): or else at any rate as a polity (πολιτεία) i.e. a mixture of oligarchy and democracy. Now the principle or fundamental assumption (ὑπόθεσις) or proper basis of every aristocracy is excellence and capacity: see esp. § 9 τὸ κατ' ἀρετὴν αἰρεῖσθαι ἀρ., § 11 μάλιστα ἀρετὴ τιμᾶται, VI(IV). 8. § 7 ὅρος ἀρετῆς and n. (536) on III. 7 § 3. Even in a nominal aristocracy, regard at least for these must stand highest: hence the more concessions are made to the oligarchical principle of wealth, or again to the democratic principle, at the expense of excellence or merit, the more the aristocracy departs from its own standard. Polity takes for its standard the complete adjustment and neutralization of Oligarchy and Democracy; hence the more the oligarchical principle on the one hand makes itself felt at the expense of the democratic or the democratic principle on the other at the expense of the oligarchical, the more violently does a Polity diverge from its own principle in the one or the other direction: see VI(IV). c. 9.

Cato quoted by Servius on Vergil's Aeneid IV. 682, Polybios VI. 51. 2 and Cicero l. c. call the constitution of Carthage, less accurately, a combination of monarchy, aristocracy (Cato, optimatum potestas; Cicero, genus optimas), and democracy. SUSEM. (386)

6 τοῦ μὲν γὰρ κτλ] "For the kings in conjunction with the senators have full powers either to bring certain matters before the people or not, provided they are both agreed: otherwise in this case the people, too, have a voice."

8 πάντες = both; viz. the Shofetes on the one side, the Senators on the other. For this is a genuine Aristotelian use of the word: "πάντες ubi de duobus tantum agitur, i. q. ἀμφοτέροι ὀποτεροσούν" (Ind. Ar.). Comp. *Anal. § 6 11 ἀλλὰ κύριοι κρίνειν] Here then in reality the final decision rests with the popular assembly; and Aristotle, judging by the standard of Aristocracy or Polity, disapproves of this, which furnishes another indication of the character of his own best state, in so far as that also is Aristocracy: see on 6 § 16 n. (218) and Exc. 1 to B. III. In keeping with this (he says) in the most moderate democracy the people are best restricted to electing the council and the officers of state and to holding them responsible, VII(VI). 4. 4 n. (1415), perhaps with a share in legislation and the decision upon changes in the constitution VI(IV). 14. 4 f.: at least only the most indispensable meetings of the popular assembly are held VI(IV). 6. 1, the administration being left to the council and the officers of state. Or even the magistrates may be elected by a mere committee of the whole people upon which all the citizens serve by rotation, VII(VI). 4. 4; or it may come to this that no popular assembly is held but it is represented by the aforesaid committee, which moreover has in many cases simply to hear the resolutions of the magistrates, VI(IV). 14. 4 n. (1322). And these are the forms of democracy which Aristotle regards as the best. SUSEM. (388)

12 ὅπερ ἐν ταῖς ἐτέραις κτλ] In the Spartan assembly only the kings, the senators, and at a later period the ephors were allowed to take part in the debate: other persons needed special permission in order to do so (see Schömann Antiquities p. 235 Eng. tr.). Undoubtedly it was similar in Crete. But when Aristotle says, or seems to say, here that in Sparta and Crete the popular assembly had merely to listen to the resolutions of the government without really having the final decision in its own hands, and 10 § 7 (cp. n. 362) that it had in those states no greater powers entrusted to it than to ratify the decrees of the Cosmi, or the kings, and the senators, all this certainly looks at first sight as if the assembly had not the right to reject these decrees, and indeed many have so understood it [e.g. Höck Kreta III. 59 ff., Ridgeway op. c. p. 134]. But that these expressions should not be thus pressed is shown by the simple consideration that if the assembly had merely to "listen to" these resolutions, it would not have been allowed to vote even in ratification of them, and thus Aristotle would have contradicted himself. But he further states that at Carthage the popular assembly, once convoked, possessed far larger privileges than in Sparta and Crete, although in respect of being summoned its rights were smaller because there was no need to convoke it in case the Shofetes and the senate were agreed: whereas in Sparta and Crete it always had to be summoned, in order to ratify the decrees of the two ruling bodies. Now if it had always to ratify or vote affirmatively, where is this greater right? But in fact when nothing might be said in the assembly except by permission of the government, and no amendments might be proposed, there was little reason to fear, so long as the kings, the senators, and the ephors were agreed, that the people would actually use their formal right of rejection. Hence it is that Aristotle uses these strong expressions which quite answer to the actual state of the case. Finally, supposing it must be conceded to Oncken (l. p. 279 f.) and Gilbert (p. 137 f.) that the obvious meaning of the clause in Plutarch Lycurg. 6, which was added to the Spartan constitution (Rhetra) by the kings Theopompos and Polydoros (αἱ δὲ σκολιὰν ὁ δᾶμος ἀποστατήρας ἦμεν) is, that it was left to the discretion of the kings and senators whether they should respect a vote in the assembly refusing ratification, or not;—supposing further that Aristotle's language really agrees most easily with this meaning (which is hardly the case, after what has been said), yet the whole hypothesis is simply wrecked by the fact that Gilbert himself explains this to be a quite abnormal Spartan institution, while Aristotle asserts that the powers of the Cretan and Spartan assemblies were altogether similar. Thus we are forced to be content with the interpretation of the additional clause given by Plutarch, τοῦτ' ἔστι μὴ κυροῦν, ἀλλ' ὅπως ἀφίστασθαι καὶ διαλύειν τὸν δῆμον, ὡς ἐκτρέποντα καὶ μεταποιούντα τὴν γνώμην παρὰ τὸ βέλτιστον, i. e. the popular assembly was restricted to a simple, unaltered acceptance or rejection of the proposals made by the king and the senate. escaped a similar fate, and had its independence and its walls preserved to it from the pious feeling of the Carthaginians towards their ancient protectors.

(2) The agricultural villages of native Libyans who had been transformed from free farmers into fellahs: they had to pay a fourth part of the produce of the soil as land-tax (Polyb. I. 72. 2) and were subjected to a regular system of recruiting. (3) The roving pastoral tribes (νομάδες) who had to pay tribute and to furnish contingents. In the treaties of the Carthaginian state preserved by Greek writers (3) are called ἔθνη, "tribes," and the villages occupied by (2) are called πό-λεις, "towns," of subjects (Mommson II.

n. 1. The context shows that these eulogists of Solon were eulogists of a mixed constitution, and not of Democracy, as Oncken strangely maintains. Such a combination of oligarchical and aristocratical elements they found in the "old-fashioned" Solonian democracy: in other words, not merely a moderate Democracy, but a nominal Aristocracy even, or at least a kind of Polity. Comp. also VII(VI). 7 § 7 n. "modern oligarchies": III. 6 § 9 n. (532). Aristotle quite accepts the distinction, cp. §§ 5, 6: III. 11. 8; VI(IV). 11. 19 n. (1303). For he has no objection to raise against these panegyrists of Solon, except that they referred even the aristocratical and oligarchical elements of the combination to Solon, whereas in fact only the democratic accession was his doing. With the following sentences compare Schömann The Solonian Heliaea and Ephialtes' coup d'état, an article in the Jahrb. f. Phil. XCIII. 1866. 585—594: and R. 41 ἔοικε] Schömann, Fränkel Die attischen Geschworenengerichte 62 f. (Berlin 1877. 8), and others lay far too much stress on this word ἔοικε='seems', here and below, § 5 l. 15. Aristotle often speaks in a qualifying manner about things of which, in reality, he has not the slightest doubt. Thus ἔοικε, l. 15, comes very close to φαίνεται l. 11; the force of which, as often in other writers besides Aristotle, is to express not so much what is merely apparent and probable, as what is obvious, what has come to light. SUSEM. (401)

 added a new element, the δικαστήρια"

 Oncken, II. 439, 440 n. (1), goes beyond Aristotle's own words. All that can be fairly inferred is that they were opponents of absolute democracy. But that does not prove them to be oligarchs;
 they might have been friends of a mixed constitution no less than Solon's panegy-rists noticed just before or, comparatively speaking, Aristotle himself. SUSEM.

 440 n. (1). As against Schömann he appeals to the fact that Aristotle only makes these critics speak of Solon as having introduced the appointment of the Heliaea by lot. Oncken does not see that just on this occasion and in the mouth of these censorious critics the form used is the singular, τὸ δικαστήριον, which had given some show to the meaning which Schömann has refuted:
 see Exc. v. This defence then is fatal to Oncken's position. Nor is there any ground for his rash assertion (II. 404) that Aristotle expressly exempts Solon from the reproach of having created anything like the later Heliaea. On the contrary the writer of this paragraph, whether Aristotle himself or some one else, agrees with Solon's critics and admirers in thinking that it was he who made the Heliaea, but that Pericles introduced the custom of paying them. It is a pity to spend so many words on a matter so clear.

 annual profits of the silver mines (see Polyaen. Str. i. 30 § 6): Diels op.c. p. 34.

14 Here as elsewhere Aristotle's sympathies go with the Athenian opposition to extreme democracy: the Moderates (ἐπιεικεῖς) headed by Aristides, Cimon, Thucydides (ὁ Μελησίου), Nicias, and Theramenes (Frag. 369, Plut. Nic. 2), who opposed the democratic leaders from Themistocles to Cleophon.

15 ἐπεὶ Σόλων γε κτλ] But above, § 3, Aristotle has said that Solon merely allowed the previously established mode of electing the archons to continue. In any case his words are not clear, as Schömann remarks. Either before Solon's time the archons were elected by the whole body of the people; and then Aristotle himself commits the fault he has censured in Solon's admirers, of inaccurately describing him as the author of an institution which he merely perpetuated.
 Or else he intends to attribute to Solon
 the transference of this election from the nobles to the whole body of citizens; if so, he ought to have mentioned this beforehand, amongst the other democratic additions which Solon made to the Athenian constitution. Which of these alternatives is correct cannot be decided.

Perhaps, thinks J. G. Schneider, there is here a survival of the old laws which tended to preserve the original family estates unaltered by means of adoption. Cp. note (425). The interpolator did not reflect that Aristotle himself expressly tells us in § 1, that in the above review of Plato Phaleas Hippodamos he has said enough of the political ideas of mere theorists (εἰρηται σχεδὸν περὶ πάντων): also that in § 1 f. he has given us to understand no less clearly that amongst practical statesmen, who created not merely a code of laws but a constitution, he has only Solon to consider, since Lycurgus has already been taken along with the criticism of the Lacedaemonian constitution. Accordingly if the interpolator, contrary to Aristotle's intention (see on § 1 n. 399), wanted to append a list of legislators simply, this ought at least to have consisted of practical men, who neither changed nor desired to change the constitution in any respect. Both limitations are inapplicable to Plato and Phaleas. From this may be seen what a misconception it would be to deny to Aristotle §§ 1—6 and assign them, with Götting, to the same interpolator as the rest of the chapter. SUSEM. (423)

It may be said that the remark serves to distinguish Draco's laws from those of Phaleas and Plato, which

NOTE ON ARCADIA.

διοΐσει δὲ τῷ τοιούτῳ καὶ πόλις ἔθνους, ὅταν μὴ κατὰ κώμας ὧσι κεχωρισμένοι τὸ πλῆθος, ἀλλ' ὅσον Ἀρκάδες: II. 2. 3.

“It is well known that the entire population of Arcadia was divided into a number of city communities politically independent, nor was this altered by the subsequent foundation of Megalopolis (see n. 459). They were held together by a tribal league sometimes more loosely, sometimes more rigidly organized, which left the political sovereignty of the various cities pretty nearly intact. Clearly a race or tribe thus organized does not greatly differ from a συνμαχία, or league offensive and defensive, and Aristotle is right in remarking that qualitative differences between the members (which are the separate towns) are not required in the one case any more than in the other, but that the essential advantage depends upon something quantitative. To this kind of ἔθνος, however, conceived as analogous to a συνμαχία, is opposed another which Aristotle excludes from this analogy by the addition of the words ὅταν μὴ κατὰ κώμας ὧσι κεχωρισμένοι τὸ πλῆθος, ‘provided their population be not dispersed over a number of villages.’ By the latter he means the ἔθνος which forms a political unity (usually with monarchical constitution), which is not divided into a number of city-states, nor centralized in a single city, but where the people live scattered all over the territory in detached villages or unwalled towns without political independence (κῶμαι). In other words it is the organization with which the Greeks became acquainted in most of the neighbouring non-Greek nations: whereas tribal federations composed of separate city-states were a somewhat more Hellenic development. It is obvious that a non-Greek tribal state of the kind certainly bore no analogy to the συνμαχία, and that in its case the qualitative distinction between the individual members, the rulers and those whom they ruled (see n. 133), was as essential as in the separate Hellenic πόλις.” Dittenberger in Gött. gel. Anz. 1874, p. 1382. SUSEM. (132)

To Dittenberger's explanation of this obscure passage it may be well to append a short conspectus of other interpretations. It has been commonly supposed (1) that there is a reference to some συννοικισμός of Arcadians, and that the πόλις is distinguished from ἔθνος = the unorganized race. Then if it be granted that ὅταν μὴ ὧσι = διὰ τὸ μὴ εἶναι or τῷ μὴ εἶναι, the words will be rendered: “A city will differ too from a tribe by not having the population scattered over villages but centralized like the Arcadians.” Thus μὴ κατὰ κώμας κεχωρισμένοι will denote the previous condition of Arcadia, the primitive stage of village life, which long lingered there as in Epirus, Aetolia, Acarnania. The analogy between this state of things and the συμμαχία must consist in the isolated independence of the villages: the ἔθνος Ἀρκαδικόν being composed ἐξ ὁμοίων, of unorganized units, submitting to no central authority. The foundation of Tegea and of Mantinea absorbed eight and five villages respectively: but Megalopolis was the most recent example of centralization and on the largest scale, as it absorbed no less than forty pre-existing townships. After their Great City was settled, it may be argued that there was no part of the Arcadian race which had not reached the stage of city life.

It would appear that, though this interpretation is open to the serious objections enumerated in the note ad loc., it can hardly be directly refuted. Aristotle may have interposed at this point the remark that as the πόλις differs on the one hand from the larger aggregate, a confederacy of cities, so too it differs on the other hand from those more primitive elements of which it is itself an aggregate. But such an interposition is, on other grounds, unsatisfactory. "No one," says Mr Postgate, "could mistake a disunited and unorganized community, with nothing but race in common, for a state; but when it has received a sort of union and organization, and, so to speak, simulates a state, confusion may arise and discrimination is necessary. In other words, the state, an organized combination of parts for a common end, requires distinguishing from similar combinations, the confederacy and the organized race, but not from the non-organized race, which conforms to none of these conditions" (Notes p. 3). Yet on the above interpretation of the passage the organized race is the πόλις; Aristotle has distinguished between race and state where there is no danger of confounding them and has omitted to distinguish them precisely where one may be mistaken for the other.

Another solution is (II) to understand by ἔθνος the organized race or tribe, as something distinct from the πόλις, retaining the reference to the events of 370—369 B.C., but primarily to the rise of the new Arcadian league, or federal state, which is wholly distinct from the contemporaneous foundation of Megalopolis, to serve as the federal capital. The principal references to the constitution of the league are as follows¹: Xenoph. Hell. VI. 5. 6 τῶν δὲ Τεγεατῶν οἱ μὲν περὶ τὸν Καλλίβιον καὶ Πρόξενον συνήγον ἐπὶ τὸ συνιέναι τε πᾶν τὸ Ἀρκαδικόν, καὶ ὃ τι νικῶν ἐν τῷ κοινῷ, τοῦτο κύριον εἶναι καὶ τῶν πόλεων· οἱ δὲ περὶ τὸν Στάσιππον ἔπραττον ἔαν τε κατὰ χώραν τὴν πόλιν καὶ τοῖς πατρίοις νόμοις χρῆσθαι: ib. VI. 5. 12 ὁ δὲ Ἀγησίλαος...καταλαβὼν πόλιν ὁμορον οὔσαν Εὐταίαν καὶ εὐρὼν τοὺς ἐν τῇ στρατευσίμῳ ἡλικία οἰχομένους εἰς τὸ Ἀρκαδικόν ὁμῶς οὐκ ἡδίκησε τὴν πόλιν: ib. VII. 4. 2 ὁ Λυκομήδης πείθει τοὺς μυρίους πράττειν περὶ συμμαχίας. (Comp. Harpocr. p. 280 μύριοι ἐν Μεγάλῃ πόλει...συνεδριὸν ἐστὶ κοινὸν Ἀρκάδων ἀπάντων· διείλεκται δὲ καὶ περὶ αὐτῶν καὶ Ἀριστοτέλης ἐν τῇ κοινῇ Ἀρκάδων πολιτείᾳ.) Xenoph. Hell. VII. 4. 12 καταλαμβάνουσιν οἱ Ἡλείοι Λασιῶνα, τὸ μὲν παλαιὸν ἑαυτῶν ὄντα, ἐν δὲ τῷ παρόντι συντελοῦντα ἐς τὸ Ἀρκαδικόν: § 38 εἰ δὲ καὶ τινες ἐπαιτιῶντο, ἔλεγον [οἱ Μαντινεῖς] ἐπαγγέλλοντες ὅτι ἡ τῶν Μαντινέων πόλις ἐγγυῶτο ἢ μὴν παρέξειν εἰς τὸ κοινὸν τῶν Ἀρκάδων ὁπόσους τις προσκαλοῖτο: VII. 5. 5 ὁ Ἐπαμεινώνδας ἐλογίζετο σφίσιν ὑπάρχειν... Ἀρκάδων τοὺς τὰ σφέτερα φρονούντας. ἦσαν δ' οὔτοι Τεγεᾶται καὶ Μεγαλοπολῖται καὶ Ἀσεᾶται καὶ Παλλαντιεῖς, καὶ εἴ τινες δὴ πόλεις διὰ τὸ μικρὰ τε εἶναι καὶ ἐν μέσαις ταύταις οἰκεῖν ἠναγκάζοντο.

From these passages it may be inferred that τὸ κοινόν, the League, was a federal state, trenching in some respects upon the autonomy of its constituent members, the individual communities. It had a στρατηγὸς and other officers, an assembly (μύριοι), a federal army (ἐπάριτοι) paid out of a common fund (Xen. Hell. VII. 4. 33, 34), and a common foreign policy. It would appear that the League is something distinct from, and politically superior to, its members, not excepting Megalopolis the greatest of them all. It is not impossible then that Aristotle intends here to draw a distinction between the organized race, as illustrated by τὸ κοινὸν τῶν Ἀρκάδων, and the ordinary autonomous canton-state (πόλις), yet this solution does not remove all difficulties, especially those of an historical nature. (1) An Arcadian league of some sort existed from ancient times, as attested by coins. Vague notions of tribal kinship and some degree of unity had been kept up, as in Ionia, by common religious rites. It is true that this secured no real political union, and that the leading states, Tegea and Mantinea, were generally hostile to each other. But in this respect the events of 369 B.C. made no permanent alteration. (2) Within eight years of its formation the new Arcadian league was broken up: after the party strife of the years 364—362 it ceased to exist as a federal union of all Arcadians, who cannot be said to have been ever again one as towards other states. Arcadians fought on opposite sides at Mantinea (362 B.C.) and in the struggle between Agis and Antipater thirty years afterwards (Aesch. III. 165, Quint. Curt. VI. I. 21). Indeed, not long after Mantinea many of the smaller townships incorporated in Megalopolis demanded autonomy. The Great City would have been dismembered upon the disruption of the League but for the timely interference of 3,000 Thebans under Pammenes, who compelled the seceders to return, Diod. XV. 94. About a century and a half later Philopoemen actually made Aliphera, Asea, Dipaia, Gortys, Pallantion, and Theisoa, independent members of the Achaean league, thus putting an end to their dependence upon Megalopolis (194 B.C.). In the time of Pausanias, all except Aliphera and Pallantion were again reduced to the condition of 'villages' of Megalopolis¹.

Bearing these facts in view, we proceed to inquire about the meaning to be assigned on this hypothesis to the words κατὰ κώμας κεχωρισμένοι. Since its supporters would probably not take them as Dittenberger has done, they may be presumed to fall back upon the former suggestion that they describe the unorganized race, which lives κατὰ κώμας τῇ παλαιᾷ τῆς Ἑλλάδος τρόπῳ. And doubtless such was the mode of life of certain districts in the south-west of Arcadia, down to the foundation of Megalopolis. But just as certain is it that (a) the league embraced Tegea, Orchomenos, Mantinea, Heraea, πόλεις which were not absorbed in Megalopolis: while (β) most of the townships or tribes whose coalition provided the population of the capital are unmistakably called πόλεις, not κῶμαι, in respect of their previous existence¹. It was after the foundation of the capital and the formation of the new league that these places became κῶμαι: previously they had been πόλεις². Nor is this the only difficulty. For if Aristotle is really desirous of distinguishing the πόλις (1) from a συμμαχία or federation of states (Staatenbund) and (2) from a federal state (Bundesstaat), and if Arcadia is the illustration of (2) which he has chosen, he must regard the federal state as still existing in his own times, which in face of its manifest disruption would only be possible if he judged Arcadian politics exclusively from the point of view of Megalopolitan interests. A zealous partizan might hold no doubt that the opposite faction had cut themselves off from the Arcadian race. Yet even with the scanty evidence at our command we can discern that the league of all Arcadia must have been reduced, at certain times, to the single federal city Megalopolis, in which case the distinction between the organized tribe and the πόλις, ex hypothesi all-important, disappears.

(III) Some of the older commentators inferred from the passage that the condition of Arcadia was one of extreme disintegration, an organization so low in the scale as to contrast unfavourably with that of the village-community. Bernays perhaps adopts this view when he translates: 'when the tribe is not divided into villages with a definite number of inhabitants, but lives scattered and without political organization.'

The obscurity of the passage is increased by the uncertainty of those who have examined it as to whether the Arcadians are cited as an example of a πόλις or an ἔθνος. The view cited as (1) makes them both. Victorius³ and Camerarius apparently consider them adduced as exemplifying the πόλις, implying that distribution of the population over villages or 'demes'⁴ (κατὰ κώμας) was a characteristic feature of the normal Greek state. But apart from other obvious difficulties one fails to see how any tribe or region of Greece, whether it had towns or not, can have been without villages.

‘Certain of those who have written books of travel round the world assert that this is actually the case: that there are tribes in the interior of Africa who have community of wives, and assign the children that are born to different fathers by their likeness to them.’ From the fragments by writers of this kind anterior to Aristotle nothing of this sort can be adduced; only Herodotos (IV. 130), who is in a way at least to be ranked with this class of authors, tells this story of the Auseans (Αὔσεες) living near Lake Tritonis, west of the Lesser Syrtis. Of later writers Mela I. 8 relates it of the Garamantians (Schlosser), for which compare Pliny v. 8. 45 (Göttling): Nicolaus Damascenus, Frag. III. in Stob. Flor. XLIV. 41 (Müller Frag. hist. Graec. III. p. 458), of the Liburnians¹ (Eaton). Diodoros III. 15. 2 does indeed attribute community of wives to the Troglodytae on the Red Sea, but he says explicitly that they have community of children as well. Herodotos (IV. 104) ascribes to the Scythian race of the Agathyrsi community of wives, but without a distribution of children and for the same object as Plato had in view ‘in order that they might all be brothers,’ ἵνα κασίγνητοὶ τε ἀλλήλων ἔωσι καὶ οἰκῆοι ἐόντες πάντες μήτε φθόνῳ μήτ’ ἔχθεϊ χρέωνται ἐς ἀλλήλους. The case of the Massagetae, cited by Congreve, Herod. I. 216, is still less in point. Other stories of community of wives and children adduced by Oncken, I. p. 134 f., p. 178 n. 1, border on the fabulous; as those related of the Tyrrhenians by Theopompos Frag. 222 in Athen. XII. 517 D, E, Müller Frag. hist. gr. I. 315², and of the Scythian Galaktophagi by Nicolaus Damascenus Frag. 123 in Stob. Flor. v. 73, Müller Frag. h. gr. III. 460³.

It is worth while to reproduce the remarks of Oncken I. pp. 179—181. 'Here Aristotle touches the surface of a profound problem. Unquestionably there is a maternal instinct which assures the mother more than any external likeness that the child is hers; and though Aristotle is here looking at the whole matter from the outside, a passage in the Ethics shows clearly that at least this is not due to the want of a right conception of the moral dignity of marriage and the inner relationship between parents and children. On the contrary he regards both relationships as altogether moral and spiritual in thoroughly modern fashion. Between man and wife, he tells us, Nic. Eth. VIII. 12. 7, 1162 a 16, there is a natural tie of love and friendship; for man is by nature even more designed for fellowship in marriage than in the state, inasmuch as the family is prior in time and more indispensable than the state, and propagation a characteristic common to all living beings, whereas the social life of a community is only found in a few other cases. But in the animal world pairing is restricted to one purpose; whereas human beings do not marry merely to bring children into the world, but to share their lives together. From the outset the functions of man and wife are distinct; by making their different endowments common property they mutually assist each other. Hence such a relationship of love and friendship combines utility with pleasure; and this pleasure, provided both are excellent in their own way, rests on the mutual delight of each in the other's diverse excellence¹. Children are the bond of union as being the common property of the parents; for what is possessed in common strengthens their union: and this is the reason why a marriage is more easily dissolved when there are no children.

'Further, § 3 of the same chapter, 1161 b 27; parents love their children as themselves; for, owing their origin to their parents, children become by the separation as it were a second self. Children love their parents as the source of their being; brothers and sisters love one another on account of their common origin; for their common relation to their parents unites them to one another, whence the expressions one blood, one stock, and the like. Again, § 5, 1162 a 4; the relationship of children to their parents, like that of men to the gods, rests on the feeling of attachment to benefactors and superiors; for they have received from them the best gifts, life, sustenance and education: enjoyment too and utility make this a closer tie than that between strangers, since it has in it a greater and more intimate fellowship in life.' Comp. also Zeller, op. c. II. ii. p. 688. 'Hence it is not simply its impracticability that Aristotle urges against community of wives and children. Whereas in Plato's view human marriage is no more than the pairing of animals'—and to use Zeller's apt expression (Plato p. 478 Eng. tr.) his proposals 'degrade it to a mere economic breeding of population'—'Aristotle has upheld against him the right and dignity of marriage in its relation to civil life, has shown what is at stake if marriage be abolished, the loss of the most primitive and sacred ties which bind man to man before a state arises to develop out of the family a higher unity¹. That these considerations do not recur in the Politics, when he is expressly refuting Plato, may be partly due to the fact that he did not wish to repeat himself; partly and more especially it is because his object is only to meet Plato with arguments which the latter must himself concede. A thinker who once took such a view of marriage as Plato, could only be opposed with arguments deducible from his own premisses. He who roundly denies that marriage has any but a political aim is safe from attack on the side of its moral purpose.' SUSEM. (142)

[Clearly Oncken, writing in thorough sympathy with his author's conceptions², understands by the family which is the ultimate social unit approximately the modern or monogamous family³. From the time of Plato⁴ and Aristotle down to the present generation this belief has been almost universal⁵. But two causes combine to render the Aristotelian theory untenable. The comparative study of customs, ceremonies and social usages discloses facts in abundance which will not square with it: while at the same time the extension of the doctrine of evolution from man's physical to his mental and social condition shows us what interpretation to put upon these facts. In short, when Aristotle derives other social forms from the monogamous family, he commits a mistake in scientific procedure: for the family is a πολλαχῶς λεγόμενον, and what he assumes to be its simple and primary form turns out to be a product of long elaboration.

The facts tell against a primitive monogamous family exactly as they tell against innate moral ideas. Locke showed that in many parts of the world men lived apparently destitute of such ideas. Ethnologists are busily at work collecting notices of varieties of men who are equally without the monogamous family and apparently destitute of the ideas on which it rests. Beginning with the Auseans, Troglodytes, &c. adduced in this Excursus, nearly all the stages of social progress can be illustrated from the ancient world, many of them from facts within the knowledge of Aristotle himself⁶. The phrase εἶναι κοινὰς τὰς γυναῖκας is not likely to have been literally true, or to have had one and the same meaning, in all cases⁷. Few tribes are so

¹ It is well known that Plato was a bachelor, whilst Aristotle had been twice happily married.

² Prof. Susemihl is in no way responsible for the remainder of this excursus, and he would perhaps consider the subject hardly relevant in an edition of the Politics.

⁴ B. III. of the Laws is a most interesting study in the history of civilization.

backward as to have no rule of incest at all; they mostly follow definite rules, but not our modern ones. Thus over a wide area it is incestuous to marry within the group to which one belongs (Exogamy), the 'group' being constituted by all of the same blood who trace their descent through females only from a common ancestor (who is often an animal, a vegetable or inanimate object)¹. It is quite certain that, under favourable circumstances, the working of this rule conferred great powers upon women. Of such a state of things, known as the Matriarchate, there is evidence in the important place of the Greek female divinities, in certain legends (e.g. of the Amazons and the Lemnian women), in eponyms like Oenone, Thebe, and Messene, in the use of μητρίς for 'motherland' by Cretans and Messenians². Down to historical times it was in force in Lycia (amongst a people possibly of Indo-European race)³ and amongst the Cantabrians of Spain⁴. Athenian traditions assert that children were once named after their mothers; amongst the Locrians nobility came on the mother's side⁵. Kinship is traced through females in Homer and succession to property is so regulated in the legend of Meleager⁶. Exogamy must anciently have been the rule of the Roman gentes⁷. The Attic law permitted a man to marry his half-sister by the father's side. The levirate is found in Sparta and in legendary Troy⁸.

⁸ Deiphobos is an instance. Lycurgus declined to take his brother's wife. This is a survival of polyandry which, though

The presumption is, then, that the system of male kinship established in Greece (as amongst other Indo-European peoples) in historical times had superseded an earlier system of female kinship. And if so, the 'stocks' (γένη) and 'brotherhoods' (φρατρίαι) which when we discern them already appear on the point of falling into decay, or made subservient to political ends, are the survivals of the ruder tribal associations, anterior to the rise of the family in our sense of the term, which were formerly the only recognized ties of blood. Their common rites and burial-place, the obligation on all the members to succour and avenge one another, their right (in certain cases) to inherit property, all point to close ties of kinship, though of a rudimentary form. Certainly in no other way is the intermixture of alien blood and alien rites in the same city and local tribe so naturally explained. Aristotle, apparently transferring to ruder times the freedom of communication and voluntary action of his own day, leaves it to be accounted for arbitrarily, by contiguity of residence. Others, not more successfully, bring in the fiction of adoption and artificial extension of homogeneous groups. Unfortunately these questions have been only recently investigated, and in the present state of our knowledge we must be satisfied with provisional results, leaving many matters of detail in uncertainty. The Greeks, when they first become known to us, are so far advanced as to recognise kinship both by males and by females; they have marriage by contract or purchase (see n. 271), though traces of the custom which was superseded by purchase, viz. wife-stealing, are particularly well preserved¹. What interval separated them from the matriarchal period? To what age belong the terms cited from Charondas and Epimenides, όμοσίπννοι and όμόκαπνοι or όμόκαπνοι? And which is the true form of the latter word? Something of more than usual importance is involved in this v. l. The όμογάλακτες (I. 2 § 6) were undoubtedly united by female kinship; i.e. all the members of a γένος (for όμογάλακτες = γεννήται, though Aristotle brings in the term to explain the village community) might be said to be nourished on the same mother's milk. On this analogy the members of a primitive family (οἶκος: I. 2 § 5) may have been known as 'sharers in one meal-sack and the smoke of one hearth.' This can be supported by two Gaelic words for family, one meaning 'those who eat together' (coedichc), and 'those who have a common residence' (teadhloch)². There is no mention of the blood tie, which is particularly emphasized in όμογάστριος and ἀδελφός, the latter word having superseded in Greek the earlier φράτωρ, as we see by the cognate languages. In Greek φράτωρ continues to designate a member of the older and ruder association³.

³ This explanation seems the most

Aristotle with his healthy respect for facts would doubtless have modified his own theory, if this line of inquiry had been suggested to him. He had a poor, though just, opinion of the lower varieties of mankind¹; he has to admit that γάμος, γαμικός fail to express his own conception of marriage (I. 3 § 2); and he speaks with contempt of the κοινωνία δούλης καὶ δούλου, the different species of which he can hardly have examined with attention. Here, therefore, as upon the question of slavery, while the advanced thinkers of Greece had caught an early glimpse of truth², he is content with a cautious conservative attitude, partly idealizing the actual relations of husband and wife and assuming the social development to have begun from a point where its course was well-nigh complete.]

EXCURSUS II.

HIPPODAMOS OF MILETUS: II. 7. 1.

Hippodamos, one of the most famous architects of his time, the first to introduce the fashion of laying out towns on a regular plan with broad straight streets, see IV(VII). II § 6 u. (850), was born at the earliest about 475 B.C. His oldest work appears to have been the construction, on the plan described, of the port town of Peiraeus, near the fortifications which had already been made by Themistocles. The market-place in the Peiraeus was called after him ἡ Ἰπποδάμειος ἀγορά; Xen. Hell. II. 4. II, Andoc. I. 45, Harpocr. p. 154. Next it was he, in all probability, who directed the building of Thurii 444 B.C., since only a long residence there would account for his being called a Thurian. Considerably later in 406 B.C. he built Rhodes, Strabo XIV. p. 654³. Through the outline of his ideal state there runs the same striving after mathematical regularity as in his town architecture, the persistent employment of a threefold division especially. It is quite possible, although by no means so certain as Hildenbrand and Oncken assume, that this was due to Pythagorean influence and that, at least in a certain fashion and to a certain extent, Hippodamos was an adherent satisfactory, though we might have expected some ruder mark of comradeship, such as tattooing (or better still a common totem) to have come down, rather than the σιπύη, from the times before the idea of blood relationship had arisen. "The apparent bond of fellowship between the members of such a group would be that they and theirs had always been companions in war or the chase—joint-tenants of the same cave or grove." Studies in Anc. Hist. p. 122.

Emp. IX. 54. Cp. Moschion Frag. inc. VI (9) apud Stob. Ecl. I. 9. 38 p. 240 ff. Epicurus pursued further the same line of inquiry: Lucretius V. 922 ff.

of the Pythagoreans. During his residence at Thurii he might easily have come into personal relations with the sect, as also with many other philosophers and sophists. At all events this is the easiest explanation of the fact that subsequently two works were ascribed to him, one on Happiness (περὶ εὐδαιμονίας) under the name of Hippodamos the Thurian, and one on Government (περὶ πολιτείας) under the name of Hippodamos the Pythagorean: we still possess extracts from these works in the Florilegium of Stobaeus. Both betray their spuriousness by a frequent use of Plato and Aristotle: and that the second is not the genuine work of Hippodamos which Aristotle criticized may be inferred from the fact that the contents of its fragments cannot be reconciled with Aristotle's statements.

The genuine ideal of a polity set forth by Hippodamos, Henkel (p. 164 f.) rightly places amongst the attempts to effect a compromise between democracy and oligarchy or aristocracy. 'It is a democratic feature to allow the whole body of citizens a share in public affairs' (§§ 2, 7, 9 nn. 253, 261, 262), 'to restrict legislation to the negative function of the protection of person and property' (§ 4 s. f. n. 255 b) 'and to attach especial importance to the improvement of the administration of justice' (§ 5). 'It is characteristic of aristocracy to adopt the vote instead of the lot as the normal mode of appointment to offices of state' (§ 7 n. 260 b), 'to subordinate the popular tribunals to a supreme court of appeal' (§ 4 n. 256), 'whereas the genuinely democratic popular tribunals exclude the very idea of an appeal, inasmuch as they are committees and representatives of the highest power in the state. This same tendency to mediate is perhaps discernible even in the regulation of professions. Democracy strives after an economic development of the nation, with which a prolonged service in the army is regarded as more and more incompatible: hence a growing inclination to hand over military service to foreign mercenaries. On the other hand, the warlike character of aristocracy which sees in military service a science and a lifework (Xenoph. Oecon. 4 § 3) leads its partizans to arrogate to themselves political rights to the exclusion of the producing classes; the productive labours of peace are considered irreconcilable with the fulfilment of political duties (Xen. De Rep. Lac. 13 § 5, Plut. Pel. 23). Hippodamos, then, combines the two opposite tendencies by granting political privileges to the labouring and producing classes, and by handing over the profession of arms to an independent military caste in the nation, which is in return to derive its sustenance from the public land and possess no private property.' It may be quite true that in the Greek democracies the state had more and more laid aside its paternal character and had applied itself to the improvement of positive law, in order to safeguard person and property on all sides against attack. Yet it was after all something novel for men like Hippodamos and the sophist Lycophron (III. 9. 8 n. 552) to give explicit and conscious utterance to this truth in theory; and, in place of the positive educational function which more or less Laconizing theorists like Xenophon (see Henkel p. 137 ff.) Plato and Aristotle assigned to the law, either to attribute to it a purely negative function as 'the mere surety of mutual rights' in Lycophron's phrase, or with Hippodamos to reject all laws whose aim is not solely the prevention or punishment of injuries to one's neighbour in honour, property, or life. We do not know for certain whether Hippodamos preceded Lycophron in the declaration of this opinion, but it is highly probable: still less do we know whether he was the first to put forward theoretically this new principle of legislation, which broke altogether with old Greek notions of law and justice; but the supposition that this is so derives support from the fact that he was the first to devise a theoretical scheme for a pattern state at all. If this is the case, then in spite of Henkel's dissent we must credit him, as Oncken does¹, with originating an important idea when he separated morality from the department of law, although after what has been said we cannot go so far as Oncken, who thinks that by these conceptions Hippodamos had left his age far behind. According to the old Greek notions, to which Socrates Xenophon Plato and Aristotle adhered, 'religious, ethical, and political duties are inseparably blended and united in law: nothing can be immoral that is not also illegal, and nothing can be morally right and yet at the same time illegal.' The later development of democracy had considerably loosened this unity; after which Hippodamos, it would seem, was the first to make its dissolution explicitly a fundamental principle, rendering impossible all such extravagances as those 'in virtue of which Aristotle goes the length of requiring the law to fix an annual budget of children' (II. 6 § 10 ff. cp. iii. 209 and 211). After its full and logical development by the Roman jurists, this principle passed over into the modern state, so that in the law 'we see no more than the barrier against disturbances of the social order, and leave to the forces of morality and religion the training of citizens in virtue.' The Greek political theories would be very imperfectly appreciated if, side by side with the conceptions of Plato and Aristotle, we did not recognize the full importance of such ideas as these, which had their origin in democracy. In such spheres of thought there arose that repudiation of slavery as the law of nature which in a certain respect is all the more deserving of admiration for being so premature. In such spheres too, it is true, there arose doctrines and ideas which were not merely instrumental in disintegrating the Greek state, but in their tendency destructive of all political structures; and these were especially employed by Sophists. In opposition to these ideas even we moderns, although we look at the state as a mighty engine for dispensing justice rather than for education, are obliged to range ourselves on the side of Plato and Aristotle in so far as we violate our principle by compulsory education and the universal obligation to military service. It is significant that even Isocrates, the admirer of an idealised ancient Athens, assumes this separation of law and morality: but just for this reason, since he too regards the state as exclusively an educational institution, he thinks but little of a written code of laws; see Henkel p. 149 ff. From the above point of view we see why

Hippodamos occupied himself so minutely with the improvement of the judicial system (§ 4 f.). And his political theory is essentially distinguished from that of Phaleas 'by its pervading ethical features, while in the scheme of Phaleas socialistic tendencies are prominent' (Henkel): see 7 § 1. SUSEM. (250)

NOTE ON THE CELTAE: II. 9. 7.

On the Kelts see also IV(vii). 2 § 10 n. (722) and 17 § 3 (953) and Nic. Eth. III. 7. 7, III 5 b 26 ff. where we are told the Kelts fear nothing, neither earthquakes nor waves of the sea. 'De Celtorum amoribus puerorum testatur etiam Athenaeus XIII. 603 A' (J. G. Schneider). 'See also Ammian. Marcell. xxxi. 9' (Fülleborn). Plato Laws I 637 D f. describes them as warlike but fond of drinking. It is known that at this time there were Kelts in Western Europe, whence came mercenaries in the service of Dionysios the tyrant who aided the Spartans against the Thebans 369 or 368 B.C., Xenoph. Hell. VII. 1. 20. There were others again in Hungary and Servia, who sent an embassy to Alexander the Great, when he had crossed the Danube, Arrian Anab. I. 4. 6 ff.: at a later time they repeatedly made incursions into Macedonia and at last sent out a band of immigrants to Asia Minor, which finally remained settled there, in the country called after them Galatia. Hence Aristotle Meteor. I. 13 § 18, 350 a 36 ff. makes the Danube rise in Keltic territory in the mountain Pyrene i.e. the Pyrenees. Still greater is the inaccuracy of Herodotos (II. 33) a hundred years earlier; he is only acquainted with Kelts in the extreme west of Europe, but nevertheless makes the Danube rise in their country, and near Pyrene which he turns into a town.

To all appearance Aristotle, like the earlier Greeks, does not as yet distinguish between the Germans and the Kelts. While he mentions the story that the Kelts are not at all afraid of the sea Nic. Eth. III. 7. 7, his pupil Eudemos III. I § 23, 1229 b 28 f., speaking more precisely, says that 'the Kelts go forth fully armed to meet the waves of the sea.' The same story was told by Ephoros Fr. 44 (see Nicol. Dam. Fr. 104, Aelian. V. H. XII. 23): Strabo (VII. p. 293) says he told it of the Cimbrians; but here, as Casaubon saw, there is a mistake on Strabo's part. Müllenhoff Deutsche Alterthums-kunde I. 231 ff. (Berlin 1870) rightly remarks that this story could only refer to the inhabitants of the coast of the North Sea: he thinks it quite conceivable that 'there, at times of inundation and high tides, when no escape was possible, the men put on their armour, not indeed actually to do battle with the invading waves, but in order that, in their best array, like heroes and warriors, they might meet the death which had not been granted them on the battle field. These stories must have been conveyed to the Greeks through Massalia, Sicily, and Italy.' The first Greek who made his way to the settlements of the Germans was Aristotle's contemporary Pytheas of Massalia: he at any rate recognized that they were different from the Kelts, but at the same time undoubtedly fell into the other mistake of taking them to be Scythians : see Müllenhoff op. c. 474—495. Although Müllenhoff's views in regard to the amber island described by Pytheas and the neighbouring coast of the Teutons, and their position in and on the coast of the North Sea about the mouths of the Eider, allow of considerable doubt, yet this much at any rate seems certain, that in Pliny N. H. xxxvii. 35 Pytheas Gutonibus Germaniae genti etc., the words Germaniae genti are an addition by Pliny himself, and the word 'Gutonibus' is wrong. Pytheas himself meant the same tribe 'Teutones' who are mentioned further on in the passage (proxumisque Teutonibus). SUSEM. (287)

EXCURSUS III.

THE EPHORS AND THE Κόσμοι.

οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἔφοροι τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχουσι δύναμιν τοῖς ἐν τῇ Κρήτῃ καλουμένοις κόσμοις, πλὴν οἱ μὲν ἔφοροι πέντε τὸν ἀριθμὸν οἱ δὲ κόσμοι δέκα εἰσὶν : II. IO. 6.

The resemblance between the Ephors and the Κόσμοι is certainly far less than that between the senators of the two states. For the Ephors are a democratic element; but the Κόσμοι, being elected out of certain noble families, are an aristocratic or oligarchic element, § 10. But the similarity lies in this, that the Κόσμοι too are changed year by year, unlike the senate which sits for life; that after they have resigned office their conduct is subjected to a scrutiny: and that in spite of the restricted election no pains are taken to exclude all from the office but men of especial merit. That the official powers of the two magistracies are (with the exception of the difference afterwards pointed out) the same, we must believe on Aristotle's authority: the only other difference he finds is in their respective numbers. Both indicate a contrast between the proper governmental authority, the activity of the executive or the administration on the one hand, and that of criminal jurisdiction and deliberation on the other: both magistracies share the idea that younger and more energetic force belongs to the former, while the latter is appropriate to the dignity of age. Lastly, while the power of both has grown at the expense of the enfeebled monarchy, only the Κόσμοι have entirely absorbed it, so that the supreme command in war is transferred from the kings to them, whereas the Ephors were content to direct all military operations from home or else to superintend the execution of everything by means of two of their number who were present in the camp: see n. 340 on 9 § 30 (Trieber). Compare n. (343) on 9 § 33. Yet after all there remains a difference which is by no means unimportant, viz. that the Ephors never come forward as generals or superior officers; all they do is to observe the commanders in the field. By the very meaning of the terms themselves the ἐφοροι are 'overseers', the κόσμοι are 'orderers' (Oncken). Ephoros (Strabo p. 481 f.) also maintains the similarity of the functions of the two, although the offices have different titles: but he diverges from Aristotle in arguing from the similarity between the senators in the two states to that between the Ephors and Κόσμοι. It may be that his judgment on the Cretan constitution is that of romantic, uncritical admiration and that Aristotle's is far less favourable and severely critical: still that does not justify us in inferring with Oncken (II. 401) that Aristotle could not have derived his facts, for the most part, from Ephoros. Indeed the conclusion that he did, receives decided support from the great similarity, which even Oncken (II. 405) points out, between the account of Crete by Ephoros and that in the so-called Πολιτεΐαι which we have under the name of Heracleides¹ of Pontos: for probably these are for the most part excerpts from Aristotle's Πολιτεΐαι, as Schneidewin who edited them has shown; and in this instance from his Cretan Polity. It is less likely however that he could have taken from Ephoros the facts which stand in strong opposition to the latter's verdict of approval, like most of those in §§ 12—14. SUSEM. (360)

φόρων οὓς φέρουσιν οἱ περίοικοι: II. 10. 8.

It is in itself surprising that Aristotle does not compare the Cretan περίοικοι (see n. 355) with the Spartan περίοικοι, but rather with the Helots (§ 5, cp. n. 357); and this becomes still more strange when we learn from two later writers on Crete, Sosikrates and Dosiadas (Frag. 6. 2), as quoted in Athenaeus VI. 263 E f., that there were three dependent classes of the Cretan population, viz. (1) the slaves or serfs belonging to the state, the Mnoïtai, (2) those belonging to private individuals, the Aphamiotai, and (3) the περίοικοι, with the additional information about these last that the Cretans called them "subjects²." Further, in a skolion quoted in Athen. XV. 695 F (in Bergk Poet. lyr. Gr. no. 28 p. 1294), the Cretan poet Hybrias boasts that the Mnoïtai call him their lord³. Kallistratos, the disciple of Aristophanes of Byzantium, as quoted in Athen. VI. 263 E, describes the Aphamiotai as

'the slaves or serfs on the estates, of native birth but enslaved in war, who are also called Clarotae'¹: and earlier still Ephoros (Frag. 32 a, in Athen. vi. 263 F) says, not quite correctly, that the Cretans called their slaves Clarotae². It may be conjectured that the estates in the private possession of the Dorian masters were called ἀφαμίαι, as well as κλᾶροι, which is the ordinary term for allotments of land: see Schömann Antiquities p. 298 Eng. tr. Accordingly we should expect Aristotle to compare with the Spartan Helots either (α) both the clarotae and μνοῖται; or (β) the μνοῖται, the villeins who tilled the state land or public domain; or lastly, if this seemed inappropriate because at Sparta there was no public domain, (γ) the clarotae alone, as being the serfs on private estates. And a closer investigation unquestionably shows that this last is what he has actually done. He has used the term περίοικοι in a somewhat different sense from Sosikrates, not for the inhabitants of dependent Cretan towns liable to pay tribute, but for the clarotae. It could not possibly be said of the former that they tilled the land of the Cretans: nor could Aristotle possibly have believed (§ 8) that the cost of the mess was defrayed by the state out of the public domain and the tributes of their subjects (which is the meaning that the words φόρων οὓς φέρουσιν οἱ περίοικοι would then have) but that private individuals contributed nothing to them from their own estates. Moreover, a passage of Dosiadas (Fr. 1) in Athen. iv 143 A, which has unfortunately been rendered obscure by the inaccuracy of the epitomist and has probably come down to us in a corrupt text, unquestionably attests this fact at least, that at Lyktos every citizen was bound to contribute the tenth part of the produce of his estate towards the mess-table to which he belonged. The remainder of the passage³ I interpret to mean that out of its own revenues the state assigned a fixed portion to every family of citizens and accordingly distributed these its contributions amongst the various mess-associations; and lastly, we read, each slave had to pay a poll-tax of an Aeginetan stater. Putting on one side this last point (see n. 366 on § 8 extr.), Aristotle's account in the main agrees with this, as soon as we assume him to mean by his περίοικοι the clarotae. Only his text too, as it has come down to us, is evidently not sound. For if φόροι οὓς φέρουσιν οἱ περίοικοι can only mean that part of the produce of the estates cultivated by the clarotae which they pay to their lords as rent in kind, it is unreasonable to suppose that the citizens should have been obliged to pay away the full rent, from which they had to provide all other necessities of life, to the state in order to defray the cost of the mess, the worship of the gods, and the public burdens. Dosiadas says that only a tenth part went towards the

EXCURSUS IV.

THE CONSTITUTION OF CARTHAGE: II. II §§ 3—8.

τὰ συσσίτια τῶν ἑταιριῶν.

Movers tries to show that the class of full citizens at Carthage—patricians, nobility, optimates—was divided into three tribes and thirty gentes, the former answering to the Greek φυλαὶ and the three ancient Roman tribus, the latter to the Greek φρατρίαι and the 30 Roman curiæ (see below on γερονσία, and compare III. 2 § 3, 9 § 13). According to him it is these latter divisions or ‘gentes’ that are here called ἑταιρίαι, ‘mess-associations’.

This explanation has the great advantage of presenting a real similarity with the φιδύτια in the Spartan state, although it is altogether a false opinion of Movers that the ὠβαί, the sub-divisions of the Spartan tribes (see Schömann Antiquities of Greece I. p. 211, p. 231 Eng. trans.), were called συσσίτια: we are unable to suppose the existence of any systematic organization of the separate Spartan mess-tables ‘in accordance with tribal divisions, or districts and places of residence’ (ib. p. 271 E. tr.), and probably the same is true of the ἀνδρεία in Crete. It might indeed have been the case, as Movers himself observes, that the dinners of the Carthaginian associations were not held every day; yet they must have taken place frequently and at fixed times and were attended by all the members of each association, out of whose common property the costs were undoubtedly defrayed. ‘In the ancient world feasts which were held at stated times by whole families or by political corporations acquired a politico-religious character and are to be connected with the sacrificial feasts celebrated by every family at stated times which are mentioned even in early Jewish history (1 Sam. c. 20. 6, 29: c. 9. 12, 23: 1 Kings 1. 9). In this respect we shall most suitably compare the συσσίτια of the Carthaginian associations with the banquets likewise held on certain festal occasions by the curiales in their places of assembly or curiæ.’ It is also to be remembered that ἑταιρία was actually the name in Crete for any division of the citizens who dined together at the same table: at least Dosiadas specially used the term in reference to the Lyctians, διήρηνται δ’ οἱ πολῖται πάντες καθ’ ἑταιρίας, καλοῦσι δὲ ταύτας ἀνδρεία (Frag. 1 in Athenaeus IV. 143 B). Mommsen too takes the Carthaginian clubs to have been at least public corporations, though not composed of the privileged citizens; ‘probably guilds under oligarchical management’ (II. p. 17 Eng. tr.). But the συσσίτια at Sparta, with which Aristotle compares them, consisted of none but full citizens.

Kluge, Heeren, and most of the other commentators prefer to understand by this phrase the banquets of the political party-clubs, since such oligarchical clubs were certainly called ἑταιρίαι in Greece (cp. n. 157). If we were obliged to share this view, Aristotle, who is professedly comparing the public institutions of the two states, would be convicted of the huge mistake of having compared a Spartan public institution with the arrangements of merely private associations at Carthage, two things moreover in which one does not at all see how there can be any similarity.

The circuli and convivia at Carthage are further mentioned in Livy XXXIV. 61 § 5; their 'meetings' (σύνοδοι) also in Theodoros Metochita Hypomn. c. 104 § 11 (cited by Kluge p. 215): but from neither passage can more exact information about them be obtained. SUSEM. (378)

ἡ τῶν ἑκατὸν καὶ τεττάρων ἀρχή.

Kluge and Heeren incorrectly hold that this is a different board from that of 'The Hundred' mentioned § 7. The latter however is only the shorter and less exact form: or possibly, as Movers conjectures, p. 552, the number of members proper was really only a hundred (he conjectures more precisely, 10 from the larger, 90 from the smaller senate: but is this right?): to these were added the highest magistrates, the two Shofetes (see below βασιλεῖς) and perhaps the two high-priests. It is not true that Aristotle's statements about the Hundred in any way oblige us to distinguish them from the Hundred and Four: if they were elected by the Boards of Five, why should this exclude the latter from taking account of personal merit? Now we learn from Justin XIX. 2 that the Hundred was not an original element of the Carthaginian constitution, but was introduced as a protection against the dynastic government of a few families or the usurpation by a single family of despotic power, about 450 B.C., when the house of Mago, which had laid the foundations of the Carthaginian power and had exclusively filled the office of general for three generations, had become so overbearing as to threaten the liberty of the state. For this reason, as Justin tells us, a hundred judges were chosen out of the number of the Senators, to demand an account of their proceedings from the generals on their return home, in order that the latter, thus possessed with a wholesome fear, might in their command abroad keep before their eyes the laws and the tribunals awaiting them at home: dein cum familia tanta imperatorum gravis liberae civitati esset omniaque ipsi agerent simul et iudicarent, centum ex numero senatorum iudices deliguntur, qui reversis a bello ducibus rationem rerum gestarum exigerent, ut hoc metu ita in bello imperia cogitarent, ut domi iudicia legesque respicerent. Thus it was, as Heeren says, a high political tribunal exercising powers of police for the maintenance of the existing constitution, which however from the nature of the case soon degenerated into espionage and tyranny: hence he in every respect rightly compares it with the Council of Ten at Venice, and the political inquisition connected with it. Before long the power of the Hundred rose above that of the senate, so that Aristotle § 7 calls it the highest magistracy of all, since it summoned not only the generals 'but beyond doubt the Shofetes [kings] and Gerusiasts [senators] also, when circumstances required, on resigning their office to give an account of their stewardship, and even, if they thought fit, inflicted capital punishment, often with the most reckless cruelty,' comp. Diod. XX. 10. 3: since moreover as a general rule, 'in this as in every instance where administrative functionaries are subjected to the control of another body, the reality of power was transferred from the controlled to the controlling authority; and no doubt the latter came to interfere in all matters of administration,' so that 'the fear of the board of supervision at home, which regularly meted out its award according to success, hampered the Carthaginian statesman and general in council and action,' Mommsen II p. 17 Eng. tr. But there is no authority for Mommsen's assertion (ibid.) that the Senate submitted important despatches first to the Hundred and then to the people; and Heeren is decidedly wrong in thinking that generally the most important state affairs were first discussed in this committee (so to speak) of the larger senate¹: see below γερονσία and n. (387) on § 5. During the second Punic war and the period immediately following, Livy (XXXIII. 46) even goes so far as to describe these 'judges' as, properly speaking, the supreme body in the state, whose arbitrary power respected neither the laws nor the magistrates and extended to the property the reputation and the lives of all, while its members were so closely united that whoever offended one had to face the hostility of all. Thus the state treasurer (quaestor) 195 B.C., because he would be elected to this board after the expiration of his term of office, ventured in a spirit of defiance to disregard the summons of Hannibal who was then Shofete and probably invested with extraordinary powers (praetor, cp. Justin XXXI. 2. 6, tum temporis consulem: see below). This induced Hannibal on his side to appeal to the popular assembly and to carry a law, that these 'judges' instead of serving for life, as formerly, should only be elected for a year, and that no one should be 'judge' two years in succession: iudicum ordo Carthagine ea tempestate dominabatur, eo maxime, quod idem perpetui iudices erant. res fama vitaeque omnium in illorum potestate erat. qui unum eius ordinis obfendisset, omnis adversos habebat, nec accusator apud infensos iudices deorat. horum in tam impotenti regno...praetor factus Hannibal vocari ad se quaestorem iussit. quaestor id pro nihilo habuit, nam...quia ex quaestura in iudices, potentissimum ordinem, referebatur, iam pro futuris mox opibus animos gerebat. enimvero indignum id ratus Hannibal viatorem ad prendendum quaestorem misit subductumque in contionem non ipsum magis quam ordinem iudicum, prae quorum superbia atque opibus nec leges quicquam esset neque magistratus, accusavit. et ut secundis auribus accipi orationem animadvertit et infimorum quoque libertati gravem esse superbiam

¹ In Diod. XIV. 47. 2 the declaration of war which the elder Dionysius sent to the smaller senate, was not read as Kluge states, p. 103, first there, then in the larger senate, and then in the popular assembly; nor, as Mommsen seems to suppose, first in the Council of the Hundred and Four and then in the popular assembly. On the contrary, the words are: ἡς ἀναγνώσθεις ἐν τε τῇ συγκλήτῳ καὶ μετὰ ταύτ' ἐν τῇ δῆμῳ, and σύγκλητος is therefore the same as γερονσία, the smaller senate of thirty (see below), just as the Roman senate is frequently called σύγκλητος by Polybios. Consequently the smaller council first deliberated upon the document, and then laid it before the popular assembly. As to Polybios' general usage (when he is speaking more exactly) of γερονσία for the small council and σύγκλητος for the Great Council of Carthage, see below (n. 382). But the council of the Hundred and Four is never called σύγκλητος.

eorum, legem extemplo promulgavit pertulitque, in singulos annos iudices legerentur, neve quis biennium continuum iudex esset. After all this, the points of resemblance between this board and the Spartan ephors are so great that it would be quite inexplicable if, notwithstanding, Aristotle had compared another Carthaginian magistracy with the ephoralty. The only remaining point which could render another comparison possible would be the civil jurisdiction of the Ephors (9 § 23 n. 325): and as such civil judges the Hundred and Four are regarded by Kluge and Heeren, who insist that they should be distinguished from the Hundred and existed before them. But their own admission, that there was no further similarity between the Hundred and Four and the Ephors, is sufficient to refute their hypothesis. To make matters superfluously clear, the Ephors are called the highest office in the state (μεγίστη ἀρχή, 9 § 21) in precisely the same words as are used of the Hundred, 11 § 7 (comp. also 9 § 19 ἡ γὰρ ἀρχή κυρία τῶν μεγίστων αὐτοῖς ἐστί). In particular what is said of the Ephors, 9 § 26, that they control to some extent all other magistrates (δόξειε δ' αὖν ἡ τῶν ἐφόρων ἀρχὴ πᾶσας εὐθύ- νειν τὰς ἀρχάς), is exactly applicable, as we have seen above, to the Hundred. Even the remark (9 § 20) that in order to find support and protection against the Ephors, the kings themselves had been forced to flatter the people, reminds us forcibly of Hannibal's procedure on the above occasion, when he had recourse to the popular assembly. In Aristotle's time, moreover, the members were not as yet chosen for life, since according to his statement the Boards of Five exercised their powers longer than any other officials: thus we should be obliged to assume that the nomination for life was of later introduction. But even Livy's account allows of no other interpretation than that the quaestor had previously belonged to the Hundred and Four and after resigning his office again entered this body or at least (see below) had the right to enter it: and, as the number of members was strictly limited, this can only be reconciled with their holding office for life by the assumption that in such cases a substitute was appointed for the intervening time. Probably then Livy's statement simply means, as Mommsen assumes, that for the most part the same individuals were always on this board, because each retiring member could be immediately re-elected, and that Hannibal's reform only provided that no member of this Council of the Hundred could be elected to hold office for two consecutive years. SUSEM. (379).

Greek and Roman writers as a rule call these officers 'kings' and seldom by their proper official title shofetes (suffetes), i.e. Judges, the title borne by the heads of the Israelites before the establishment of the monarchy. That there were two shofetes is expressly attested by Cornelius Nepos alone (Hannib. 7. 4), but it may be inferred from the comparison with the consuls at Rome (Livy XXX. 7. 5, Festus p. 309 b 29, Orosius v. 11, Nep. l. c., cp. Justin XXXI. 2. 6): and Polybios also VI. 51. 2 speaks at least more vaguely of kings at Carthage in the plural, as does Livy of shofetes at Gades

(xxxviii. 37. 2), remarking that this is the highest office amongst all the Phoenicians. All the more apposite is the comparison made with the dual kingship at Sparta. But that these two Shofetes were elected from different families, is a statement which Movers through a strange mistake attributes to Aristotle, who only says, that while at Sparta the royal dignity was hereditary in the same family, that of the Heracleidae, which moreover was not distinguished by any special excellence above all the other Spartan families, the Shofetes at Carthage could be taken from any of the gentes of the citizens with full civic rights. Comp. 9 § 30 n. (339). Further, Movers thinks that the consistent mention in historical narratives of only one Carthaginian king, even in notices of the annual election 'of a king' (Zonaras Ann. VIII. 8) in ancient writers must be explained from the fact that the second Shofete was to a certain extent subordinate to the first and appointed more to act as a check upon him, and for that reason mostly elected out of another, and preferably a hostile, family: an opinion which may indeed be correct but cannot actually be proved, though this kind of policy would be in further accord with the Spartan belief that discord between the two kings was advantageous for the state (9 § 30) and was largely put into practice at Carthage on other occasions also (Diod. XX. 10. 1 n. 1597; comp. however on the other side Diod. XIII. 80. 2)¹. It is readily intelligible that only one of the two Shofetes conducted the business referred to in the above historical narratives; besides, it frequently happened that one of them was absent, because employed in the service of the state abroad². It is indeed very surprising that Aristotle should designate the command in war as a distinguishing prerogative of the Spartan kings and of the ancient kings in Crete (10 § 6)—see the parallel passages given in n. (343) on 9 § 33—while at the same time expressly noting that the generals at Carthage were distinct from the kings (11 § 9, § 12), so that here, generally speaking, civil and military powers were dissevered. However it was not infrequent, especially as the accumulation of several offices in the same hands was customary (§ 13), for one of the two Shofetes to be invested with the generalship at the same time; but then the supreme command had to be conferred upon him expressly by the senate (Justin XXII. 7. 7, Diod. XIII. 43. 5, XIV. 54. 5³, XV. 15. 2, XX. 29. 2, cp. 33. 2, Polyæn. I. 27. 2). The office of Shofete was held by the celebrated Hanno who at the command of the state undertook a voyage, with 60 ships and 30,000 persons of both sexes, to the west coast of Africa to found settlements of Liby-phoenicians, and wrote a narrative of this voyage which we

² Only the incorrect statement of Zonares l.c. remains without justification on this view: but in fact neither is it justified upon the hypothesis of Movers.

³ Comp. Oros. IV. 6. The words κατὰ νόμον added to the title of King in these passages of Diodoros (κατὰ νόμους τότε βασιλεύοντα and βασιλέα κατὰ νόμον) have been wholly misunderstood by Kluge p. 92, and Heeren p. 136. They denote an elected king as distinguished from an hereditary king βασιλεὺς κατὰ γένος, as is clear from pseudo-Plato in Diog. Laert. III. 82 f. τῆς δὲ βασιλείας ἣ μὲν κατὰ νόμον, ἣ δὲ κατὰ γένος ἐστίν. ἣ μὲν οὖν ἐν Καρχηδόνι, κατὰ νόμον· πολιτικὴ γάρ ἐστιν. ἣ δὲ ἐν Λακεδαίμονι καὶ Μακεδονίᾳ, κατὰ γένος.

still possess in a Greek translation. The points of resemblance to the Spartan kings were as follows: (1) the Carthaginian Shofetes may be assumed to have had like the kings (III. 14. 3) a sort of priestly office: (2) in any case they had, as their title denotes, a kind of supreme judicial office; although after the appointment of the council of the Hundred and Four,—whose members were also called “judges” or shofetes (see above, also Cato as cited by Festus s.v. mansuetus), but no doubt, with some distinguishing addition,—this would be mainly restricted to the duty of presiding at that board (which though not expressly attested can hardly be doubtful) and in the full session of the ordinary courts (see below): further, (3) they held meetings of the senate and the popular assembly, and one of them directed the business of these meetings (Polyb. III. 33. 3, Livy XXX. 7. 5, 46. 5 f.). Mommsen asserts that the Roman writers also called the kings praetors: but without laying stress on the fact that Nepos l.c. expressly distinguishes the Praetor at Carthage from the King in a passage which is, it is true, in the last degree confused¹, we find that the term praetor is only used by Livy and Nepos in reference to the appointment of Hannibal B.C. 195 and thus in any case denotes, as Heeren and Kluge assume, the devolution of extraordinary official powers, although only in combination with the dignity of shofete (Justin XXXI. 2. 6 tum temporis consulem, Zonar. IX. 14 s.f. τὴν μεγίστην τῶν Καρχηδονίων ἀρχήν). According to Cicero’s statement, De Rep. II. 23. 42, if indeed this is really what he means to say, one could easily suppose with Heeren that the shofetes were elected for life: but this is disproved by what Aristotle says of the Boards of Five (§7)²; and not merely Zonaras VIII. 8, as was already said, but Nepos also l.c. definitely states that the election was made annually, although it is very surprising that Aristotle has not emphasized such a pronounced deviation from the Spartan kingship. SUSEM. (381).

Mommsen says (II. p. 15 Eng. tr.), it is doubtful whether along with the senate there existed a larger one, as Heeren and others assume. But at any rate Livy XXX. 16. 3 says unambiguously that thirty leading senators formed a smaller council which had the real direction of the senate: triginta seniorum principes, id erat sanctius apud illos concilium maximaque ad ipsum senatum regendum vis. It may be conjectured that one of these thirty was chosen from each of the thirty Carthaginian families (see above). And as Mommsen himself actually limits the number to thirty on the authority of this very passage, there must have existed another larger senate, because the Hundred were elected out of the number of the senators (see above). Such a larger council is usually called σύγκλητος, even by Aristotle III. I. 10 (cp. n. 442), and although the terms γερουσία, σύγκλητος, and συνέ-

fore unnecessary is shown, apart from all other reasons, by the very next words: ut enim Romae Consules sic Carthagine quotannis annui bini reges creabantur.

δριον are indifferently used with the same meaning for even the smaller senate at Carthage¹, yet Polybios expressly distinguishes the smaller and the larger senate by the terms γερουσία and σύγκλητος X. 18. 1 δύο μὲν...τῶν ἐκ τῆς γερουσίας, πέντε καὶ δέκα τῶν ἐκ τῆς συγκλήτου and XXXVI. 2. 6 τριακοσίους ὁμήρους...τοὺς υἱοὺς τῶν ἐκ τῆς συγκλήτου καὶ τῆς γερουσίας. Possibly from the last passage we may infer with Movers that both senates together consisted of 300 members, so that the 30 gentes were again divided into 300 families, the heads of which—if this supposition is correct—were life members of the full senate, and presumably elected from amongst themselves (and probably only for a year) the smaller senate and the shofetes, unless we prefer to assume with Mommsen that the popular assembly had the right to elect the members of both senates and the shofetes out of the privileged gentes (see below). At any rate if we except this point, Mommsen is right in observing that the larger senate was not of much importance; and accordingly Aristotle evidently does not notice it, but in his comparison with Sparta is thinking of the smaller senate, especially as the number of members either tallied exactly, if we follow Mommsen in the assumption (which is however wholly unsupported) that the two shofetes were included in the thirty as the two kings were at Sparta²; or at any rate corresponded approximately, supposing the shofetes to have been added to this number. ‘It was this senate of Thirty which mainly transacted the business of the state, making for instance the preliminary arrangements for war, directing levies and enlistments, nominating the general³ and assigning to him a certain number of Gerusiasts [senators] from whom’⁴ probably, see Polyb. I. 21. 6, ‘the subordinate commanders were taken; to it despatches were addressed’ (Mommsen II. p. 15 E. tr.), ‘to it reports were made through the shofetes, and it received foreign ambassadors’ (Heeren). If it agreed with the shofetes, see II § 5, n. (387), it undoubtedly possessed full legislative powers and even the power to decide upon war and peace (n. 387), although in this respect it might seem advisable often, if not in most cases, further to lay the question before the popular assembly. Lastly, it certainly had the control of the financial administration. Over and above the common baths for the citizens there were at Carthage special baths for the senators⁵ (Valer. Max. IX. 5. 4 ext.

¹ As in the passages which Kluge pp. 103, 105 f. has misunderstood, viz. Diod. XIV. 47. 2 (see p. 342 n. 1) and XX. 59. 1 μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα τῆς γερουσίας ἐν Καρχηδόνι βουλευσαμένης περὶ τοῦ πολέμου [καλῶς] ἔδοξε τοῖς συνέδροις τρία στρατόπεδα... ἐκπέμψαι. The σύνεδροι are the members of the γερουσία itself: the transaction takes place in the γερουσία alone and not, as Kluge thinks, first in the smaller senate and then in the two senates combined. The word συνέδριον is not found at all in the sense of such a full sitting of the two senates, as he asserts; when applied to Carthage it everywhere denotes the smaller senate only.

² Duncker (Hist. of Antiquity II. p. 185, ed. 4, 1875) formerly agreed with Mommsen. But in the English translation of Duncker, Vol. II. p. 275 (which follows the 5th German edition), this assumption is withdrawn and 30 is given as the number of senators exclusive of the kings.

⁵ For the senators Mommsen (II. p. 16, E. tr.) arbitrarily substitutes the judges, namely the Hundred and Four, although it may certainly be quite true insolentiae vero inter Karthaginiensem et Campanum senatum quasi aemulatio fuit : ille enim separato a plebe balineo lavabatur ; cp. Juven. v. 90 propter quod Romae cum Bocchare nemo lavatur, also Movers p. 501 n. 57). The deputies of the senate (σύνεδροι) with the army formed part of the general's council of war, Polyb. III. 71. 5 ; and in the oath ratifying the treaty concluded with Philip, next to 'Hannibal the general' and his three lieutenant-generals mentioned by name, all the senators in his camp and all the Carthaginians serving under him are introduced without mention of their names, καὶ πάντες οἱ γερουσιασταὶ Καρχηδονίων μετ' αὐτοῦ καὶ πάντες Καρχηδόνοι οἱ στρατευόμενοι μετ' αὐτοῦ, Polyb. VII. 9 § 1, § 4. Movers, p. 498, prefers to understand members of the smaller council by the three former names, and only members of the larger council by the γερουσιασταί ; but this title is not suitable for the latter, nor can it be shown to have been given to them anywhere else. It is perfectly arbitrary for Movers to assume (p. 522 n. 308) that these plenipotentiaries of the senate also belonged to the Hundred. These deputies strongly remind us of the ephors sent into the field along with the Spartan king (cp. nn. 340, 360). SUSEM. (382)

ὁ δῆμος.

'The kings and the senate, if both are agreed, have it wholly in their own power to bring any given question before the people or not : if however they are not agreed, the popular assembly must decide the question. But whatever is submitted to the assembly, the people are not merely allowed to listen to the resolves of the government, but have the supreme decision, and any citizen who likes may oppose the propositions submitted, which is not allowed under the other constitutions,' at Sparta and in Crete : §§ 5, 6.

Kluge was mistaken in supposing the passage to mean that unless the whole body of the senators was unanimous, a question had to be brought before the popular assembly ; that this was not the case may be seen from Livy XXI. c. 3 f., c. 9 § 3—II § 2, XXIII. c. 12 ff. However the senate and the shofetes might often find it advisable, as was remarked above (n. 382), to bring important and critical matters before the people of their own free will. Gradually this would become more and more frequent, so that at the time of the second Punic war, according to Polyb. VI. 51. 6, the popular assembly at Carthage already had the greatest influence on deliberations, whilst the senate held this position at Rome (τὴν πλείστην δύναμιν ἐν τοῖς διαβουλίαις παρὰ μὲν Καρχηδονίοις ὁ δῆμος ἤδη μετειλήφει, παρὰ δὲ Ῥωμαίοις ἀκμὴν εἶχεν ἢ σύγκλητος). And yet even this very war was decreed by the shofetes and the senate alone, Polyb. III. 33, Livy XXI. 18. SUSEM. (387)

that the latter are also called "senators" being elected, as a matter of fact, from by the Greek and Roman writers, as the (smaller and larger) senate.

This is all we know of these Boards of Five ; we are therefore reduced to uncertain conjectures respecting them. But above all nothing should be read into this passage which is not contained in it. Now it says that there was not merely one such corporation, as Movers makes out (p. 499 f. n. 53), but a number of boards : it does not say, as Kluge and others state, that the members of these boards afterwards entered the council of the Hundred, but only that they elected that council : nor does it say that before entering upon office they had invariably filled another office, and after the expiry of their term again filled such an office, but on the contrary that they discharged the duties of the same office as members elect beforehand and as members retired for some time afterwards, probably in the capacity of assistants, substitutes, or assessors.

Further Heeren has shown that the government of the provinces did not belong to this office, as Kluge assumed : but Kluge and Heeren agree in thinking that the total number of the officers requisite for the special administration of Carthage itself were included in them : consequently the state-treasurer (see above p. 342), who is mentioned along with the shofetes at Gades and therefore as one of the highest officers of state (Livy XXVIII. 37. 2), and the censor (praefectus morum : Nep. Hamilc. 3. 2) would have belonged to them. And then certainly by principibus quibusdam et magistratibus mentioned by Livy in the course of his narrative of the events of B.C. 195 (cited above p. 342),—vectigalia publica partim negligentia dilabebantur partim praedae ac divisui principibus quibusdam et magistratibus erant, XXXIII. 46. 8—we should understand with Movers the magnates of Carthage employed upon the Boards of Five.

But there is at least as much probability in another conjecture, to which we are led by the fact that the Boards of Five elect the Hundred. According to Aristotle's own statement (II § 7 s. f., III. I § 11 cp. nn. 391, 444) there was more than one board of judges at Carthage, and thus far there is some truth in Heeren's and Kluge's mistaken severance of the Hundred and Four from the Hundred (see above, p. 341). The Hundred was one such board and it is easy to conjecture that the Boards of Five constituted the others ; that they had exercised high political jurisdiction before the introduction of the Hundred for the loss of which they were compensated by being at least allowed to elect the members of the new court of justice, while they retained the ordinary criminal, as well as the entire civil, jurisdiction, its different branches being assigned to different committees each of five men, while cases of special importance were no doubt definitively decided in full session under the presidency of one of the two shofetes as chief justice. This conjecture further receives considerable support from the fact that it is only these Boards of Five that are said to have discharged their duties without pay and not to have been chosen by lot, which is not easily intelligible except as in contradistinction to the popular courts in democratic states. Also immediately after (I) the Boards of Five and (II) the Council of the Hundred Aristotle goes on to treat of the exclusive administration of justice by boards appointed expressly for this purpose; and this fact favours the supposition that these boards were simply and solely the two already mentioned together with the two shofetes or chief judges. Moreover in their election of the Hundred and Four the Boards of Five were by no means entirely free, but obliged at least in part to select from certain officials of the previous year: at any rate it appears to follow from Livy's account (see above n. 379), that the state treasurer had a right to be elected to the Hundred and Four in the following year, and the Boards of Five could only pass him over for very special reasons. But they evidently could not elect members of their own body to the Hundred and Four, as would else have happened frequently; and the reason for the prohibition may perhaps have been that in the following year they had to continue to discharge their own official duties, as described above: unless we are bound to suppose, that here too the principle of concentrating various offices upon one person (§ 13) was applicable. SUSEM. (390)

οἱ στρατηγοί.

The powers of the Carthaginian generals must have been very considerable and in purely military matters perhaps unlimited, although they were also in the habit of consulting the council of war (see above n. 382). But state affairs were undoubtedly managed by the general in conjunction with the plenipotentiaries of the Senate, and alliances were likewise concluded (as above n. 382) by him in the name of the Senate (Heeren). Isocrates (III. 24) says that the Lacedaemonians and the Carthaginians had an oligarchical government at home but a monarchical government in the field: which means of course, that the generals, not the Carthaginian 'kings', exercised such a government: whereas Movers (p. 540) takes it to mean that 'the Shofetes were not held to be kings, unless they were also generals.' The Carthaginian generals are moreover called dictators by the Romans, Justin XIX. 1. 7¹, Cato cited in Gellius X. 24. 7, Frontin. Strateg. II. 1; as well as that one of the generals who discharged his duties in Carthage itself as director of the entire military administration, or war minister, Livy XXIII. 13. 8². The fact that state appointments at Carthage, in particular the offices of shofete and general, could be bought, which is likewise attested by Polyb. VI. 56. 4, seems to point to a right of election or confirmation by the popular assembly: yet possibly the smaller or the larger senate may not have been inaccessible to bribery, in spite of the fact that, in order to guard against it, only the richest citizens were, as a rule, elected into the smaller senate (§ 4). This much seems certain, that the election of the generals rested with the smaller

¹ There is no ground for assuming with Kluge, p. 92 f., that the term dictator was especially applied to those who were at once shofetes and generals, or that the Hasdrubal in question filled both offices in conjunction eleven times.

² At least I take this to be the most probable view.

senate: see Diod. XIII. 43. 5 (κατέστησαν; cp. above n. 381), XX. 10. 1 (ἡ γερονσία...στρατηγούς...ἀπέδειξε). But it may be conjectured that the election required to be confirmed by the popular assembly. At least when Hannibal was elected by the army the Senate was not satisfied with an approval of the act on its own part, but invited the popular assembly to confirm it, Polyb. III. 13. 4; and such a confirmation may have been requisite for the appointment of the senators and shofetes, in case it did not entirely rest with the popular assembly to elect them (see above n. 382). EXCURSUS V.

THE SOLONIAN CONSTITUTION: II. 12, 3.

ἔοικε δὲ Σόλων...τὸν δῆμον καταστήσαι, τὰ δικαστήρια ποιήσας ἐκ πάντων.

The question whether in reality there is no sufficient ground for doubting this statement, as Schömann tries to show¹, must in this place be left undecided. Here we are only concerned with the meaning of the words and the question whether they are really by Aristotle. In the first place Schömann has sufficiently refuted the monstrous construction which Em. Müller and Oncken² have put upon the singular form τὸ δικαστήριον here twice used, as if it did not mean the Heliaea, but the whole community assembled to demand an account of their stewardship from the retiring officials—‘a general assembly of the people before which the judicial authorities were brought to render an account of their office, appeals were entered against their decisions, and these decisions cancelled confirmed or amended at pleasure.’ It is another matter when Fränkel The Attic δικαστήρια p. 63 f. infers from III. 11. 8 that the genuine Aristotle did not intend to ascribe the establishment of the tribunal of the Heliaea to Solon, but regarded the matter essentially in the same light as Fränkel himself, who was partially anticipated by Em. Müller and Oncken. His view is that in certain cases Solon gave the assembled community the right of rejecting the sentence pronounced by their magistrates; that he compelled the magistrates, when their commission expired, to render an account of it publicly to the people in their assembly, where it was open to the people to bring a charge against them which the Areopagus had to decide. Now this hypothesis respecting Solon’s legislation may be correct or not; but at any rate let the critics take upon themselves the responsibility for it, and leave Aristotle out of the question. Even he was by no means infallible in matters relating to Athenian constitutional history. Had Fränkel not severed the passage in B. III. from its context, he would have seen that there Aristotle is saying

¹ This exposition Fränkel has not quite fairly passed over.

tions over again. Cp. n. (409). I do not defend everything which Schömann has stated, as is clear from the sequel.

precisely the same thing as here, only in fewer words. There he says that the people must be suffered to participate in the deliberative (or decreeing) and the judicial functions, and these only; and therefore Solon rightly ordained that it should merely elect officers of state and require them to render an account¹. Here he says that Solon allowed the people these two most indispensable rights and accordingly instituted tribunals taken from the whole people with jurisdiction over all matters without exception. If then, as Fränkel thinks, it is really a contradiction to say both in one breath, at least the mistake has been committed not merely by the assumed interpolator, but by the genuine Aristotle. Furthermore, if Fränkel's explanation be consistently applied to VI(IV), 14 § 3, § 6, § 10 (see nn. 1319, 1325, 1332) it must lead to this absurdity; that wherever a popular assembly took into its own hands the control of responsible officers of state Aristotle was only acquainted with two results, one of which invariably followed, either condemnation by the assembly itself or a reference to the Areopagus or some similar board; and that in no case was the matter referred to a popular tribunal. And since Aristotle regards those two fundamental rights as the most indispensable concessions to the democratic principle, without any indication that they should be limited, it is in itself scarcely conceivable that he should nevertheless have tacitly introduced the limitation that it is sufficient for the people to frame the resolution of accusation without either proceeding themselves to give a verdict or to procure the verdict of condemnation through a popular court; but that the case must be referred to a non-democratic board neither taken from the whole people nor even directly elected by the people. But if he regarded those two concessions in the sense explained above, it is not only not 'obscure', but from this point of view even strictly consistent that the gradual development of absolute democracy should be characterized as their result in Athens, brought about not through Solon's fault but by the course of events²: though Fränkel may again object, rightly or wrongly, from his point of view³ that to entrust popular courts with power must be regarded as the consequence and not the cause of the democratic state principle. Lastly, the Athenian Heliæa consisted, as Fränkel very ably proves (pp. 1—21), of all Attic citizens over 30 years of age with full civic rights, not legally hindered by other employment from entering their names in the list of judges for the year, who had actually had their names so entered and (p. 51 ff., cp. pp. 21—51) not only this Heliæa as a complete body but even each separate court of justice formed out of it was similarly regarded as another ἐκκλησία⁴, as

¹ Fränkel himself observes (p. 47) that in the treaty of peace with Chalcis (445 B.C.) εὐθυναί has the wider sense of "trials" generally, and not the later, narrower sense of "trials" of state officers because when presenting their accounts they have not been granted a discharge; Wilamowitz Aus Kydathen p. 88 f. shows that the word has not even the former sense in that place but means "punishments."

² ἀπὸ συμπτώματος.

³ For in any case it is not from such point of view that we can decide what Aristotle may or may not have said.

⁴ It is indeed more than questionable whether ἀλία = ἐκκλησία, popular assembly, is really only a shorter form of ἡλία

a representation of the popular assembly¹. All the more readily and fittingly could Aristotle, if he ascribed their foundation to an author so early as Solon, characterize them as a boon granted to 'the people itself and to democracy². All this however does not exclude the possibility that on Aristotle's view even Solon at the same time granted to the popular assembly also certain plenary powers with reference to the deposition, punishment, and control of the officers of state: indeed on the analogy of VI(IV), 14, 6 (n. 1325) there is a certain probability even, that by his remarks in II. 12 § 5 Aristotle intends to refer back to Solon the right of laying complaints or information, brought against officers of state during their time of office, directly before the popular assembly for immediate decision or with a view to further proceedings³. THALETAS: II. 12. 7.

Thaletas or Thales was in reality a lyric poet (as indeed we are told in Plutarch) and musical composer of Gortyn (or according to Suidas, of Elyros) in Crete, younger than Archilochus; the first to introduce the paeonian and cretan rhythms into artistic lyric poetry and vocal music (Glaukos cited in Plutarch De Music. 10. 1134 D, E, Ephor. in Strabo p. 480 f.). These he borrowed from the sprightly native dance tunes sung to the dance in the worship of Apollo in Crete (Athenae. v. 181 B), which were called Paeans and Hyporchemes, and it was songs of this kind which he himself wrote and set to music and brought to their artistic perfection (Heracleid. Pont. quoted in Plut. De Music. 9. 1134 C, Schol. on Pind. Pyth. II. 127), availing himself in them not only of paeonian rhythms and metres, but probably of dactylic rhythms and rhythms compounded of successions of dactyls and trochees. According to the story which dates from so early a writer as Ephoros, Lycurgus while staying in Crete despatched Thaletas, a man well versed in politics, to Sparta, in order that he might by means of his songs spread the spirit of political harmony there and thus pave the way for the Lycurgean reforms in the constitution. But another and far more credible legend informs us that Thaletas was summoned to Sparta by the order of the Delphic oracle in order to assuage a pestilence by his musical art (Pratinas fr. 8 in Plut. De Music. 42. 1146 C, Plut. Philos. cum principibus 5 p. 779 A, Aelian. Var. Hist. XII. 50; cp. Strabo p. 482). It can hardly be decided whether the only signification or indeed whether the two words are at all connected in their derivation: see Wilamowitz op. c. pp. 87—94.

² And that they were at least earlier than Cleisthenes, and may thus very well have existed in Solon's times or even before them, is shown by Wilamowitz, pp. 94—96.

³ E.g. to induce the assembly to depose the magistrate.

underlying these legends is one which belongs to the history of literature, symbolizing the healing and soothing powers of poetry and music, or whether Thaletas was actually a priest wielding expiatory powers like Epimenides (Exc. I to B. 1): the latter explanation is supported by the fact that at his home of Gortyn there was really a shrine of Apollo, to which embassies were sent from foreign states, to obtain aid in case of pestilence (Stephanos of Byz. s. v. Γόρτυν). In any case Thaletas was also employed in Sparta, perhaps about 665 B.C. (?), and introduced the Cretan paeans and hyporchemes there also: the Laconian Sosibios, frag. 5 in Athenae. xv. 687 C, relates that his songs were sung even at a later time at the Gymnopaedia along with those of Alcman. In Crete he composed in Knosos as well as in his native town: for in all probability he was the same as the Knosian rhapsode Thaletas from whom he is distinguished in Suidas (Suidas asserts that Thaletas of Gortyn lived before Homer), and the same as the Thales who is said by Demetrios of Magnesia, in Diog. Laert. i. 38, to have been contemporary with Homer, Hesiod, and likewise Lycurgus. 1275 a 1 ὥστε τίνα κτλ] Schlosser's censure of Aristotle is not altogether without reason. The synthetic method which was applied before, I. 1 § 3 n. (4), 3 § 1 (29), 8 § 1 (66), is certainly out of place here. "There is far more truth in the remark at I. 2 § 12" where see note "that the conception of the state must precede that of its members. It cannot be said that we have to define πόλις by reference to πολίτης; on the contrary, the relative conception of the citizen must be explained by reference to that of the state" (Schlosser I. 218). In reality it is the latter course which Aristotle adopts. He takes the conception of the state obtained in cc. 1, 2 as the foundation for his definition of the citizen, as Schlosser justly observes: so that he is involved in a formal circle, when he afterwards defines the state (see III. 1. 12 n.) as a body of citizens adequate for independence of life, i.e. comparing I. 2. 8 n. (21), adequate for the end of the state. And just because this is so, in spite of the grave formal blunder, the definition of the citizen has not in any way suffered. Schlosser assumes that it is only applicable to the most advanced democracy and not to the best constitution, and that it restricts the notion of the state obtained in I cc. 1, 2. But this is a misapprehension. On the contrary, Aristotle is of the opinion that the ideal exactly answering to this conception is never completely realized until all who are actually citizens have equal rights and duties. Herein he is certainly right: the error is in looking for any such realization, because facts never do completely answer to conceptions. See nn. (440) (441) on § 10 below. SUSEM. (434)

§ 3 6 τοὺς ποιητοὺς] "honorary citizens" (Sussemihl). But probably cases like those of 5 §§ 7, 8 are contemplated: "those on whom the franchise is conferred." [Demosth.] c. Neaer. 1376, 15, τῇ ποιήσει πολίτας.

The context would be equally well suited by 'life-long' or 'perpetual': but from c. 11 § 13 f., § 18 f., we learn that even when discharging judicial or legislative functions no one would regard the δικαστὴς and ἐκκλησιαστής as themselves ἄρχοντες but only as parts of the complex ἄρχων, the δικαστήριον or ἐκκλησία. A fortiori, the mere qualification for discharging these intermittent functions cannot make an ἄρχων when the actual discharge of them is not enough (Shute). καίτοι γελοῖον] Comp. Plato Laos 767 A, B: "in a certain sense to appoint courts of justice is to choose officers of state. For every member of the executive must needs be a judge of sundry matters, and a dikast, without really holding office, does virtually assume an office of no mean importance on the day when he decides the suit he is trying (δικαστὴς δὲ οὐκ ἄρχων καὶ τινα τρόπον ἄρχων οὐ πάνν φαῦλος γίγνεται τῇ τόθ' ἡμέραν, ἥπερ ἂν κρίνων τὴν δίκην ἀποτελῇ). Hence the dikasts may also be regarded as holders of office." For "at Athens the obligation to render an account of his conduct was necessarily presupposed in the case of every state official (cp. Aeschines III. 17), but the heliast is not obliged to render an account (Aristoph. Vespaes 587 καὶ ταῦτ' ἀνυπεύθυνοι δρῶμεν· τῶν δ' ἄλλων οὐδεμί' ἀρχή). Again, no one could hold an office for two terms in succession, as in that case he must have been reelected before he had rendered his account, which was illegal: whereas the heliast could go on discharging his functions time after time, uninterruptedly" (Fränkel p. 21 f.). § 8 33 ἐφαρμόσας is intransitive. "Such then is [the notion, or definition of] the citizen which best applies to all who are so called." We find ἐπὶ with gen. after this verb, 2 § 3 and 11 § 5 below: but the dat. (4 § 2) or πρὸς with acc. is more usual.

πολιτείας and, consequently, the πολίτης as determined in each of them, "one of these being primary, another secondary, a third yet more subordinate, in such cases the generic attribute, in right of which they belong to the class [lit. are such], is either altogether lost or barely seen." If altogether lost, the things are, in technical phrase, ὁμώνυμα. Here however πολίτης is probably παρώνυμον, like ἀγαθόν in Nic. Eth. 1. 6 §§ 8—12, where also it is explained that there is no common attribute in virtue of which all the things denoted as 'good' are such. See Zeller Plato p. 259 n. 103 Eng. tr. In Ind. Ar. ὑποκείμενα is explained (1) res singulae quae continentur notionis alicuius universalis ambitu, (2) vel ad quas ea notio refertur et a quibus suspensa est: e.g. Met. A. 2. 4, 982 a 23, ὁ τὴν καθόλου ἐπιστήμην ἔχων οἰδὲ πως πάντα τὰ ὑποκείμενα. But Bonitz adds: τῶν πραγμάτων (ut πολίτου) ἐν οἷς τὰ ὑποκείμενα (singulae πολιτεῖαι ad quas refertur τοῦ πολίτου notio) διαφέρει.

35—38 "See Categ. 1. 1 f: things are said to be homonymous or equivocal when they have merely the same name, the sense or meaning attached to the name being different (ὁμώνυμα λέγεται ὧν ὄνομα μόνον κοινόν, ὁ δὲ κατὰ τοῦνομα λόγος ἕτερος). Things are said to be synonymous or univocal when they are not only called by the same name, but also in the same sense (J. G. Schneider). Comp. Waitz ad loc., Bonitz Ind. Ar. s. v. ὁμώνυμος [Grote Aris. 1. 81 f.]: also 1. 2. 13 above n. (28)." SUSEM. (438 b) Hence obviously πράγματα 'things' must be taken in the not uncommon sense of 'classes': comp. De Interpret. c. 7 § 1, 17 a 38, ἐπεὶ δ' ἐστὶ τὰ μὲν καθόλου τῶν πραγμάτων τὰ δὲ καθ' ἕκαστον. Any general notion, however loose the connexion between the particulars which come 'under' it, is treated as a whole or 'thing,' if it is denoted by a single term.

§ 9 39 ὑστέρας...προτέρας] Logically 'posterior' and 'prior.' Not 'later' and 'earlier' in time or historical development, but 'lower' and 'higher' in the order of thought and of real existence: the former less really, the latter more really a form of government. See 1. 2. 13 n. (27). SUSEM. (439)

1275 b 1 ἡμαρτημένας] Plato's word Rep. v 449 A, VIII 544 A. The participle 'perverted' has been converted into an adjective 'wrong, perverse': cp. 6 § 11, VIII(V). 1, 5, N.E. IV. 9. 35, VIII. 10. 4. In VIII(V). 1. 15 it is a true passive participle. Compare ἀπονενοημένος = desperate.

§ 10 5 ὁ λεχθεὶς] The citizen as thus defined.

ἐν μὲν δημοκρατίᾳ κτλ] But democracy is one of the degenerate forms. If then Aristotle's conception of the citizen is particularly applicable to democracy, then clearly under the best constitution the position of the citizens will be just the same as under a democracy, and all will enjoy equal rights amongst themselves. See 13 § 12 nn. (598, 599): IV(VII). 9 §§ 7—9, 13 § 9, 14 §§ 3—5 with nn. (816, 817, 885). Aristotle cannot make his meaning clear by reference to the best constitution because he has not yet determined in what it consists; thus he is compelled to take an illustration from democracy. would otherwise not become perfectly adjusted to the real nature of its citizens, as however it must be in order to be actually "the best." SUSEM. (441)

8 συγκλήτους] Meetings of a great council specially convened upon extraordinary occasions. It may be shown, as in Exc. IV to B. II p. 345 f., that there existed at Carthage a great council of this kind, side by side with the smaller council and the popular assembly. SUSEM. (442)

κατὰ μέρος] not "in turn" but "by sections."

καὶ τὰς δίκας...κατὰ μέρος] "They try cases before special courts." Thus of the two 'indefinite magistracies', the popular assembly and the popular courts of justice, neither is here found: the larger council specially convened (σύγκλητος) replaces the one, and the other is superseded by the conversion of the judicature into a special government department. SUSEM. (443)

§ 11 12 Καρχηδόνα] If we bear in mind what is said in n. (443) we shall discover that there is no contradiction between this passage and II. 11. 7, καὶ τὸ τὰς δίκας ὑπὸ τινῶν ἀρχέων δικάζεσθαι πάσας καὶ μὴ ἄλλας ὑπ' ἄλλων, καθάπερ ἐν Λακεδαίμονι (cp. Exc. IV. p. 348 f. and nn. 391, 391 b). The more subtle distinction that at Sparta the administration of justice was distributed over the different branches of the executive, while at Carthage it was separated from them all and entrusted to a special judicial department, is not here taken into account, but merely that which is equally a feature of both systems, viz. the jurisdiction of special boards as distinguished from that of δικάσται annually chosen for this purpose as a committee of the entire civic body. See further II. 9. 23 n. 325. SUSEM. (444)

15 ὁ κατὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν ὠρισμένος] "the officer defined by his tenure of the office" (of judge or legislator). And therefore in such states Aristotle regards as citizens only those who have the unrestricted right of being elected to these definite offices. (Nothing can be more erroneous than Oncken's assertion, II. p. 121 n. 1, that presumably Aristotle has in mind the division of responsibility in the Athenian democracy between ἐκκλησία and βουλή on the one hand, Heliaea, νομοθῆται, and Areopagus on the other.) § 2 26 Γοργίας] The celebrated orator and nihilistic philosopher, already referred to I. 13. 10 (cp. n. 118), who lived between 483 and 375, visited Athens on an embassy from his native city Leon-tini in 427, and a second time soon afterwards. There he enchanted every one with his florid and rhythmical periodic eloquence and gave a great impulse to the formation of an Attic prose style: at a later period he lived, and perhaps died, at Larisa in Thessaly. Isocrates went to Larisa to hear him. He trained a considerable school of rhetors, which subsequently had rivals in the schools of Isocrates, of Polycrates, and of the Cynics:

Alkidamas (n. 31), Polos, Likymnios, Protarchos and Lycophron (nn. 297, 552) were its most eminent names. See Foss De Gorgia Leontino (Halle 1828), Frei in the *Rhein. The following passage, II. 26—30, is elaborately treated by Prof. Ridgeway, in Transactions of the Camb. Philological Soc. vol. II pp. 135—138. His results are here accepted. He further suggests (Journal of Philology xv. p. 164) that the particular occasion of creating new citizens, which called forth this jest, was a defeat of the Larisaeans by Lycophron of Pherae in 404 B.C., as related by Xenophon Hellen. II. 3. 4.

27 εἰρωνευόμενος = ironically, though the word could have the meaning "jestingly." But we are told Rhet. III. 7. 11, 1408 b 20, ἡ μετὰ εἰρωνείας ὅπερ Γοργίας ἐποίησε, that Gorgias used to be ironical in his speeches. SUSEM. (449)

28 ἔφη καθάπερ ὄλμους κτλ] "said that mortars were the staple manufacture of the place and freemen of the magistrates." This untranslatable play upon words turns on the double sense of δημουργοί, which was (1) the title for the chief magistrates in many places (cp. n. 1586), thus answering to 'mayor' or presumption that the magistrates of Larisa bore this same title at the foundation of the city and had full powers to make citizens of whom they pleased: yet who in the world would spoil such a joke or pun by inquiring whether this was historically true? (But the jest would lose all its point if δημιουργοί be taken,

 Why should Gorgias interpret his own gloss by some one who did not see that ὄλμους goes with Λαρισαίους above; or perhaps believed that λάρισα, λαρῖς meant

 'a kettle' on the analogy of τάναγρα,

That δούλος may be used of freedmen is capable of abundant proof: Athenaeus VI. 93, 267 B, C διαφέρειν δὲ φησι Χρύσιππος δούλον οἰκέὡς οὐ τῆς πόλεως κτλ] "on the ground that it was a loan to the tyrant and not to the state." This question was really raised in B.C. 403, when after the expulsion of the thirty, the Athenian state debated whether it was obliged to repay a loan of 100 talents borrowed by them from the Spartans, Demosth. XX. 11 f., Isocr. VII. 68 f. (Vettori). The converse case, viz. that the credit of a service rendered by the expelled tyrants was claimed by the state, arose, when the Corinthians after the expulsion of the Cypselidae demanded that the offerings dedicated by this family at Delphi and Pisa should be inscribed with the name of the town, and the acts of their tyrants be thus regarded as acts of the state.

 was destroyed by its conquerors and the inhabitants were driven to seek new homes in the neighbourhood in a number of unwallled villages and hamlets, as was done to Mantinea by the Spartans in 385 B.C. This was an oligarchical measure: for the custom of living together in a walled town was usually favourable to democracy. The opposite and de-mocratical procedure, the union of several country places, hitherto unwallled, in a single town was συνοικίζειν: and directly after the battle of Leuctra this was done by the Mantineans who rebuilt their city
 B.C. 370 and moreover gave the impulse to the foundation of a common capital of all Arcadia, namely Megalopolis. See

23 πολλαχῶς λεγομένης] As in Greek there is only the one word πόλις for 'city' and 'state,' in such a case as that just cited in n. (459) it might well be asked, whether the state of Mantinea continued to exist at all in the interval between the destruction and the rebuilding of the city. In fact, the dispute did not merely turn upon different meanings of the word πόλις, as Aristotle thinks: but the imperfection of the Greek conception of the state, which even Aristotle has not surmounted (Introd. p. 22), is brought clearly to light. See however 9 § 10 n. (554). SUSEM. (460)

Unquestionably it would be a great gain if we could keep this limited conception always before us, and the translation of πόλις, πολιτικός, by 'city' 'civic' rather than 'state' 'political' is in many cases desirable on that account. But one uniform rendering is clearly impossible. To bring home the fact that the citizens of Rome formed what we may call a 'municipal corporation' we cannot be always styling them the 'burgess-body.'

If any change is to be made at all, we should omit πολιτῶν, which, though grammatically unobjectionable, is superfluous and somewhat obscures the sense. Usually κοινωνία πολιτῶν or κοινωνία has been made the subject of the second sentence, and κοινωνία πολιτείας or πολιτεία its predicate, “and fellowship (of the citizens) is fellowship in a constitution” or “consists in a constitution.” SUSEM.

§ 9 9 εἰ δὲ τοῦτον ἔχει τὸν τρόπον]

“On these principles then it is plain that we must affirm the identity of the city by a reference to its constitution.” It would be unjust to Aristotle to apply to this conclusion* in its literal sense his assertion 6 § 1 n. (523), 7 § 2 (535), 13 § 5 (592), that the constitution is nothing but the form of government, πολίτευμα, κύριον. For the truth is that, like Plato, he includes under πολιτεία all which goes to condition the form of government as well as all that is directly conditioned by it. Thus, as Zeller II ii p. 551 rightly observes, he includes ‘even the main ‘features of the commonwealth which ‘find expression in the spirit of the state ‘administration and in the mode in which ‘the end of the state is conceived’: see IV (VII). 8 § 5 n. (800), 8 § 3 (806). Thus his notion of a polity or πολιτεία is not narrower but wider than our notion of a constitution. For when we speak with scientific precision the term ‘constitution’ usually denotes only the particular form which the political organism assumes, or the sum total of the rules regulating the distribution of political functions:—although no doubt, as a matter of fact, the text of a modern constitution does not fully or exclusively contain constitutional rules answering to the definition just given; but admits all those laws in general which, as the fundamental laws of the state, appear to demand special guarantees. Hence it is that to Aristotle no less than to Plato the regulation of education in the spirit of the constitution is eminently and essentially a part of the constitution: see V(VIII). 1 § 1 f. n. (973), VIII(V). 9 § 11 (1641). Thus he by no means ignores a state of things in which the prevalent morality and education are out of harmony with the existing constitution, but where such is the case he firmly maintains that this existing constitution has not yet been fully realized, VI(IV). 5 § 3, n. (1216). Again, that he includes under the 'constitution' the regulation of property relations, is perfectly clear from IV(VII). c. 9, 10 § 9. Consult also n. (190).

But even when these admissions are made, our judgment must be that in coming to this conclusion he has again (see III. 82, 296, 339) left too much out of sight, nay utterly rejected, 'the conception of the nation as a natural whole,' to use the words of Hildenbrand p. 416. However the union of a people into one state may have been brought about, whether there is mixed nationality, or all are of the same stock, we shall never cease to regard its constitutional history as simply a main element of its history as a people: and therefore we shall always find it impossible to separate e.g. the English constitution from the English nation. To us the sentiment here expressed will appear outrageous:—that the English nation might be superseded by another race and yet that so long as the same constitution was preserved, there would still remain the same state. See further Isocr. VII § 14, who calls the constitution the soul of the state. SUSEM. (466)

13 εἰ δὲ δίκαιον...λόγος ἕτερος] 'But whether justice requires us to discharge or to repudiate our obligations (§ 2) when the state changes to another constitution is a different question.' The point is not resumed in the sequel.

"This shows at once the defectiveness of Aristotle's decision. He feels himself that after so deciding he could only consistently answer the present question by affirming the justice of repudiation and guards himself against doing so because at the same time he does not want to say this right out. But in order to have a scientific justification for this course he should at least have indicated other instances favouring the other side of the question." SUSEM. (467)

cc. 4, 5 Is the virtue of the good man identical with that of the good citizen? See Anal. p. 109, and Thurot Etudes pp. 105—117.

Plato's identification of them is a fundamental principle of the Republic, implied in the analogy of the state and the individual and particularly evident in the treatment of imperfect states and imperfect individuals, B. VIII, IX. Aristotle admits it in some cases (4 § 9), i.e. in the perfect state; and he no less precisely asserts that in most constitutions they are distinct (6 § 1), the identity of the goodness of the man and of the citizen being only coextensive with the active exercise of the administrative powers which he enjoys. This is in accord with N. E. v. 2. 11: οὐ γὰρ ὥς ταῦτόν ἀνδρὶ τ' ἀγαθὸν εἶναι καὶ πολίτῃ παντί, on which see Jackson's note which disposes of Grant's strange view that the author of the 'Eudemian' Book V used, with essential discrepancies, the present chapter and other sections of the Politics.

16 τῶν δὲ νῦν εἰρημένων...18 μὴ τὴν αὐτὴν] Schlosser's assertion that this is out of place is quite groundless. On the Aristotelian conception, the state is an institution for educating a human being, or more especially a man (see n. on § 3), at once for happiness and for the greatest possible fitness or excellence. Hence to inquire how far, under any constitution, the state can reach this goal touches a fundamental point in constitutional theory of the utmost generality; and constitutions may be classified as (1) better or best, (2) worse or worst, according as they are more or less adapted to this end. The present inquiry accordingly serves as the basis of the classification of constitutions in order of merit which follows in c. 6, and of the entire theory of the separate constitutions. This then, and this alone, is precisely the right place for cc. 4, 5. That they have defects in the execution we are not prepared to deny, since Aristotle must have himself intended materially to recast them subsequently (see n. 471; compare nn. 473, 478): but this intention was never carried out. SUSEM. (468)

One glaring defect in the execution is the frequent violation of the rule forbidding the hiatus, which is fairly well observed in the rest of B. III. There are 40 bad cases in c. 4 alone out of a total of 90 odd for the whole of the book.

33 τὸν δ' ἀγαθὸν ἄνδρα] Aristotle speaks here continuously of the virtue and fitness of the man (ἀνὴρ) rather than of the human being, because he regards the ἀρετὴ of the woman as inferior and belonging to a separate species: see 4 §§ 15—18 nn. (491, 495): I. 13 §§ 9—11, nn. (114 b, 117, 119). SUSEM. (470)

§ 4 36 ἐπελθεῖν τι or περὶ τίνος are separately found: while VIII(V). 10. 1 ἐπελθεῖν καὶ περὶ μοναρχίας ἐξ ὧν φθείρεται is equivalent to a conjunction of the two. The meaning would then be "to review the same question in the case of the model state." Spengel takes περὶ with διαποροῦντας; "by raising objections to the possibility of the model state." "But the sense seems to require that ἐπελθεῖν τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον should mean 'to arrive at the same result'; and if so, παρὰ might be necessary = 'starting from the best constitution' or 'from the point of view of the best constitution'." SUSEM.

§ 5 37 εἰ γὰρ ἀδύνατον] "For if it be impossible that a state should contain not but virtuous men, since it is impossible for its citizens to be all alike."

at how does this agree with the passages quoted in n. (133) on II. 2. 4, according to which at least approximate equality of the citizens must be assumed in the best state? Further (as Thurot p. 108 rightly observes) we are told at c. 18 § 1 that it had been shown at the outset of the discussion (ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις λόγοις) that the virtue and excellence of the man and of the citizen of the best state is necessarily the same, and the reference can only be to cc. 4—6 § 1: see n. (684) on 8 § 1. We might try to get over the contradiction by assuming that at this present stage of the discussion, 4 § 5, the arguments pro and con had not all been shown dialectically and the final conclusion, to which c. 18 § 1 refers us back, was

may have fallen out either at the end of c. 4 * or in the lacuna at c. 13 § 6 (see Introd. p. 43 ff. n. 599). But at c. 6 + § 1 the statement here made is expressly set down as a part of the final result, while 13 § 6 is too near to 18 § 1 to be meant by the words ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις λόγοις. Should we then rather believe that Aristotle's genuine discussion is wholly or for the most part lost and that cc. 4, 5, which replace it, are wholly or in part a spurious interpolation? Sober inquiry will not easily be reconciled to such a desperate and violent step, although there is certainly much besides that points in this direction: see § 6 n. (473), § 8 (478), § 16 (491), § 17 (496); 5 § 1 (551). But then the only possible alternative is to assume that when Aristotle wrote this he was not yet clear about his model state, and that when making the reference in 18 § 1 he had in view not the part at present executed but a revised version which he intended to make subsequently but never actually completed. For 18 § 1 is in agreement with his repeated declaration subsequently IV(VII). 9 § 3, 13 § 9, 10, 14 § 8: VI(IV). 7. 2 (nn. 684, 808 and Introd. p. 51), that in fact the best polity is that in which the virtue of the citizen coincides with the virtue of the man, and the citizens are not merely virtuous when judged by the standard of their polity, but absolutely virtuous and excellent men: and this alone is reasoned out logically (see n. 468). This of course does not at all affect the proposition that in the best state, as elsewhere, the citizens are not

* Not directly after 4 § 5, as Thurot thinks, for the rest of chapter 4 from § 7 to the end would not agree with that supposition. Then it is presupposed that hitherto the two sorts of excellence have been declared to be not absolutely the same even in the ideal state.

† As suggested by Susemihl in Compos. der arist. Pol. p. 24 f. n. (24).

all equally virtuous men, but it does affect the much more illogical inference that the inferior citizens of the best state have only civic virtue. On the contrary here the degree of civic excellence also must be regulated by that of individual excellence, and the special nature of the one by the special nature of the other: and one consequence of this is that which Aristotle in complete accordance with the facts lays down as a criterion of the best state, viz. that in its administration each is employed according to his special faculties and capacities and assigned to his right place. It may thence be inferred that Aristotle had no intention of permitting all the members of the governing civic body in the pattern state to fill all the various public offices in rotation, but that he assumed that this most virtuous civic body would always elect to particular state offices the fittest and most virtuous of its members. Cp. I. 1 § 8 n. (569). Consequently it must be allowed that the officers of state in the perfect city do not represent the union of the virtue of the citizen and of the man, as is here stated, but rather that they represent the highest and most perfect degree of this union: and so far from being erroneous it is quite correct to say that Aristotle includes in this polity those who are not yet elected but are still eligible to such a position. Only they do not actually attain a complete confirmation of this highest individual virtue (which is at the same time the highest civic virtue) until they are elected to office: cp. further n. (521) on III. 5. 10. Nor should we forget that at IV(VII). 14. 8 n. (902) Aristotle makes only the virtue of the ruler (πολιτικοῦ καὶ ἀρχοντος) equivalent to the virtue of the man: in the best state the rulers are primarily the popular assembly composed of the elder citizens, but in a still higher degree the men selected out of it who are elected to offices of state. In fact this whole argument is so absurd that I cannot bring myself to attribute it to Aristotle. In the case treated in n. (501) on III. 5. 1, there is an essential difference. The interpolation may be due to a gross misapprehension of II. 2. 3: comp. n. (133). SUSEM. (473)

24 Ἰάσων] The famous tyrant of Pherae in Thessaly, who attempted to carry out a policy in Greece similar to that afterwards followed by Philip of Macedon. SUSEM. (480) Even Grote is caught napping here, for he represents Jason as saying that he felt hunger until he became despot (III. p. 36 n.).

§ 10 25 ἀλλὰ μὴν...27 καλῶς] Eaton compares Pl. Laws i. 643 E: τὴν πρὸς ἀρετὴν ἐκ παίδων παιδείαν, ποιούσαν ἐπιθυμητὴν τε καὶ ἐραστὴν τοῦ πολίτην γενέσθαι τέλειον, ἄρχειν τε καὶ ἄρχεσθαι ἐπιστάμενον μετὰ δικῆς. SUSEM. (481)

27 εἰ οὖν...29 οὐκ ἂν εἴη ἄμφω ἐπαινετὰ ὁμοίως] "If then we lay down that the excellence of a good man is that of rule, while the excellence of a citizen is that of both," ruling and being ruled, "they cannot both be equally praise-worthy." It is the virtue of the good man which alone is one and perfect, § 3 τὸν ἀγαθὸν ἄνδρα φαιμέν κατὰ μίαν ἀρετὴν εἶναι τὴν τελείαν. Of civic virtue this is true only in so far as it denotes the excellence of rule (here declared to be the excellence of the citizen), but not in so far as it is the excellence displayed in due obedience. This latter then is a subordinate excellence. SUSEM. (482)

§ 11 Welldon, reading 29 ἐπεὶ οὖν ποτε δοκεῖ ἀμφοτέρα καὶ <ποτε> οὐ ταῦτ' αὖτε δεῖν κτλ, translates "Since then it seems that there are some cases where ruler and subject ought to learn both (rule and subjection) and other cases where they ought [each] to learn only one." But this strains οὐ ταῦτ' = not both the same.

8 ὁμοίων τῷ γένει = his peers, his equals by birth. This healthy conception of πολιτικὴ ἀρχή is in accord with the soundest traditions of Greek political life and the presupposition of the free state or republic in the widest sense.

§ 14 10 ἵππαρχεῖν κτλ] In Athens (and here too Aristotle has before him especially the circumstances of the Athenian state) the infantry of the city militia consisted of ten τάξεις, one from each φυλὴ (see n. 451), and perhaps themselves called φυλαί. They corresponded to our battalions or regiments, and were each under the command of a ταξιαρχος. Each such τάξις was divided into λόχοι or companies, as we should call them, and their commanders were called λοχαγοί. The command of the cavalry was given to two ἵππαρχοι, and under them were ten φύλαρχοι, one for each tribe. The generals, στρατηγοί, were ten in number elected annually. Originally they commanded the ten τάξεις: but between 460 and 455 B.C. they took a wholly different position and became from that time the highest executive politico-military officers. Evidently it was at the same time that the ταξιαρχοι were created, to assume what had been earlier the functions of the στρατηγοί: of whom after this period only a few took the field, one having the supreme command, if it was not divided amongst them: or one might carry on war in one district, another in another. Subsequently as a rule only one took the field each year. See Schömann Antiquities p. 420 f., 422, 424 f.,

12 λέγεται κτλ] Comp. iv(vii). 14. 6 f. n. (898) ff. This saying is attributed to Solon by Apollodorus in Diog. Laert. i. 60, Stob. Flor. xlvi. 22 (Eaton), but hardly on good evidence. SUSEM. (490)

§ 16 16 καὶ ἀνδρὸς δὲ κτλ] Both belong to a good man, because individual excellence is one with the political excellence of the ruler: but this cannot be attained without the previous acquisition of excellence in obeying as a subject. But, Thurot objects, in that case the excellence of the man coincides with the complete excellence of the citizen. And it is meant to be so, and the best constitution tends to this end: only here, according to Aristotle's view, the virtue of the citizen who is governed is as such in all cases a civic virtue and yet does not amount to true individual virtue. It was shown in n. (471) that this latter is an untenable position, given up by Aristotle himself in the course of his exposition: but the censure which may be properly pronounced upon him here is also confined to this. This mistake is closely connected with the fact that Aristotle, going in truth beyond his own real opinion (see n. 120) represents the specific difference between the lower virtue of the woman and the higher virtue of the man, i. 13 §§ 7, 9, 10, nn. (114 b, 117, 119) so as to imply that the former is shown exclusively in obeying and serving, and the latter in ruling and commanding. Comp. n. (470). SUSEM. (491)

19 τοῦ ἡθους ἀρετῇ] Moral virtue as distinguished from the practical wisdom of § 17. See on I. 5 § 6 n. (40), § 9 (45¹), 13 § 6 (112), § 18 (115): III. 4 § 7 (474 ff.). SUSEM. (493)

εἶδη ἔχουσα κτλ] “Clearly there will not be simply one form of a moral virtue like justice but it will have branches, one to regulate ruling and the other to regulate being ruled.” A distinction quite correct in itself (Schlosser). SUSEM. (494)

The adoption of Bernays' suggestions would slightly modify the translation of § 16: “And both, viz. to rule and to be ruled, belong to the honest man, although a different sort of temperance and justice is shown in ruling <and in being ruled>. For it is clear that a virtue, e.g. justice, is not one and the same in the ruler and the free-man who is subject to rule (καὶ γὰρ <ἀρχοντος καὶ> ἀρχομένου), but has branches which regulate rule and obedience, just as temperance and courage are distinct when shown in man and in woman.” Antisthenes maintained the contrary: that the virtue of both is identical.

§ 17 21 σωφροσύνη here = parsimony, like σωφρῆνως II. 6 §§ 8, 9. So also 23 κοσμία ‘orderly’ = parsimonious, frugal, and ἀκόλαστος (the opposite quality) = prodigal, extravagant.

23 οὕτω κοσμία] “only just as frugal.” It follows that the difference of degree between the virtue of the man and of the woman (see on I. 13. 7 n. 114 b, III. 4. 3 n. 470) is not of such a kind that all particular moral virtues are less developed, or need to be less developed, in the woman but such that in some cases the woman must possess a larger share than the man. SUSEM. (495)

24 οἰκονομία ἑτέρα] It is only with difficulty that this assertion can be harmonized with B. I. cc. 8—10: see Exc. III. to B. I. p. 210. “See also Xenoph. Mem. II. 7. 12—14, Oecon. 7” (Eaton). SUSEM. (496)

25 ἡ δὲ φρόνησις] By this must of course be understood simply skill in governing: that is, practical wisdom only so far as it has to do with life in the house, a community or a state, to the exclusion of the private life of the individual. There can be no moral virtue in social life without this kind of intellectual virtue (Schlosser). See I. 5. 9 n. (45), I. 13 § 6 (112), § 8 (115): III. 4. 7 n. (474—5). Comp. Nic. Eth. VI. 10. 2 ἡ μὲν γὰρ φρόνησις ἐπιτακτικὴ ἐστίν, ἡ δὲ σύνεσις κριτικὴ μόνον; also n. (498): VI. 4. 14 n. (1186), and Rhet. I. 11. 27, 1371 b 27, ἀρχικὸν τὸ φρονεῖν. § 18 29 δόξα ἀληθής] 'Right opinion' here denotes more precisely the capacity of rightly apprehending the order given in order to execute it aright, for which the person who executes it is often obliged to discover the ways and means either wholly or in part for himself. 'Right opinion' of this sort does not by any means correspond, as Eaton thinks, with that to which Plato applies the term, simply because the φρόνησις to which Plato often opposes it (as in Laws
 I. 632 c) coincides with philosophic knowledge. Hence Plato would not concede to right opinion, as Aristotle does Nic.
Eth. VI. 10. 3, that σύνεσις consists in the right application of opinion so as to judge upon the report of another a matter coming within the sphere of prudence, ἐν τῷ

c. 5 § 1 33 περὶ δὲ τὸν πολίτην κτλ] "It is an erroneous assumption to think, as Thurot and others do, that this is an altogether different question from the one discussed in the last chapter.
 These opening words at once prove that Aristotle looks upon the discussion of
 c. 5 as most closely connected with the chapter preceding. There it was decided that the virtue of the citizen in republican states consists in his being qualified both to rule and to be ruled: but in fact a restriction was needed in those cases where full participation in civic rights is granted to the lowest classes of the people, who live by manual labour, the mechanics and day-labourers. Aristotle's theory is that owing partly to their want of leisure, partly to their degrading occupation, they cannot raise themselves to a higher life of virtue: and that therefore they are just as unqualified to rule as they are unable to claim, in the full sense of the words the title of ἀγαθοὶ ἄνδρες, virtuous and capable men. To append this restriction is the main object of c. 5, and goes more diffusely into details, §§ 4—7, respecting the position of this class" (Rasow *Bemer-

SUSEM. (502)

§ 2 This question may however be said to involve no difficulty; for neither slaves nor freedmen come under the above mentioned classes (of aliens and foreigners). The indispensable elements of a state (ὧν ἄνευ οὐκ ἂν εἴη πόλις) need not be all citizens.

1278 a 1 οὐδὲ γὰρ κτλ] This reason is not altogether satisfactory. The slaves cannot come into the question: while the freedmen were regarded (and with good reason) as a special class of the resident aliens: see Schömann p. 351 of Eng. tr. And so Aristotle himself considers them, if the reading is correct, c. 2 § 3. "But in the strict sense of the term, in accordance with its etymology μέτοικος denotes only a permanent resident in a town of which he is not a citizen, though he is a citizen somewhere else [cp. Eur. Hel. 892]: and this condition is not fulfilled in the case of the freedmen" (Dittenberger). SUSEM. (503)

20 οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τ'] See again n. (103). SUSEM. (510)

If we grant Aristotle's premises, no fault can be found with his exclusion of the labouring classes from political rights. It is simply true that, as a body, they could not have possessed the qualities he demands in the citizen, even if they had found the leisure for military, political, and judicial duties. Nor again is the idea that such culture depends upon lower labour false. The existence of those excellences in which Aristotle finds the end of life and the virtues of the citizen, rests upon a mass of mere work as its necessary condition (A. C. Bradley). Congreve well remarks that "if by the arrangement of society the reason ceases to hold good" Aristotle would cease to require the exclusion of the industrial population from the citizenship.

25 ἐν Θήβαις δὲ] Judging from an oligarchical standpoint, Aristotle commends this regulation VII(VI). 7 § 4, n.
 (1496), and justly too, as Schlosser long ago remarked. After this period of waiting the law really opened the door to merchants and tradesmen who had grown wealthy: on the other hand the long delay gave some security that the existing body of citizens would not be 'flooded' with alien or upstart elements.
 Further compare VIII(V). 3 § 5 n. (1512).
 But in Aristotle's own ideal state there is no means by which one who had formerly been engaged in trade could ever attain civic rights: nor indeed on his principles is it intended that there should be. "In another work he is disposed to pay respect to the merit which owes all to itself and little or nothing to the favour of fortune, Rhet. 1. 7. 32, 1365 a 19: but his Politics nowhere exhibits any appreciation of social phenomena of this sort.
 Indeed he refuses every claim made on behalf of the man who is working his way up, if not supported by ancestry, by the formula that industrial occupations invariably incapacitate men for becoming truly virtuous or politically intelligent citizens. He ignores the important change in the social status of the same man, as soon as he ceases to perform the 'rough labour' of industry himself and is in a position to have it performed by others.
 In this respect he is but in the same case with all Greece and the Greek language which is devoid of any special word to denote the large manufacturer, the employer of labour or contractor (entrepreneur)." Such people do not lack the indispensable "leisure" which he demands; but in Greece they are still termed base mechanics (βάνανσοι) "at whom the polite world looks askance" (Oncken).

On the other hand Bradley, Hellen. p.
 216, very justly remarks that "no honest observer will deny that there is a moral βαναυσία which besets some of the occupations included under that term. Aristotle himself has laid down with the greatest clearness that even the most menial services need not be ignoble, and that the slavishness of a pursuit lies not in the things that are done, but in the spirit in which they are done, and in their object. And for this reason he would have some of such services performed by the youthful citizens" of the best state IV(VII). 14 § 7; cp. V(VIII). 2 § 6 mm. (982 a—3). "And yet he seems hardly to ask himself whether work which is rewarded in money may not be done for its own sake: and, with ideas of art hardly less exalted than Plato's, he utters no word of protest against the identification of the artist with the βάνανσος. Nor, again, can it be said that these old prejudices are wanting in vitality at the present day. What 'society' thinks of 'persons in trade,' not to speak of the 'lower orders,' no one can help knowing. But there is a difference between this sentiment and Aristotle's. If he shares our prejudice, he does not share our ideal. The leisure which he thought indispensable for a citizen was not leisure to be stupid, idle, or busy only in amusement. The strenuous exercise of the highest powers of body and mind in defending and governing the State, and in striving to quicken the divine reason in the soul,—this is the kind of 'high life' with which βαναυσία is contrasted, and the citizenship of which it is declared incapable." SUSEM. (511) was not a citizen were not reckoned citizens. The child followed the status of the father in both cases, although the former case was restricted to the periods in question. See Philippi Contributions

"Comp. c. 1 § 1 τῶν τὴν πόλιν οἰκούντων τάξις τις; VI(IV). 1 § 10 τάξις ταῖς πόλεσιν ἢ περὶ τὰς ἀρχάς, τίνα τρόπον νενέμηνται, (that distribution of public rights and duties which justice demands) καὶ τί τὸ κύριον τῆς πολιτείας, καὶ τί τὸ τέλος ἐκάστης τῆς κοινωνίας ἐστίν: 3 § 5 with notes." SUSEM. (522)

Zeller has remarked (n. 466) that 'constitution' is not a term wide enough to express πολιτεία, which is inseparable from the nature of the people who live under it, and is in fact the 'form' of the organism, constituting, as we saw (c. 3 s. fin.) its identity. "An imperfect constitution is the natural outcome of a given social condition. Given a population of a certain kind and in a definite degree of civilization, and there is a form or order naturally fitted for it: no better order would fit it. And yet for all this one τῶν ἀρχῶν] This genitive may be paraphrased 'an order regulating the assignment of offices' as the parallel passages just cited sufficiently prove.

11 τὸ πολίτευμα] 'the ruling class' or 'government' of the city. "This Greek word cannot always be uniformly translated, as here and in c. 7 § 2 n. (534); but it denotes that individual man or that body of men, in whose name the state is governed, and hence the sovereign (κύριος). So far as we know Aristotle was the first to introduce the notion or, to be more precise, this correct notion of sovereignty. See also n. (466) on c. 3 § 9 and c. 13 § 5 n. (592)." SUSEM. (523) πολίτευμα δὲ ἐστὶν ἡ πολιτεία] 'the constitution is the ruling class': an emphatic way of stating, in Greek as in English, that the character of the constitution is determined by the holders of sovereign power, who make the form of government what it is. The 'constitution' varies with the 'government' or governing class.

§ 2 14 φαμέν δὴ κτλ] 'Accordingly we say that in these cases' (a democracy and an oligarchy) 'the constitution is different. And we shall apply this same principle to all other cases.'

16 ὑποθετέον δὴ] We must therefore determine, as our fundamental principle in this investigation, the end for which the city is formed and the various ways of governing man in common life.

addition appears contradictory and un-Aristotelian: for it would include once more the rule of a master over his slaves to which the rule in question is held to be opposed. Nor are the words ἦν δὲ καλοῦμεν οἰκονομικὴν free from suspicion, for the rule of the householder again includes a rule over slaves. We must therefore understand οἰκονομικὴν in a narrower and more special sense 'emphatically' (as Congreve says) to mean the rule of the householder over the free members of his family as contrasted with his rule over slaves I. 13 §§ 1, 2. πολίτευμα δ' ἐστὶ τὸ κύριον τῶν πόλεων] Cities contain a variety of parts or elements. Each class contributes something to the city, and so has a certain claim to political rights. The relative strength of these elements determines the question where the supreme power or 'sovereignty' lies, and settles what the constitution of the city shall be. In England to-day the πολίτευμα includes the sovereign, the lords, and the electoral body among the commons.

27 ἀνάγκη δ'...ἡ τοὺς πολλοὺς] But as early as § 4 ff. it is seen that this merely numerical standpoint is only preliminary and by no means exhaustive: see nn. (538, 540, 543). SUSEM. (535)

ἡ δεῖ κτλ.] If they are to be called citizens, the inhabitants must share in the 'weal' which is the end of the city: N. E. viii. 9 § 4 ἡ πολιτικὴ κοινωνία τοῦ συμφέροντος χάριν δοκεῖ καὶ ἐξ ἀρχῆς συνελθεῖν καὶ διαμένειν.

§ 3 33 μοναρχιῶν] A neutral word, convenient as including the two species βασιλεία and τυραννίς, Plato Politic. 302 D, E. In no single case of all the six is the use of the corresponding designation applied to modern states (monarchy, aristocracy, &c.) other than misleading, even when the qualifications are supplied. The most democratic of Greek democracies we should call an oligarchy.

35 ἡ διὰ τοὺς ἀρίστους ἀρχεῖν, ἡ διὰ τὸ ἀρίστον] Undoubtedly Aristotle himself has both reasons in view in adopting this term: but preeminently the former. It has been already explained, n. (386) on II. II. 5, that he regards merit as the principle of Aristocracy: and he uses the word widely in this sense alone: II. 6 § 16 n.  so called). In this work without any are in a position to equip themselves at their own cost with heavy armour and (as Zeller remarks II ii 748 n. 7) to undergo the gymnastic training requisite for this species of military service, to which time and leisure and also a certain material prosperity were essential. Accordingly this involves a moderate property qualification.

1279 b 2 διόπερ...3 τὸ προπολεμοῦν]
 The military character of Polity is also emphasized by the author of the interpolated passage, c. 17 § 4. Yet in the nature of this form of government itself, as Aristotle elsewhere describes it, scarcely any cogent reason can be found for making this such an inseparable and essential feature. He may have dimly perceived that the description of Polity as a mere blending of democracy and oligarchy without the addition of aristocratical elements,—as distinguished from those spurious aristocracies which, like Carthage, combine in themselves these three elements, VI(IV). 7 §§ 2—4, 8 § 9 (cp. II. II. 5 n. 386)—by no means agrees with the recognition of Polity as one of the three normal constitutions, as defined by him; but that on the contrary (as was remarked Introd. p. 62) if this recognition is to remain valid, some account must be taken of merit also even in a Polity, and it must be presumed that a certain amount of excellence is spread generally amongst the citizens. And in accordance with the view here expressed about military excellence this may have induced him to transfer the warlike spirit of the Spartan system not so much to the other mixed aristocracies as to the remaining constitutions, which are most akin to it, viz. the Polities, in order in some measure to bridge over the chasm; for indeed he cites Sparta VI(IV). 9 § 6 f. n.
 (1262), as an example of a successful blending of democracy and oligarchy in Polity, though this involves him in inconsistency. At the same time by this immediate emphasis on the fact that Polity is an inferior constitution, as compared with monarchy and aristocracy, the germ of dissolution has already unobserved found its way into this whole theory of three normal constitutions and their corresponding perversions. For then in fact only monarchy and aristocracy proper are really good forms of government; while mixed constitutions—and indeed not merely polities but even spurious aristocracies—are forms intermediate to them and the perversions proper, combining good and evil elements just as the corresponding τιμοκρατία in Plato's Republic (Excursus 1.), and this assertion is made point blank by Aristotle himself later on, VI(IV). 8 §§ 1, 2, n. (1239). Comp. Zeller II ii 713 f., 748. But even at this point, by thus restricting the excellence of Polity and adding to the definition its military character, Aristotle begins to transcend the merely numerical point of view to which he has hitherto adhered c. 7 §§ 2, 3. § 3 20 πρώτη δ' ἀπορία] "The first difficulty affects the definition," i.e. affects the question how we are to define. Another series of ἀπορίαι affects τὸ δίκαιον (Wyse).

§§ 4, 5 Are both features essential? Is democracy the government of the needy majority, oligarchy that of the wealthy few? [This view reappears in the double characteristics of VI(IV). 4 § 6 οἱ ἐλεύθεροι καὶ ἄποροι πλείους ὄντες, οἱ πλούσιοι καὶ εὐγενέστεροι ὀλίγοι ὄντες.] How are we then to classify the exceptional cases where these features are not combined?

§ 6 34 ἔοικε τοίνυν κτλ] "Our argument seems then to show that the fewness or multitude of the sovereign body is an accident, in the one case of oligarchy, in the other of democracy." Here as elsewhere he is in search of the true nature and end; essential qualities [cp. c. 9 § 1 n. on ὅρος] are severed from such as are purely external and quantitative; for τὸ ποσὸν οὐκ ἐστὶν ἴσως ἐν τι, ἀλλὰ πᾶν τὸ μεταξὺ τινῶν ὠρισμένων. So in I. I. 2, IV(VII). 4. 4 ff. he denies that these quantitative distinctions are essential.

38 διὸ καὶ οὐ συμβαίνει <διὰ> τὰς ῥηθείσας αἰτίας γίνεσθαι διαφορὰς] A διαφορὰ or 'specific difference' is an essential quality, by the presence or absence of which two species of a genus, here two constitutions, differ (ᾧ διαφέροντι) and can therefore be classified. 39 διαφορὰς Γ, accepted by Koraes Bk. Bernays etc. Then αἰτίας is predicate and πολιτείας must be understood with ῥηθείσας or else inserted; thus ῥηθείσας <πολιτείας> Bernays: ῥηθείσας <ἀπορίας> Koraes wrongly, see Quaest. crit. coll. p. 391 f.

1280 a 6 πολιτείας * * Conring, perhaps rightly; a transitional clause is needed

αἰτίας goes with τὰς ῥηθείσας, or whether it is a predicate. In the former case, we expect <διὰ> τὰς ῥηθείσας αἰτίας, as § 8, δι' αὖς αἰτίας. "And for this reason too it follows that differences between constitutions do not arise on account of the reasons mentioned"—the mere numbers of the governing class. Otherwise Bernays (without inserting διὰ, but making αἰτίας διαφορὰς the predicate): "it follows that the constitutions mentioned, τὰς ῥηθείσας sc. πολιτείας, are not causes of specific difference."

Although from distinct points of view various causes seem to be assigned for the existence of different forms of government, yet the new principle of wealth and poverty is maintained through the rest of the treatise (with certain exceptions). But ultimately these different forms are traced back to differences in social conditions, and each represents a certain state of equilibrium or relative preponderance amongst the competing social elements. See Introd. pp. 60 f., 63; c. 7 § 1 n., c. 15 §§ 10—13, VI(IV). 9 § 10, II §§ 9—11, §§ 16—18, 13 §§ 10, II, VIII(V). 9 §§ 8, 9. Also Bradley Hellenica p. 225 ff.

§ 7 1280 a 1 ἂν τ' ἐλάττους ἂν τε πλείους] Here is a plain statement that any government whatever by the rich majority would be an oligarchy, any whatever by the needy minority a democracy. Yet the writer of the interpolated passage VI(IV). cc. 3, 4 has failed to understand this: see n. (1164) and VI(IV). 4 §§ 5, 6. SUSEM. (543)

c. 9 Right, or justice, in an oligarchy and in a democracy: their conflicting claims judged by the standard of perfect justice.

Oncken I. pp. 30—33 has treated this chapter as a typical example of Aristotle's analytical method.

§ 1 7 Properly ὅρους = definitions, like ὁρισμούς. Better, standards or determining principles; that which gives its special character to Oligarchy or Democracy; id quo alicui rei natura constituitur et definitur (Ind. Ar.), οἷς δοκεῖ ὁρίσθαι [ἡ ὀλιγαρχία καὶ ἡ δημοκρατία] VII(V). 9 § 14. The word was so used by Plato Rep. VIII 551 c (comp. 562 b ὁ προϋθετο ἀγαθόν, καὶ δι' οὗ ἡ ὀλιγαρχία καθίστατο = ὑπέρπλονος, ... ὁ δημοκρατία ὁρίζεται ἀγαθόν = ἐλευθερία). We have had it before II. 6 § 9, 9 § 32 and it occurs about sixteen times in the sequel. Grant's argument Ethics I. p. 61 f., that Aristotle adopted the term in the interval between writing the Ethics and the Politics, is disproved by its occurrence in the Republic.

All the various elements of the city contribute something in virtue of which they claim a share of political privilege. The predominant element (7 § 2) or class fixes its own contribution as the qualification for citizenship, or standard. This again may be viewed as the end which the citizens pursue.

justice, in so far as public offices, rights and privileges, are assigned to the citizens in proportion to their worth, κατ' ἀξίαν: so that the contributions of all to the state meet with a proportionate return, and all are justly treated by the constitution. But an oligarchy or democracy, while fairly applying this law of proportion, may set up a false or one-sided standard of worth, as wealth or five birth in place of capacity and merit. In such a case the justice of the state is a departure from perfect or natural justice and may be called an oligarchic or democratic justice, as the case may be (A. C. Bradley).

9 πάντες] Here again ἀμφότεροι might be expected. Comp. II. 11 § 5 n. (387) and Rhet. II. 9 § 3 ἅπασιν ὁμοίως δεῖ ὑπάρχειν = all who are envious or righteously indignant, 'both classes' (Shilleto).

ἄπτονται δίκαιον τινός] The partial truth in these one-sided conceptions is fully recognized. The ἀξία which oligarchy or democracy take as the qualification for political privileges, although not the true one, still has a subordinate importance for the state. It is justice in some measure. Here the sentence breaks off, the parenthetical example being elaborated and supported by other subordinate illustrations until the end of the chapter. Moreover the manner in which the true end of the state comes to light is not stated in antithesis to the false ends rejected, but is an incident of this elaborate treatment of the one false view, that the end is commercial intercourse: viz. περὶ δ' ἀρετῆς καὶ κακίας διασκοποῦσιν, § 8. Thereupon the mention of the true end leads to its severance from some unessential though indispensable conditions (κοινωνία τῶπον, περὶ τὰς μεταδόσεις, §§ 9—12); and this is followed by the formal definition of the true end of the state, § 13, from which the real measure of political rights is a deduction made in § 15. Were the digressions dismissed, and the anacoluthic period rewritten, it would perhaps run as follows: εἰ δὲ μήτε τοῦ ζῆν μόνον ἔνεκεν (κοινωνοῦσι) ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον τοῦ εὖ ζῆν, μήτε συμμαχίας ἔνεκεν ὅπως ὑπὸ μηδενὸς ἀδικῶνται, μήτε διὰ τὰς ἀλλαγὰς καὶ τὴν χρῆσιν τὴν πρὸς ἀλλήλους, ἀλλὰ ζωῆς ἕνεκα τελείας καὶ αὐτάρκους καὶ τῶν καλῶν πράξεων χάριν θετέον τὴν πολιτικὴν κοινωνίαν, ὅσοι συμβάλλονται πλείστον εἰς τὴν τοιαύτην κοινωνίαν, τούτους προσήκει πλείστον μετέχεν πόλεως. Bonitz Studien III. pp. 139—141 (105—107).

36 Τυρρηνοὶ καὶ Καρχ.] This maritime alliance between Carthage and the Etruscans, which was formed soon after the beginning of the sixth century, B. C., to drive out the Greeks and keep them away from the western half of the Mediterranean, is noticed by Herodotus I. 166, Mommsen I. p. 153 Eng. tr. SUSEM. (549)

Schömann Attisch. Process p. 494 n. 49. Here συνθήκαι περὶ τῶν εἰσαγωγίμων are commercial treaties in general: σύμβ. περὶ τοῦ μὴ ἀδικεῖν=special articles which made provision against the infliction of damage, or established a system of compensation for mutual injury (Cope).

7 ἐπιμελὲς εἶναι κτλ] "the city which truly and not in mere pretence deserves the name must give its attention to virtue." See A. C. Bradley Hellenica pp. 193 f., 210 f.

8 γίνεται κτλ] For else the society is transformed into an alliance differing from all other leagues, whose members dwell apart, in locality alone: the law too is transformed into a compact and 'a guarantee of mutual rights' in the words of Lycophron, not calculated to make the citizens virtuous and just.

10 Λυκόφρων ὁ σοφιστής] See Exc. II. to B. II. p. 333 and Introd. p. 35. To all appearance Lycophron belonged to the school of Gorgias (n. 448): perhaps, as v. Wilamowitz conjectures Hermes XIV. p. 173, he was the same as the erotic poet Lycophronides (Bergk Poet. lyr. III.⁴ p. 633 f.). He is specially known to us elsewhere only as the composer of an eulogy on the lyre, and as maintaining that one thing cannot at the same time be many and that therefore every combination of a predicate with the subject by means of the copula is inadmissible: also that nobility is only an imaginary good. Comp. Vahlen The Sophist Lycophron in Rhein. Mus. XXI. 1865, p. 143 ff., Zeller Pre-Socratics vol. II. pp. 425, 477 Eng. tr. A sophist was originally any man of intellectual importance, who also made it his profession to acquire education and knowledge and impart them to others: hence the seven sages are also called the seven sophists. At a later time, after the age of Pericles, the name was given in a narrower sense to paid professional teachers of rhetoric and other departments of an encyclopaedic education. They delivered single lectures and discourses of an instructive or amusing kind (ἐπιδείξεις), charging a fee for admission, or perhaps published them in writing; in some cases they appeared as experts in argument. In this sense the word occurs here. At the same time it received the odious connotation in which we exclusively use it at the present day, in consequence of the many subtleties, the pettifoggish quibbles, and paradoxes in which this class of people was often involved; although the movement towards freethinking* and critical scepticism, which they originated, and their bold innovations had much to justify them, and were in part of epoch-making importance. Cp. n. (31) on I. 3 § 4. SUSEM. (552)

See Cope in the Journal of Sacred and Classical Philology vol. II. pp. 140—143: also his note on Rhet. III. 3. 1.

§ 9 It will be remembered that Corinth and Argos were for a short time, 393—387 B.C., united ostensibly as one state, to the intense indignation of the philo-Laconian party. See Xen. Hellen. IV. 4 § 6 αἰσθανόμενοι δὲ ἀφανιζομένην τὴν πόλιν διὰ τὸ καὶ ὅρους ἀνασπᾶσθαι καὶ "Ἀργος ἀντὶ Κορίνθου τὴν πατρίδα αὐτοῖς ὑπομάζεσθαι": v. I § 34, § 36.

16 ἐπιγαμίας] Usually a lawful marriage could only be contracted between two citizens of the same Greek state: but the privilege was occasionally granted to individual strangers or to an alien community as a whole; and special treaties secured the right of intermarriage between different cities: Schömann pp. 101, 306, 356 Eng. tr. How far it was prohibited between members of the ruling and subordinate families when such a distinction was made within the limits of the same community, is not known. The Bacchiadae of Corinth (II. 12. 8 n. 420) married almost exclusively amongst themselves, Herod. v. 92; and the prohibition of intermarriage with the former ruling families of Samos, after the popular insurrection in 412, forms an especially odious measure, Thuc. VIII. 21 (Eaton). The two royal families at Sparta seem never to have intermarried. SUSEM. (553) τῶν ἰδίων ταῖς π. κοινωνημάτων] 'one of the means of combination peculiar to cities.'

§ 10 17 οὐδ' εἴ τινες οἰκοῦεν χωρὶς] Aristotle does not mean that civil society is not in itself quite possible between several contiguous villages and hamlets, without the inhabitants being concentrated into one city: c. 3 §§ 3, 4 nn. (459, 460). In fact Sparta itself consisted of five such neighbouring villages, so close together, however, that as distinct from the district around them they were designated the 'city.' This was, it is true, an isolated and abnormal phenomenon: see Schömann p. 123, p. 207 Eng. tr. SUSEM. (554) "Is not Aristotle taking an imaginary case: the elements of society (such as γεωργὸς) which are necessary πρὸς τὸ ζῆν μόνον i. living apart but exchanging products (μεταδόσεις) ii. living together and connected by a defensive league, § 11?" (Wyse).

In particular, (c. 11) Should it rest with the Many or the Few?

The modern doctrine of sovereignty is best expounded by Austin Jurisprudence Lect. VI. pp. 226—255, ed. 3.

§ 1 12 ἢ γάρ τοι κτλ] It must either be (1) the masses, or (2) the wealthy, or (3) the virtuous, or (4) the one preeminently good man, or (5) a despot.

16 ἔδοξε γάρ κτλ] Ironical. "It is not unjust, for, by heaven, it was justly passed by the supreme body. Then what (but this) deserves to be called the utmost injustice?"

§ 2 17 πάλιν τε κτλ] And further, after all has been taken away, if the majority begin afresh to distribute amongst them the property of the minority, manifestly they destroy the city. SUSEM. (561) The principle is self-destructive.

19 οὐχ ἢ γ' ἀρετῇ] Cp. II. 2 § 7 n. (135 b). On the contrary, the proper excellence of any object is that which qualifies it for the fulfilment of its end or the performance of its special function: Nic. Eth. II. 6. 1, 1106 a 15 (Congreve): whereas, its vice is that which corrupts its true principle, ἔστι γὰρ ἡ κακία φθαρτικὴ ἀρχῆς N. E. VI. 5. 6, 1140 b 19 (Eaton). SUSEM. (561 b) Cp. *Pl. § 3 24 ἀλλ' ἄρα κτλ] Passing to (2), the claims of the wealthy few.

27 καὶ θάτερον ἄρα] (If so,) then so also is the conduct of the majority justified.

§ 4 The claim of the virtuous (ἐπιεικεῖς) is very feebly opposed as involving the disfranchisement of all who are not virtuous. This is implied in the very name of aristocracy διὰ τὸ τοὺς ἀρίστους ἄρχειν.

Hobbes' Leviathan, the body politic, is similarly an artificial body.

5 καὶ γίνεσθαι συνελθόντων... 7 διανοίαν] Trendelenburg in his "Law of Nature" (Naturrecht p. 463) rightly objects that 'in works of art man is essentially a free, unprejudiced spectator: in politics he is a partizan fellow-actor. There is a fallacy in an argument from analogy which draws an inference from the universal common to all the cases compared, when in fact it is the difference between them which is decisive.' But he proceeds to argue, that the comparison leaves out of account the desires and passions which in the case of the multitude dull the intelligence and pervert the will; that the truth brought together by their collective wisdom is materially prejudiced and hampered by the falsehood collected along with it; that the supplementing of the truth from various sides is hindered or frustrated by the resistance of errors and self-seeking. In reply to this we must inquire, whether when the public at large judges and enjoys works of art, only healthy popular inclinations and instincts are brought together: whether they are not blended with others which are unhealthy and misleading. Aristotle at least is of this latter opinion V (VIII). 6 § 16 n. (1080), 7 § 7 n. (1097), and certainly he is right. Further is there no fallacy in the criticism which overlooks the true analogy in the difference?

On the other side it is not to be forgotten, that where our own interest is concerned, although passion no doubt is inflamed and the critic is converted into a judge in his own cause (c. 9 §§ 1, 2, 16 §§ 8, 9), yet at the same time the intellect is sharpened: thus in accordance with the analogies applied in § 14, (whose correctness even Trendelenburg has not questioned,) in practical questions, where his own weal and woe are at stake, the uneducated man approximates to an expert still more closely than in art criticism. If it were not so, art critics might be appointed by the popular vote, but not even the most indirect choice of its representatives should be left to the people, although our procedure is now universally the reverse and we believe it to be justified. Trendelenburg's objections (p. 147) to too numerous executive or decreting assemblies are quite in point. But he forgets that in §§ 8, 9 Aristotle, if we take him literally, only allows the popular assembly to elect the officials: and that in any case (see Exc. IV. to B. II. n. 388) he restricts the decision of the people to a few definite questions. Had he been acquainted with the representative system, he would have judged more correctly: he would then most likely have referred to the council all matters which call for a full deliberation and responsible decision rather than a vote. That not merely capacity but prejudice also and ignorance are collected in the popular assembly is moreover expressly laid down by Aristotle in §§ 6, 7 (though Trendelenburg has altogether overlooked this); but he holds that the danger arising from the passions of individual sovereigns is the greater of the two (15 § 8 n. 647), whereas in a capable nation he maintains that the force of truth will finally triumph over falsehood. This is the thought upon which, as we know, his conception of rhetoric is based: see Zeller II. ii. 755. It may be that this is not capable of strict demonstration, but to a large extent remains merely a matter of belief. Yet this much is certain, that whoever does not cherish this belief has lost faith in humanity generally. See also n. (577) on II § 19. SUSEM. (565 b)

This is presumably the sequel of the objections raised in c. 10 §§ 4, 5. The further development would be in the form of Plato's well-known simile of the drones in his criticism of oligarchy Rep. VIII. 551 D, 552 A—E, 555 D.

Such a constitutional restriction is not admissible, certainly, for the citizens of the ideal state who have the best nature and education and are in the possession of a fixed amount of land. There suitable elections of officials must be assumed without such a restriction; there all the citizens have equal rights (cp. nn. 440, 885). But nevertheless, as was inferred in the Introd. p. 54 from II. II § 6 (cp. n. 388), there can be hardly any doubt that even in the ideal state Aristotle intends to restrict the activity of the whole body of full citizens to the election of the officials, together with the final decision upon legislation as well as upon questions of war and peace and treaties with foreign states. § 9 35 ἱκανὴν αἴσθησιν] 'sufficiently clear sight' or 'enough discrimination.' The terms αἴσθησις and αἰσθάνεσθαι in Aristotle often go beyond the notion of mere sensation and sense perception to which Plato in the Theaetetus restricts them. Thus αἰσθάνεσθαι = to understand another's command in I 5 § 9 (cp. n. 45 b). Like Plato himself at an earlier time, Phaedr. 271 E, even where the terms express that notion, Aristotle always has in view the discrimination of the sensible individual by sense, the judgment of perception, so that he calls it a discriminating and judging faculty (δύναμις κριτική, cp. n. 497): Anal. Post. II. 15 § 5, 99 b 35, De Anima III. 9. 1, 432 a 15. Thence by a very natural transition he applies these terms to denote the discrimination of the individual and particular generally, and the decision as to what is right and wrong in relation thereto in practical life:—an instinctive process, so to speak, or at all events one which rests merely upon observation and experience, *Nic.  "the whole of the Burgess body in every state which has any degree of excellence":
 and on the basis of this decision, the point which came up at c. 10 § 5 is now settled by the addition of the qualifying clause "but in accordance with the laws," and in such a way that the greater or less degree of excellence and correctness of the laws is determined by that of the constitution to which they correspond.

 This raises the question of the relative merit of the normal constitutions which we proceed to answer in cc. 12, 13: see however Introd. p. 41 f. SUSEM. (578)

In cc. 12, 13 true constitutional principles take a more definite shape. In a note to his Translation, p. 172, Bernays remarks that these two chapters "contain a separate sketch for the discussion of the same questions which are partly treated in cc. 9—11, partly in cc. 16, 17. As the sketch presents some peculiarities, e.g. the mention of ostracism, c. 13 § 15 ff., those who arranged Aristotle's papers thought it ought to be preserved; and the place they assigned to it seemed recommended by the close connexion of its contents with the neighbouring chapters. Where the tautologies thus arising appeared too obvious, the attempt was made to lessen them by formulae like εἰρηται καὶ πρότερον 13 § 1, § 2. According to Aristotle's intention, the beginning of c. 14 should join on directly to the close of c. 11": the reason assigned being that the words φάμεν γὰρ τῶν ὀρθῶν πολιτειῶν μίαν εἶναι ταύτην, 14 § 1, find no connexion at the close of c. 13, but refer back to the words κατὰ τὰς ὀρθὰς πολιτείας of 11 § 22. This view has been already examined, Introd. pp. 42, 43.

§ I n. (1), Nic. Eth. I. 2 § 4, 1094 a 26. SUSEM. (582)

The structure of this sentence is disputed. Scaliger, Bonitz (Arist. Stud. III. p. 94), Spengel treat it as all one period from 14 ἐπεὶ to 22 λαμβάνειν. But this requires δὲ in line 15, whereas δὴ is the reading of III¹.

16 δύναμις] Joined with αἱ τέχναι, II. 8 § 18; so Rhet. I. 2 § 1, ἔστω δὴ ῥητορικὴ δύναμις περὶ ἑκαστον τοῦ θεωρήσαι τὸ ἐνδεχόμενον πιθανόν. τοῦτο γὰρ οὐδεμίᾱς ἐτέρας ἐστὶ τέχνης ἔργον.

ἔστι δὲ...17 δίκαιον] 'The good for the state, i.e. the interest of the commonwealth, can only be justice.' πολιτικὸν ἀγαθὸν is the subject and τοῦτο refers to this: while τὸ δίκαιον, defined in the next sentence, is predicate. See c. 10 § 2 and the references given in n. (562). SUSEM. (583)

It is convenient at this place to reproduce, from Nic. Eth. v. 6 § 4, the fuller account of πολιτικὸν δίκαιον, the embodiment of 'right' or 'justice' in civil society: τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶ κοινωνῶν βίον πρὸς τὸ εἶναι αὐτάρκειαν, ἐλευθέρων καὶ ἴσων ἢ κατ' ἀναλογίαν ἢ κατ' ἀριθμὸν, the justice of free and (proportionately or actually) equal citizens living together with a view to the satisfaction of wants. 33 δεῖ δὲ τῷ κατὰ τὸ ἔργον κτλ] So that the only superiority which constitutes a claim to power is superiority in virtue or capacity for serving the state, to which power is instrumental.

34 καὶ τῶν ὀργάνων τὴν ὑπεροχὴν = the superiority also in instruments i.e. superior instruments as well, just as πλεονεξίαν τῶν αὐλῶν = advantage in respect of flutes.

35 προαγαγούσιν] "if we advance a little further." Intrans. as in Phys. I. 1 § 2, 184 a 19, προάγειν ἐκ τῶν ἀσαφέστερων ἐπὶ τὰ σαφέστερα, Poet. 4 § 7, 1448 b 23, κατὰ μικρὸν προάγοντες. It appears then that αὐτὸ is a nom., as 5 § 4: 'of itself.'

§ 5 38 εἰ καὶ...41 αὐλητικὴν] "even granting that each of them (good birth and beauty) is a greater good than skill with the flute and proportionately superior to flute-playing in a degree far exceeding his superiority as a flute-player, nevertheless we must assign to him the superior flutes." I once conjectured that the text was unsound; but these words give a correct sense if, with Bernays, we understand ἐκεῖνα from what precedes as the subject of ὑπερέχουσι. Riese treats the entire passage 35 εἰ δὲ μήπω δῆλον...1283 a 3 οὐδέν as an interpolation; but he proceeds on the incorrect assertion that the remark 'although flute-playing in itself is something less important than nobility or beauty' has already occurred in the context. See moreover Vahlen Beiträge zu Arist. Poet. II. p. 71 (159)f. SUSEM.

Vahlen is there noticing Aristotle's constant striving after a clearness and precision which to us seems unnecessary, and amongst other instances cites c. 11 § 17 λέγω δὲ...δικαστήν, Rhet. I. 11 § 26, 1371 b 20, ib. III. 2 § 6, 1404 b 32. Vahlen also urges this in defence of καὶ γὰρ ταῦτα τοῦτοις ὑπάρχει in c. 1 § 4 of the present book of the Politics.

Bernays takes <εἰ> καὶ πλείον ὑπερέχει ὅλως ἀρετῇ μεγέθους, εἴη ἂν συμβλητὰ as all belonging to the apodosis: "then, although virtue in itself is more excellent than bodily size, yet a common measure can be found."

8 τοσόνδε γὰρ εἰ κρείττον κτλ] If a cubic inch of gold is superior to a cubic inch of silver, then clearly a certain amount of gold is equal to a cubic inch of silver. But this being impossible in the case where wealth, or bodily strength, competes with virtue, it follows that "in politics as well as (καὶ) the other sciences or faculties (§ 3) it is not every kind of inequality on which men ground their claims to public office, and this for good reason." μέγεθος, except in line 8, = stature, not 'amount.'

§ 8 14 ἀλλ' ἐξ ὧν πόλις συνέστηκεν] But it is on the ground of the elements of which a city is composed that they necessarily contend for state offices, ὡς κατὰ τὸ ἔργον ὑπερέχοντας § 4. Comp. nn. on 7 § 2, 9 § 1; also VI(IV). 8 § 7—9.

17 τίμημα is the rated valuation of taxable property, upon which taxes were levied. Generally speaking, it was greatly below the true, or selling, value. Thus τίμημα φέρειν or ἔχειν = to have property so estimated, to be a taxpayer, because returning a rateable value of property. So in VI(IV). 13 § 2, τοῖς μὲν ἔχουσι τίμημα and τοῖς ἀπόροις are found opposed, and ib. 6 § 2, κτᾶσθαι τὸ τίμημα τὸ διωρισμένον. But in itself τίμημα does not mean taxes.

On the following sentence, 9 εἰ δὴ... 13 ἐξ αὐτῶν, see Introd. p. 43. Thurot Études p. 49 gives a brief analysis of §§ 6—14. Aristotle proposed to investigate what class ought to have power in a state where all sorts of superiority (riches, nobility, virtue, numbers) are represented: and this is his answer: (1) If the virtuous are few, we must inquire whether they are numerous enough to govern the state or to make a state by themselves, § 6. (2) No superiority gives an exclusive right to the exercise of power, §§ 7—10. (3) The best laws are relative to the interest of the whole state and to the great body of the citizens. The citizen is not the same under all governments; under the best government he is the good man, §§ 11, 12. (4) If a single individual, or a handful of men not numerous enough to form a state by themselves, be preeminent for virtue, they cannot be reduced to the level of equality, §§ 13, 14. On this answer Thurot remarks; "the first proposition (1) has nothing to do with the question Aristotle has just raised: it is clear that before he discusses what is to be done with the virtuous few he should prove the right of the virtuous to command. The second, (2), has a direct bearing on the question, of which it is the negative solution. The germ of a positive solution is found in (3), but this solution is not given directly; for Aristotle is handling a difficulty as to the end of the best legislation. In (4) he discusses a particular case analogous to that which is the subject of (1). This analogy and the impossibility of understanding (1) in its present place lead me to suppose that the words εἰ δὴ...ἐξ αὐτῶν should be transposed to come after κατ' ἀρετὴν and before εἰ δὲ τις (1284 a 3). Then there will be a good sequence of ideas."

§ 6 13 ἔστι δὲ ἀπορία.] So 10 § 1 ἀλλὰ ταῦτα πάντα ἔχειν φαίνεται δυσκολίαν.

§§ 7, 8 The refutation of the several claims is not the same as in c. 10, but is a species of reductio ad absurdum by the enforcement on the same ground of the right of the one richest, or noblest, or most virtuous man, or of the strongest group.

§§ 9, 10 πάντα δὴ ταῦτα κτλ] Aristotle here returns to what he has already developed above c. 11, so that the inquiry has not made any real advance. L. Stein (Zeitschrift f. d. g. Staatswissenschaft IX. p. 157) and Hildenbrand (p. 422) are right in maintaining that the negative result which rejects as incorrect all these one-sided claims, is one of the most important passages in the whole work, since it proves most clearly how nearly Aristotle grasped the true conception of a state, as elevated above all particular opposing interests, although he could not quite attain to it, "since the autocratic conception of authority had not been able anywhere in Greece to rise above the conflict of parties to the development of its own activity, and even Aristotle was unacquainted with the only means of elevating it above this conflict, namely, true constitutional monarchy," cp. Introd. p. 44 ff. Hildenbrand rightly remarks in answer to Stein, that it is just this negative result which leads to the positive construction of an ideal state, built upon this foundation. Hildenbrand however has also failed to see that even at this point something more than the mere negative result has been attained, and that one claim at any rate, viz. that of superior merit, is only provisionally rejected, whether it be the case that the excellence of remarkable individuals is superior or inferior to that of the general mass of citizens. Comp. Aristotle's own express statements 17 §§ 5, 6 nn. (680, 681), VIII (v). I § 6 n. (1495): which contain by implication the positive result, that only two forms of government can be the best, viz. those which rest upon the one or the other of the above opposite conditions, an ideal monarchy and an aristocracy. The immediate context §§ 11, 12 shows that Aristotle desires

33 τὸ πλήθος εἶναι βέλτιον τῶν ὀλίγων] This is the thesis which Grote is striving to prove throughout his history, taking the Athenian Demos as his great example. He dwells upon the sacrifices of which it was capable at Salamis and Argennusae, upon its financial honesty, as attested by an undebased coinage, and its wise moderation in the hour of triumph, when after the unparalleled provocations
 of the Thirty it consented to a general amnesty, B.C. 403. The appeals made to the humanity and enthusiasm of the multitude had most chance of success, as the cases of Paches and Diagoras prove.
 Against all this must be set the panic and terror at the time of the mutilation of the Hermae and the hasty condemnation of the generals at Athens, the troubles of Corcyra and Samos, and other occasional outbursts of popular fury like the Scytal-ism at Argos.

1284 a 1 πρὸς δὲ... ἀρετὴν] In the best constitution, the better class (βελτίονες) coincides not merely with the majority but even with the whole mass of citizens: cp IV(VII). 9 § 3; 13 §§ 9, 10; VI(IV). 7 §§ 2–4. Thurot rightly remarks that after the negative answer §§ 5–10 n. (595) to the question first raised in § 4, this paragraph §§ 11, 12 also contains the germs of a positive answer. Indeed, when § 6 is transposed to follow directly upon it, the answer is continued in the context without interruption of the connexion. Thurot is no less right when he observes that this solution is no direct answer to the former questions, but as regards its form is only an answer to the subordinate question of § 11 itself. There is therefore a considerable hiatus after § 12. But Thurot is scarcely correct and clear when he assumes that it can be supplied from §§ 11, 12 if we draw the conclusion that “in a state where there are virtuous men, rich men, nobles, and a mass of citizens, power belongs to all those who have true civic virtue, this being something different from moral virtue not only under an ideal government but everywhere else.” In my opinion, we should rather expect the conclusion that in the best constitution, all citizens ought to have equal rights, and that the true aristocracy is one in which all citizens are provided with sufficient property. But where the excellence (ἀρετῇ) of the few is equal to that of the many, especially if neither exceed a certain amount, in default of other means of satisfying the claims of both parties, either the exercise of full citizenship, or else the merely passive right of being elected to office (11 § 8 n. 569), must depend on a moderate property qualification, and wealth be introduced as a supplementary consideration. Thus, although inferior to aristocracy, this government, i.e. Polity, would still be included among the normal forms, and would in such a case be better than democratic equality. SUSEM. (599)

Or must their fewness be considered relatively to the task; are they competent to administer the city or, in other words, numerous enough to form a city themselves?” Schneider rightly saw that the last sentence contained a single supposition: able to manage the city, because strong enough to form a city by themselves.

5 ἡ πλείους...6 πόλεως] The second and in this kind of calculation it is impossible to decide where to stop adding particular men to the virtuous

 tion varies according to our decision.
 Therefore Aristotle in what follows neglects this case entirely and does not construct from it a 'truest' form of aristocracy beyond and above the true
 one. Comp. c. 17 § 5, 18 § 1 with nn.

Treatment of disproportionate eminence in the imperfect constitutions. §§ 15—23.

Motives of self-preservation lead democracies to resort to Ostracism: §§ 15, 16. This has a counterpart in the execution by violence of eminent citizens which tyrants practise (§§ 17, 18), and in the policy pursued by sovereign states (Persia, Athens) in humbling their subjects, § 19.

Compare Grote's masterly defence of Ostracism: c. 31, IV. pp. 200—212.

§ 15 17 διὸ ... ὀστρακισμόν] It is improbable that this conception of Ostracism is the correct one. It was resorted to rather when two party leaders had each about the same number of followers and thus the machinery of the state was likely to be brought to a dead lock. In such cases, the removal of one converted the other into the leading statesman. This at any rate was the significance of this institution at the best period of the Athenian democracy, although according to Philochoros, Fr. 79 b, it was at Athens originally directed against the followers of the Peisistratidae (μόνος δὲ Ὑπέρβολος ἐκ τῶν ἀδόξων... ἐξ ὀστρακισθῆναι διὰ μοχθηρίαν τρόπων, οὐ δὲ ὑποψίαν τυραννίδος μετὰ τοῦτον δὲ κατελύθη τὸ ἔθος, ἀρξάμενον νομοθετήσαντος Κλεισθέ- νους, ὅτε τοὺς τυράννους κατέλυσε, ὅπως συνεβάλη καὶ τοὺς φίλους αὐτ... Müller Frag. hist. gr. I. p. 397, 3 ff.); and elsewhere too it may have had a similar origin. Thus it is possible that here Aristotle really adheres to the original intention of Ostracism (so Seeliger in Jahrb. f. Philol. CXV. 1877 742, n. 8) though on the other hand in his remarks further on, § 23, there can be no doubt that he refers to its later degeneracy (n. 613). This institution prevailed at Athens from the time of Cleisthenes until the latter half of the Peloponnesian War or even later (n. 613), at Argos, VIII(v). 3 § 3 n. (1509 b), Megara, Syracuse, Miletus, and Ephesus. At Athens the question whether there should be an Ostracism in any particular year was regularly debated and voted on in the popular assembly. If the result was affirmative, a day was fixed for another meeting of the Assembly, at which at least 6000 citizens had to be present: so Fränkel and before him Lugebil On the nature and historical significance of Ostracism at Athens in the Suppl. to the Jahrb. f. Philol. N. S. IV. p. 141 ff. Here every citizen who possessed a vote wrote on a potsherd the name of the person whom he wished to banish, and the man who was thus designated by the majority had to leave Athens within 10 days for a term of ten years, subsequently diminished to five; he might however be recalled before that time by a vote of the Assembly. See Schömann pp. 182, 338, 395 Eng. tr. with Fränkel's corrections op. cit. p. 92 f. n. 1: cp. pp. 14 ff. 52, 80 ff. SUSEM. (603)

One part of the Berlin papyrus, on which hardly decipherable fragments of Aristotle's Ἀθηναίων πολιτεία have been discovered, relates to the establishment of ostracism. 'Aristotle distinguishes two phases in the development of this institution. At first the dread of a restoration of the Peisistratidae prevailed, and (a) relatives or friends of Hippias and Hipparchus were banished. Later on, as a settled institution, it fell upon (b) any who by preponderant influence threatened to become dangerous to democratic equality, such as Aristeides and Xanthippos.' Diels restores ἐπὶ μὲν οὖν Ἐξηκ[εστίδου τοῦ τῶν τυράννων] φίλους ὡστράκισον, μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα τῶν ἀντιπολιτευομένων (?) θαν[ον] τις δὲ σχῆ[μα] μέλ[η] [δ]ύ[ναμι]ν. Pherekydes of Leros (Fr. 67), Antimachos, and Poseidippos also state that Herakles was set on shore because the Argo complained that his weight was too great for her (Schol. on Apoll. Rhod. § 17 28 φασὶ γὰρ τὸν Περιάνδρου] In the account given by Herodotus v. 92, the parts of Periander and Thrasybulos are reversed (Vettori). Aristotle refers to the story again VIII(v). 10 § 13, n. (1669). For the tyrant Thrasybulos of Miletus see E. Curtius II. p. 108 f. Eng. tr., and for the tyrants of Miletus in general VIII(v). 5. 8, n. 1557. Periander, ruler of Corinth probably from 626 to 585, one of the most brilliant and at the same time most tragical figures among the earlier Greek tyrants, was no doubt correctly regarded as one of the first to introduce all those measures which appeared, not without reason, to the Greeks who were contemporaries of Plato and Aristotle, as inseparable from the tyrannis. See VIII(v). 11. 4 n. (1711); also VIII(v). 12. 3 nn. (1751, 1754), VIII(v). 4 § 9, 10 § 16 nn. (1525, 1672): E. Curtius I. p. 250 ff. Eng. tr. SUSEM. (605)

The problem (what to do with men of preeminent merit) is urgent even in the normal state, § 20. Principles of symmetry require that, as in the arts, there should be no disproportionate influence or merit, § 21. This is a frequent cause of revolutions (δὲ ὑπεροχὴν), as is explained VIII(v). 2 §§ 6—8, § 3 (Eaton).

§ 21 8 τὸν ὑπερβάλλοντα πόδα τῆς συμμετρίας] 'a foot that violates symmetry in its size' (the gen. as in § 16, πλωτήρων), 'even if it were of surpassing beauty.' κάλλος adverbial acc., cp. λοιπὰ c. 12 § 2. For the order of the words (hyperbaton) see Vahlen's Arist. Aufsätze II. pp. 41—44. On symmetry, see Metaph. M. 3 § 11, 1078 a 36, τοῦ δὲ καλοῦ μέγιστα εἶδη τάξις καὶ συμμετρία καὶ τὸ ὀρισμένον: this is illustrated in Pol. IV(vii). 4 § 7, Poet. 7 §§ 4—7.

§ 22 The transposition of these words was proposed by Thurot and Bernays (see Introd. p. 83). Bernays renders "Hence this point need not stand in the way of a good understanding between single rulers and the city communities; so far, that is, as their personal rule is useful (also) for the cities and they adopt this procedure." Thus he understands ταῖς πόλεσι to be those which are ruled by μονάρχας. So Postgate (Notes p. 7):—"ταῖς πόλεσιν in both sentences are not 'free states' nor 'dependencies,' but the states governed by the μονάρχαι (notice not τυράννοι)." See note (612).

15 κατὰ τὰς ὁμολογουμένας ὑπεροχάς] Hence in regard to admitted instances of superiority the case for Ostracism possesses a certain political justification, a ground of right.

§ 23 It would be better to frame the constitution so as not to require anything of the sort; failing that, the next best course is to adopt it as a corrective measure. Unfortunately it was used in the cities for factious purposes.

17 βέλτιον μὲν οὖν κτλ] Comp. VIII(v). 3 § 3 n. (1510) where the same recommendation is given, καίτοι βέλτιον ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὁρᾶν ὅπως μὴ ἐνέσονται τοσούτων ὑπερέχοντες, ἢ ἐάσαντας γενέσθαι ἰσθθαί ὕστερον, and c. 8 § 12 n. (1619). SUSEM. (611 b)

13 ὥστε διὰ τοῦτο κτλ] It is only with the gravest misgivings that I have followed Thurot in the transposition of § 22, b 13—15, to this place and in his other by no means simple changes. But I see no other means of obtaining any really consistent connexion, corresponding to the one idea prevalent throughout the whole chapter, namely that the measures taken by Monarchs and Republics rest in this respect on the same principle, and that the same problem must be considered by the true forms of Monarchy and Republic, and not merely by the degenerate ones. Thus in these matters a republic has no advantage over a monarchy; on the contrary the corresponding measures of violence are generally calculated with a view to the maintenance of the monarchy, while it often happens that they are employed in a degenerate republic not for the corresponding purpose, the maintenance of the republic, but without any plan or principle. In this way the connexion is best established. On the other hand it is impossible to fit into any part of the dissertation the idea which Bernays, Postgate, and others find there, that it is rather a question of an agreement between absolute monarchs and their subjects; of absolute rule for the benefit of the latter, and of the banishment of powerful party leaders; with a view to the maintenance of absolute rule and also to the advantage (and therefore with the consent) of the governed. The instance of Pittacus, quoted by Postgate, 14 § 10, is not even appropriate, for it was not as αἰσυνμήτης that Pittacus banished the Oligarchs; on the contrary, it was not till after their banishment that he was elected αἰσυνμήτης by the people in order that he might command them against the exiles who were trying to effect their return by arms and violence. He at length brought about the peaceful return of the exiles, and reconciled the parties to one another. Even this interpretation cannot however be obtained without a transposition, viz. that, as Bernays proposed, § 22, ὥστε...δρῶσιν, be inserted between τρόπον and δῆλον at the end of § 20: these words, if understood in the sense required, cannot retain their present place, as Postgate thinks. For two conclusions, both introduced by particles of inference (ὥστε...διό) cannot possibly follow each other if, as the sense here shows, the second does not follow from the first, but is like the first an inference drawn from preceding premises. Moreover Aristotle nowhere else designates a monarch's subjects as πόλεις; we should rather expect τοῖς ἀρχομένοις or at any rate τοῖς πολιταῖς in both places instead of ταῖς πόλεσιν: and, if the philosopher wished to employ this last expression, at any rate ταῖς ἐαυτῶν πόλεσιν. Besides, in the second place, the insertion of καὶ "also" before ταῖς πόλεσιν would be indispensable for the sense, as Bernays' own translation shows. Still in face of all these difficulties, the question may arise whether it is not advisable, instead of making all these violent changes, to regard the whole passage (which we can easily dispense with) as an interpolation by another hand. SUSEM. (612)

20 ὅπερ οὐκ ἐγίνετο] If Thurot's transposition be approved, this means: "but the free states did not employ Ostracism as a measure beneficial to their government." Without any such change Bernays and others make it refer to the words τοιούτῳ τινὶ διορθώματι διορθοῦν:—it was not used as a corrective.

21 οὐ γὰρ ἔβλεπον κτλ] It is probable that there was often chicanery in the exercise of Ostracism, especially under an absolute democracy. It is said that when it was enforced for the last time at Athens, Alcibiades and Nicias diverted it, contrary to the original intention, to a third person Hyperbolos, and that this led to its disuse. Even if the story in this form is not to be relied on, still it may have become apparent on that occasion how easily a combination of two parties could defeat the true aim of this institution, and turn it against the most zealous of patriots. Indeed there is no evidence that it was ever actually resorted to again at Athens. Cp. Schömann pp. 182, 395 Eng. tr. When the healthy life of parties ceased there, and especially when its surplus strength began to fail the state, and every man of talent was needed at his post, Ostracism proved to be superfluous. When it had been more than once employed in order to remove some person displeasing to the dominant party (Damon Plut. Per. 4., Aristid. 7., Callias Pseudo-Andoc. iv. 32) it disappeared from the frame-work of the Constitution (See-linger). SUSEM. (613)

Summary of results: the removal of eminent men is (a) expedient and just in the interests of perverted constitutions, but (β) not absolutely just. The best state can neither expel such a man of preeminent merit, nor treat him as an ordinary subject. It only remains to make him sovereign, §§ 24, 25.

the fashion to discover in the treatise. From VIII(v). 10 § 8 we learn that the historical origin of the Macedonian monarchy was widely different from this exaltation of one eminent citizen of extraordinary endowments to lifelong sway.

c. 14 Transition to the particular constitutions or forms of the state, the first of which is Monarchy. There are five actual and historical types of single rule: (α) the Spartan king, (β) the oriental sovereign, (γ) the αὐσυνήτης or dictator, (δ) the king in the heroic age: §§ 2—14. To all of these is opposed a distinct type, (ε) that of the absolute sovereign with full powers, § 15.

The last type is alone of value for our inquiry, because, as shown 14 § 25, 17 §§ 7, 8, it is a rare, but quite legitimate, form of the best constitution. See Introd. pp. 44—47, Analys. p. 112 f., and VI(iv). c. 10.

§ 1 36 φαμέν γὰρ τῶν ὀρθῶν πολι-τειῶν] Bernays, Trans. p. 173 n., arguing in favour of his assumption that cc. 12, 13 are an independent sketch, points out that there is no link to connect these words with the foregoing, as the normal constitutions are not mentioned. He therefore prefers to take the clause in direct conjunction with c. 11 § 21, which closes with the words, 'the laws in the normal forms of the state must necessarily be just, but those in the perverted forms not just.' To this it may be replied that there is a mention of the 'normal forms' in c. 13 § 20 (cp. §§ 18, 24, which imply the same antithesis). But it is more important to insist that a merely verbal allusion of the kind, is, after all, indecisive, whereas the discussion of monarchy forms a natural sequel to the result enunciated in c. 13 §§ 24, 25: which, be it observed, answers the question of § 13 and § 6. Indeed Bernays' view would have been more tenable if he had shortened the duplicate version to c. 12, c. 13 §§ 1—12, and had allowed the main thread of the discussion to be resumed at c. 12 § 13, instead of at c. 14 § 1. Comp. Introd. p. 42 n. (3).

38 οἰκῆσθαι] middle, II. 1 § 3.
 πόλει καὶ χώρᾳ] Comp. IV(vii). 6 § 5 χώραις καὶ πόλεσιν. This admits the case of the ἔθνος or nation, and helps us to see that Aristotle would not have allowed Persia or Macedon to rank as a πόλις, although he would have admitted their claim to possess a πολιτεία, and although he calls the subjects πολίτας, § 7. Cp. n. on 12 § 8.

§ 2 1285 a 1 γένῃ] Used indifferently with εἶδος (§§ 5, 6, 8, 11) for 'species' or 'variety': so I. 11 § 5 n., VI(iv). 4 § 8.

καθάπερ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀρχαίων] In general we can observe in the office of the Spartan kings many traces of its descent from the old Greek monarchy of the heroic age. See Schömann p. 227 Eng. tr., Trieber p. 114. SUSEM. (617) So as representing the state in relation to the gods, Her. VI. 57, Xen. Rep. Lac. 13 § 2, 8, 15 § 1. The Spartan state was the early Greek state of the heroic age, barbarically, not scientifically, martial, and from its simple martial organization free. Elsewhere such a state did historically pass into an oligarchy, as the nobles profited by the decline in the power both of the king and of the assembly of warriors. But the peculiar circumstances of Sparta crystallized

(or shall we say fossilized?) this early form, with just so much of modification (Ephors, Helots &c) as sufficed to secure its maintenance.

 the Greeks in older times called αἰσυνμή-ται were, as Theophrastos states in his books on Monarchy, elected tyrants.
 But the states did not elect them for an indefinite period, nor yet regularly, but only during the pressure of misfortunes, as often and for as long a period of time
 as seemed expedient, as e.g. the Mitylenians once elected Pittacus to ward off the attack of the exiles, who followed the poet Alcaeus.' The single expression
 "during the pressure of misfortunes" (πρὸς τοὺς καιροὺς) is, as Krohn shows, thoroughly in the manner of Theophrastos and "so too is the further treatment which undertakes to assign to αἰσυνμητεία its historical position in political development. Originally, he says, there prevailed everywhere in Greece a law-abiding monarchy based on law; but gradually this degenerated into arbitrary rule, and the next step was to a republic.

 But neither did this prove strong enough to uphold law and right, and thus,
 through the pressure of circumstances, (καιροὶ πολλὰ νεοχμούντες) they reverted in reality, though not in name, to the establishment of monarchical powers.

Xerxes is οὐχ ὑπεύθυνος πόλει, Aesch. Persae 213: Pittacus is αἰρετὸς τύραννος. So far they are akin to the rule of an usurper who must rest upon force because he has no legal title to his position. On the other hand they are definitely separated from such rule by having a very good and legitimate title. As Aristotle says they are 'elective and over willing subjects'; or as we should put it, they rest upon the consent of the governed. See n. (634).

The sceptre as an instrument of the oath is always a symbol of office, whether kingly or judicial. Note that while Homer calls the thing sworn by (σκῆπτρον, Zeus VII. 411 &c.) ὄρκος, Aristotle gives the name to the solemn accompanying act.

33 πόλεως...οἰκονομία] It is difficult to see what could have induced Aristotle to describe absolute monarchy not only as dominion over a state, but also to add "and over a nation," where we should at any rate have expected "or" (as M^s gives); and not content with this, even to add "or several nations." Throughout his work he is dealing with the forms of government of a state, not of a nation: (see I. 2. 4 n. 11) and there is nothing in the nature of absolute monarchy, which would justify such an exceptional extension. On the contrary, it appears further on in the work (17 § 1, § 5 n. 677), as has been stated several times already, that the only admissible and possible non-despotic absolute monarchy is that which can be conceived in the ideal state in the exceptional case described in c. 13. The interpolator has been misled by the preceding words ἐκάστου ἔθνους καὶ πόλεως, and has made the mistake into which since his time many modern critics have fallen (see Introd. p. 26 and c. 13 § 13 n. 601, § 25 n. 615, 17 § 5 n. 678), of supposing that this Aristotelian absolute monarchy referred to the Macedonian Empire. Cf. also VI(IV). 10 § 3 and n. (1280). SUSEM. (633)

Doubtless there are some slight indications in the work itself that Monarchy was actually exercised over a wider area than the territory of a single city. But in such cases it seems to be assumed that the rule must be δεσποτική, and the population not yet fully organized for civil society.

c. 15 From this survey it appears that Monarchy is either (1) a special state office, as at Sparta, or (2) Absolute Monarchy, or something intermediate to these two.

Whether it is expedient to have an hereditary or elective commander-in-chief for life, is a question in the theory of legislation: the expediency of Absolute Monarchy is a constitutional question: §§ 1—3. Montesquieu has criticized Aristotle's classification, Esprit des Lois B. XI c. 8, 9.

§ 1 35 αἱ πολλαὶ] The oriental monarchy may be as absolute as the παμβασιλεία; but it is separated from it by the aim and mode of its administration, as δεσποτικὴ ἀρχὴ from οἰκονομικὴ in c. 6 §§ 6, 7. Hence the arbitrary rule of an eastern king is no mere perversion of true monarchy: but because the subjects allow themselves to be enslaved (δουλικώτεροι τὰ ἦθη) they submit to a rule which is primarily for the ruler's advantage (see 6 § 6), and in material results does not greatly differ from tyranny, even as to the four points emphasized c. 14 § 11: (1) the consent of the governed, (2) heredity, (3) legal forms, and (4) the body-guard.

36 ἐλαττόνων μὲν...παμβασιλείας] Of the 'despotic' kings of non-Greek peoples, this is scarcely true. In dealing with Monarchy Aristotle is guilty of the confusion of ideas with which Schwarz right charges him, in Die Staatsformenlehre des Aris. p. 32 f. (Aristotle's Theory of the forms of government, Leipzig 1884): he does not properly distinguish between government in accordance with the laws and the legal (i.e. hereditary) origin of the government. [To the former is opposed any arbitrary or personal government whatsoever, whether it be a tyrant, or the great king, or the citizen of transcendent virtue and merit, who rules all things at his own good pleasure (ἀρχει πάντων κατὰ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ βούλησιν): to the latter is opposed only the usurped rule of the τύραννος.]

To what extent may this also be asserted of the αἰσυμνητεία? Aristotle does not seem to give a sufficient answer to this question. Both, it is true, are founded on law; but though the elevation of the ideal king in a genuine aristocracy is a suspension of the laws, the αἰσυμνητής too, as long as he rules, causes a suspension of the old constitution, and has power to remodel both constitution and laws according to his pleasure. Still the αἰσυμνητής himself governs according to his own laws, while the ideal king may, in each single case, disregard them if he pleases. SUSEM. (634)

The genitive with εἶδος is again explanatory or defining, much as in ἐν ὀργάνον εἶδει, I. 4 § 2. A better example is Rhet. II. 22 § 1, 1395 b 21, ἄλλο γὰρ εἶδος ἑκάτερον (Bekker ἑκατέρου) τοῦτον ἐστίν. Trans. § 3 5 ὁ δὲ λοιπὸς κτλ.] "But the remaining mode of royalty forms one species of constitution; hence it must be examined, and the difficulties which it presents must be briefly reviewed." Without doubt then, the difficulties of cc. 15, 16 concern the λοιπὸς τρόπος, i. e. παμβασιλεία. See nn. on c. 17 § 1. For ἐπιδραμεῖν 'run over,' like ἐπελθεῖν, comp. Rhet. I. 15 § 1, 1375 a 23. The difficulties are collected and partly answered in cc. 15, 16; a decision of some sort is pronounced in c. 17. This is the most confused part of the treatise. The arrangement adopted in the text may be learnt from Introd. pp. 83—86, or in greater detail from Philologus xxv. 1867. pp. 386—392. Its rationale is that the first editor (or publisher) found the discussion imperfect: a lacuna at 16 § 2, 1287 a 10, which he could not fill; three or four supplementary fragments, 16 §§ 4—10, for which he failed to find suitable places in the main discussion; and part of an independent sketch, 16 § 10 (εἰσι δὲ)...§ 13. Hence the changes; c. 16 §§ 4—13 being cut up into four sections and distributed over c. 15, in sequence or juxtaposition to the treatment of related topics there. See Anal. p. 112 f.

First ἀποπλοα: is it expedient to be ruled by the best ruler or the best laws? The passage c. 16 §§ 4—9, on any view of its collocation, manifestly belongs to this question and not to the fifth ἀποπλοα stated in 16 §§ 2—4.

13 μετὰ τὴν τριήμερον...κινδύνῳ] "After the treatment has lasted three days the physician may change it; but if sooner, he does it at his own risk." Herodotos (II. 84) does not mention this, but Diodoros I. 82 § 3 states, without any such limitation, that in Egypt the physicians were paid by the state, and were obliged in their treatment of patients to adhere to a written code, compiled by many of the most celebrated physicians of ancient times. If they acted contrary to prescription, they might be accused of a capital crime (Camerarius). It is not easy to determine which of the readings, τριήμερον or τετρήμερον, is correct. That μελέτην must be understood with τὴν τριήμερον or τὴν τετρήμερον, is proved by Postgate from Pseudo-Hippocrates 817 f τεσσαρακονθήμερον τὴν μελέτην καὶ τὴν ἐπίδεσιν χρὴ ποιεῖσθαι. Herodotos II. 77 relates that the Egyptians who lived in the corn country purged the body for three successive days in each month by means of emetics and clysters. Diodoros § 1 says that the Egyptians sometimes made daily use of these precautionary means of fasting, vomiting and clysters, but sometimes omitted them for three or four days. Neither does this then supply a safe analogy, if indeed there is an analogy at all. SUSEM. (639)

νόμον...νοῦν μόνους] The two versions in which this celebrated passage has come down to us can be traced back to an early date. For Julian had before him (as is clear from his words ad Themist. 261 c d ὁρᾷς, ὁ φιλόσοφος...τέλος ἐπιθεῖς τὸν κολοφῶνα τοῖς ἐμπροσθεν λόγοις νόμον μὲν εἶναι φησι τὸν νοῦν χωρὶς ὀρέξεως) not the version in the text, but another recension, viz. ὁ μὲν οὖν τὸν νοῦν κελεύων ἄρχειν δοκεῖ κελεύειν ἀρχειν τὸν θεὸν καὶ τοὺς νόμους, ὁ δ' ἄνθρωπον κελεύων προστίθῃσι καὶ θηρία· ἥ τε γὰρ ἐπιθυμία τοιοῦτον, καὶ ὁ θυμὸς ἄρχοντας διαστρέφει καὶ τοὺς ἀρίστους ἀνδρας. διόπερ ἀνέν ὀρέξεως ὁ νοῦς νόμος ἐστίν. Yet Codex Vossianus of Julian restores to us the valuable reading τὸν νοῦν μόνους, the corruption of which into τοὺς νόμους is the key to the whole confusion. In the existing manuscripts the two recensions are variously blended and confused. See Julian and Aristotle in the Jahrb. f. Philol. cxvii. 1878 p. 389f. SUSEM.

Trans. 'he therefore who appoints the Law to rule makes none but God and Reason rulers, it would seem; he who

ἥ τε ἐπιθυμία τοιοῦτον, καὶ ὁ θυμὸς] While Plato makes θυμὸς and ἐπιθυμία two different parts of the soul (v. Zeller Plato p. 413 ff.), in Aristotle they are only two subdivisions of the sensitive and appetitive part of the soul (i. 5 § 6 n. 40). They are not however the only ones in the region of desire and aversion, as Häcker seems to assume in his treatise On the division and classification of the moral virtues in the Nicomachean Ethics (Berlin 1863. 4) p. 6 ff., but there is a third subdivision, the Will, βούλῃσι. At any rate Häcker's careful investigation of the difference between them has not attained the right result. He maintains that, according to Aristotle, both are based on the instinct of self-preservation, but that ἐπιθυμία springs from the unpleasant sensation accompanying a want i.e. a stopping of vital activity, θυμὸς on the other hand from the feeling of unpleasantness, aroused by an external limitation of our vital energy; θυμὸς then consists in the reaction that we oppose to this influence, or in our striving to regain the sensation of pleasure in the unimped activity of our natural individuality. But Aristotle does not limit θυμός to external reaction, nor indeed to mere reaction at all. For, in the first place, even if the passage in Nic. Eth. VII. 6. 1 ff. 1149 a 24 ff. was not written by Aristotle himself, but only by some one who (whether directly or indirectly) was his pupil, we may still infer the master's opinion from the pupil's, and assume that in θυμός the idea of displeasure at oneself was not foreign to him. For Anger, Displeasure, Indignation, and on the other hand Courage and Love of Freedom, IV(VII). 7. 2 n. (781), are the principal manifestations of θυμός, indeed θυμός is sometimes actually used for "Anger," sometimes for "Courage." As regards Häcker's second statement, the conception of θυμός in Aristotle is by no means always confined within the limits of mere warding off and rejecting; on the contrary Aristotle thinks IV(VII). 7. 5, n. (786), that the part of the soul whence hatred proceeds may also produce love. Thus it embraces, at any rate in part, what we call "the affections." On this analogy however, Fear should belong to it as well as Courage (Top. IV. 5. 4 126 a 8 f.) but scarcely, as Eaton supposes, all the passions in contrast to Desire. Plato also ascribes to it ambition and love of honour. And it is by no means as certain, as Häcker and Brandis (Gr.-

Röm. Phil. III i p. 140) suppose, that Aristotle was of an entirely different opinion. In a pamphlet entitled ὁ θυμός apud Aristotelem Platonemque P. Meyer has not been more fortunate than Häcker in his account of the Aristotelian distinction between θυμός and ἐπιθυμία and Aristotle's conception of both; and the matter is no clearer than before. Compare Susemihl in Bursian's Jahresber. 1876, v. p. 264 ff.; also III. 10. 5 with n. (562 b) and notes 182, 790, 839, 935, 1704, 1741. SUSEM. (641)

(2) The analogy of the 'arts' is misleading; for there (e.g. in medicine) personal motives do not come in: §§ 6, 7. In Nic. Eth. II. 4 §§ 2, 3 he points out that the [Socratic] analogy of the arts and moral conduct is seriously defective.

See Cope Introd. to the Rhetoric pp. 239—244. He shows that τὸ ἐπικεῖς, Equity, is a special application of κοινὸς νόμος, which as universal law, or the law of nature, is opposed to positive, conventional and written laws; that both κοινὸς νόμος and τὸ ἐπικεῖς are designated unwritten law, ἀγραφα νόμιμα, Rhet. c. 15 § 5 1286 a 20 ἀλλ' ἴσως ἂν φαίη τις...κάλλιον] "But perhaps some one will say that to compensate for this [a human ruler] will be better able to advise on particular cases." This sentence evidently belongs to the first ἀπορία, advocating like c. 15 § 4 the claims of the human ruler, though in a modified manner. But the words following in the mss, c. 15 § 6, are in no definite logical connexion; so that translators are at a loss to make any intelligible sequence, Jowett for instance inserting [to whom we in turn make reply:] after this sentence, though he does not propose to insert ἀλλὰ πρὸς τοῦτο ἀντιθετέον before the ὅτι or to omit the τοίνυν after it: while Bernays translates "to this objection one might perhaps reply &c.," and separates off the next sentence by a break.

c. 16 §§ 4, 5 1287 a 23—28 This is at any rate a valid objection to the modified view just proposed, and is clearly still concerned with the first ἀπορία. "But yet in any cases where the law seems unable to decide, a man would equally be unable. Whereas the law gives a suitable training and then sets the magistrates to decide and manage all other matters 'to the best of their judgment.'"

27 ἐπανορθοῦσθαι] “and allows them

ἐπανορθοῦσθαι...κειμένων is quite accidental.

On behalf of the place here assigned to
c. 16 §§ 4, 5, 1287 a 23—28 it may be urged (1) that the plurals (τοὺς ἄρχοντας, πειρωμένοις) are not appropriate to the transition from the first to the second ἀπορία, and (2) that only in this way do the words ἀλλὰ μὴ κυρίους ἢ παρεκβαίνουσι become intelligible.

c. 15 § 6 Transition to the second ἀπορία. If it be allowed that there is sufficient, should it be supplemented by the one best citizen as ruler, or by the ἐκεῖ δ' ἔργον...ἁμαρτεῖν] This is hardly correct. A large assembly is more likely to be led into over-hasty conclusions than a single capable man and ruler. Still it is true that in the case of a large assembly, the passion does not generally last so long; and they more easily regain composure; while a single ruler, if once misled by inclination or hatred, may easily confound obstinacy and stubbornness with energy, so that there is greater danger that he will misuse his unlimited power. c. 16 §§ 9, 10 1287 b 8—15. The place of this fragment is vindicated by the congruence between its subject-matter and the foregoing. The contrast is still between ὁ εἰς and πλείους.

The one ruler cannot overlook all things himself: he must appoint a number of officials; so that the state of things is virtually the same as if there were a number [i.e. a large body of the citizens] ruling.

If we followed the manuscript order we should have to translate: "Lastly, as was remarked before, if the virtuous man deserves to rule because he is superior": but then it would follow that the apodosis (τοῦ δὲ ἐνὸς...βελτίους) also occurred in the preceding chapters. But in the two passages which alone are conceivable and to which Bernays refers us c. 11 §§ 1—3 and 12 § 9, 13 § 1 we do not find this, but something really quite different and only comparatively similar. Or could it have occurred in the lacuna which we assume after 13 § 5? This is hardly likely. We must therefore transpose thus; "if, as was previously remarked, the virtuous man &c." SUSEM. (649) would have been highly desirable to adjust this second reason to the first.

 For if monarchy is traced back on the one hand to the government of a community by its elders, and on the other to personal merit, the two causes cannot simply be at once combined, though a partial combination is not only conceivable, but even right. Aristotle however has neglected to make it, and has thus left a difficulty unsolved. For when Henkel writes Stud. p. 95, ‘but even in places where the original connexion between the state and the organization of the family no longer exercised a determining influence, it was only monarchy that grew up in the beginnings of civilization,’ adducing the second reason to explain this, he is quite right, but unfortunately there is nothing of the kind in Aristotle. See also VIII(v). 10. 3 n.

12 § 14 has a hostile criticism of Plato, who accounts for the transition from Timocracy to Oligarchy in precisely the same way (Schlosser). See iii. (1767, 1777). SUSEM. (661)

18 εἰς ἐλάττους ἄγοντες] Here τὰς ὀλιγαρχίας or τὴν ὀλιγαρχίαν must be supplied as object from what precedes. Henkel however would insert τοὺς ὀλίγους or τοὺς πλουσίους in the text and translate: "while the powerful" (viz. the tyrants) "from disgraceful avarice continued more and more to thin the ranks of the rich." But then there would be no justification for the development of Tyranny out of Oligarchy, and it would appear as though the people had only risen against the tyrants, and not against the oligarchs. It is true that if we keep to the received text, the passage is somewhat obscure through its brevity, but other passages quoted by Henkel himself supply the necessary explanation. The oligarchies were constantly tending to develop into the rule of single families (II. 10 § 13 n. 371) by the exclusion of more and more families from power, and those who were excluded went to strengthen the commons, which took its leaders from among them; for the δῆμος in spite of its hatred for the rich, living as it did "dispersed over its farms and isolated," VIII(v). 5 § 8 n. (1558), stood in need of leaders. But for this very reason there was first a transitional state of things, viz. the tyranny of these same leaders; and afterwards when the people grew stronger the tyrants were banished, and a democracy arose. SUSEM. (662)

§ 13 20 ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ μείζους κτλ] Comp. § 11, VI(IV). 6 § 5 n. (1225), 13 § 10 (1272), § 11; VII(VI). 5 § 5 (1435), 6 § 5 (1448—9), also VI(IV). 12. 3 n. (1310). Beside this increase in the population Aristotle quotes as additional factors the development of cities, VIII(v). 5 §§ 8, 9, comp. iii. (1558—9), and VIII(v). 10 § 5 n. (1650): the military organization of the people, which if trained to serve as light infantry would easily hold its own against cavalry and heavy infantry, VII(vi). 7. 2, and the development of the navy, ib. iii. (1453—5) (Henkel). SUSEM. (663)

21 ἴσως οὐδὲ ῥάδιον κτλ] "Nowadays hardly any form of government, except democracy, can easily arise." Kingly rule in particular is not to be expected; if a monarchical constitution arises at all, it is in the form of τυραννίς, VIII(v). 10 § 37; cp. VIII(v). 5 §§ 6—8 (Henkel) with n. (1708). SUSEM. § 2 There is a manifest lacuna after line 10 ὁ βασιλεὺς; the omission of δέ in the citation by Julian is one attempt to conceal it, as the change to δῆ is another.

For instead of extending to παμβασιλεία the fourth ἀπορία (which in 15 §§ 15, 16, 1286 b 34—40, received an easy solution in respect of limited monarchy) the text goes on to raise an entirely new problem, ἀπορία (5); viz. Is not the rule of one an unnatural anomaly when all are peers (ὅμοιοι)? Is it not natural that power should pass from hand to hand (ἀνὰ μέρος) and be vested in officials, whose functions are arranged by law? Thus by the mention of law the fifth difficulty brings us round again to the first,—a circumstance in itself quite unexceptionable, though it is no doubt responsible for the collection here of the various fragments §§ 4—13 which bear more or less closely upon the first and second ἀπορίαι.

23 ἀλλὰ μὴν κτλ.] "In order to bring this passage 1287 a 23—28, as it stands, into logical connexion with the preceding fifth ἀπορία, it will be necessary to regard it not as an objection to the view therein expressed, but as introducing a new objection to a ruler who goes beyond the letter of the law: ἀλλὰ μὴν=but again, as in 1262

b 24, 1287 b 8. Yet the next sentence, a 25—27, allows that within certain limits the one ruler is really in a position to make such decisions, and speaks of rulers in the plural. Hence there can be no question here of attacking or defending monarchy, and besides all the ἀπορίαι are alike in treating absolute monarchy unfavourably. It would still be open to us to read ὁ δ' with Aretinus instead of οὐδ', a 24; but if that were done ἀλλὰ in the next line would not be in place: Ar. omits it and we should rather expect διὸ or ὥστε or something of that sort." SUSEM.

28 ὁ μὲν οὖν] "It is not to be denied that, if the preceding passage 1287 a 23—28 be transposed, this passage 1287 a 28—b 8 might quite well follow the fifth ἀπορία, so far as the connexion of thought goes. But the form renders this impossible. The fact that law is passionless is not an inference that can be drawn from the natural injustice of a permanent ruling body: so that οὖν will not stand as 'therefore.' Nor will it suit as a transitional particle, without something else, καὶ or ἔτι δε." SUSEM.

6 πρῶτον δὲ...15 ἀρχάς] Krohn is right in objecting to the meaningless tautology in the definition of the peoples suited to monarchy or aristocracy. It is even worse that aristocracy is here described in a manner which, although it does not directly contradict Aristotle's conception, still by no means exhausts it, and therefore does not render it faithfully. It is indeed essential that a true aristocracy should possess citizens who are capable enough always to elect the most capable persons to office. But it is as essential to this ideal aristocracy, that these persons should only hold their offices for a certain time, and then be replaced by persons not inferior in capacity, so that there is a perpetual interchange of rulers and ruled. And it is yet worse to find the people suited for a monarchy represented as different from that suited for aristocracy, although according to the genuine teaching of Aristotle, the true monarchy and the true aristocracy are only possible with the same people, viz. that of the ideal state (13 § 24 n. 614, see Introd. p. 44). For this very reason, we would not translate above at 17 § 1 “for some people monarchical government is naturally suitable, for others the true Republican government”—but rather: “under some circumstances the one, and under others the other.” But the interpolator, like many modern critics, misunderstanding the passage adopted the former meaning, and so it seemed to him necessary to interpolate here an exact account of each kind of people. When the passage is rightly interpreted, the incorrectness of this interpolation at once becomes manifest. While c. 17 § 5 is closely connected with καὶ πρότερον... (§ 3) the intermediate §§ 3, 4 disturb this connexion entirely. In its present form the definition of the people suited to a Polity is quite un-Aristotelian, whether we adopt the reading εὐπόροις or ἀπόροις ; the former gives a mixture of aristocracy and oligarchy, the latter a monstrous combination of aristocracy and democracy, while the Aristotelian Polity is a compromise between oligarchy and democracy. Yet this mistake seems too bad even for this interpolator, and we ought perhaps to adopt Stahr's conjecture τοῖς εὐπόροις <καὶ τοῖς ἀπόροις> which would remove the difficulty. SUSEM. (677)

§ 4 12 πολιτικὸν δὲ πλῆθος κτλ.] If we adopt the very probable change of the second πλῆθος into ἡθος, the sense is: “And the population suited for a Polity is that in which there is naturally a warlike character (ἡθος), qualified to be rulers as well as subjects in accordance with a law which assigns the offices of state in accordance with their merits to the rich (& the poor).” If this change be not made, the sentence will be differently rendered according as the second πλῆθος is regarded (1) as mere redundancy (Postgate Notes p. 25), or (2) as used in a different sense from the first: i.e. as meaning ‘body,’ ‘class’ within the entire civic population. Bernays, while adopting this latter view, makes δυνάμενον...ἀρχάς refer to the first πολιτικὸν πλῆθος: which seems inconsistent. If ‘the population suited to Polity’ were ‘one in which a warlike class naturally arises,’ it should merely be this class and not the population generally ‘in which an interchange of ruling and being ruled can be carried into effect.’ SUSEM.

This chapter is of first-rate importance for the question of the order of Books IV (VII), V(VIII), because it enables us to decide whether the best (i.e. the ideal) state in its normal form is or is not identical with the ὀρθὴ πολιτεία Aristocracy: a point which Forchhammer (Philol. xv. p. 56 ff.) and Bendixen (Philol. xiv. p. 293 ff. Der alte Staat des Aris. p. 66 ff.), defending the traditional order of the books, denied. Their objections are examined by Spengel Arist. Studien II. p. 60 (652) f.

At the end of this chapter in the manuscripts and in the editions (down to and including Bekker's quarto) is appended the unfinished sentence ἀνάγκη δὴ τὸν μέλλοντα περὶ αὐτῆς ποιήσασθαι τὴν προσήκουσαν σκέψιν. It was Spengel's great merit, Ueb. Arist. Pol. p. 17 ff., Arist. Stud. II. p. 60 (652) ff., to recognize in this imperfect sentence a transition to the discussion of the ideal state, dating back from the time when that discussion immediately followed the present chapter, and consequently evidence of an older order of the books than that adopted by the compilers of our present text (? Andronicus). See Introd. p. 17, p. 47 f.

EXCURSUS I.

ON THE CLASSIFICATION OF CONSTITUTIONS, POLITIES, OR FORMS OF GOVERNMENT. III. 7. 1.

On the development of the theory of the different forms of government before Aristotle see especially Henkel Studien p. 38 ff., Oncken II. p. 139 ff. From Herodotos III. 80—82 we learn that the Athenians of the Periclean age used to distinguish three forms only, but with tolerable definiteness and clearness of view; the rule of the people, for which Herodotos nowhere as yet uses the term democracy; Oligarchy i.e. the rule of a picked association of the best men; and Monarchy. Thus Oligarchy means here what was in later times called Aristocracy, after that 'during the Peloponnesian war,' as Henkel says, 'men endeavoured to win credit for party efforts by well sounding names (Thuc. III. 82): afterwards the Socratics used the term with great predilection as a word of good omen, τὴν εὐώνυμον ἀριστοκρατίαν, Plato Politic. 302 D.' Lastly the terms Monarchy, Kingship, Tyrannis, are found in Herodotos as yet undistinguished side by side. Considerable progress is shown in the masterly descriptions of the Athenian and Spartan governments and their points of contrast by Thucydides, in Pericles' Funeral Oration and elsewhere; there indeed the Athenian constitution is already called a democracy. But it was Socrates who first prepared the way for the more subtle distinctions to be found in Plato and Aristotle. He divided the monarchical constitutions into kingships and tyrannies, and the oligarchies into aristocracies and plutocracies (governments of wealth). He took as the criterion for kingship the government of the prince in accordance with the laws and the willing obedience of the people; for tyranny, the arbitrary rule of the prince and the coercion of the people; for aristocracy, the appointment to the magisterial offices of men from among the number of those who are most law-abiding¹ as at Sparta (Xen. Mem. III. 5. 14—16: IV. 4. 15, cp. De Rep. Lac. 10. 7, Plato Crito 92 E); for plutocracy, their appointment by a property qualification, Xen. Mem. IV. 6. 12, cp. I. 2. 41—45. Here already is the germ of the distinction found in Plato and Aristotle between normal constitutions and the perverted forms corresponding to them. Yet the principle of law-abiding rule and willing obedience (and their opposites respectively), which Socrates followed, is carried out clearly in the case of the monarchical constitutions only. Plutocracy, thus defined, does not present any such sharp antithesis to Aristocracy, although the mere wealth of the rulers in the one case, and their excellence and obedience to the laws in the other offer a strong contrast of a similar kind¹. In democracy he made no such distinction at all: he merely defined it by the fact that the appointment to the offices of state is open to all; and certain statements by him lead to the inference that in general he regarded it as a perverted form (Xen. Mem. III. 7. 5 f., I. 2. 9, cp. I. 2. 58 f., III. 9. 10).

Plato follows in his master's footsteps most closely in his Politicus, strange to say, for from the most recent investigations it follows that this is in all probability not his earliest exposition. But the principle which Socrates had already laid down, that the excellence of a man and of a ruler is only conferred by conceptual knowledge, is there put into serious application by the exaltation of reason above the law. He declares the most perfect constitution to be the rule of the wise man unfettered by legal restraint, so far as it can actually be realized. Next, after dismissing this ideal state, he carries out completely the Socratic opposition between states governed by laws and those which are subject to arbitrary rule, at the same time showing a correct appreciation of the numerical standard² which, though in itself something external, nevertheless involves essential intrinsic differences. Thus he distinguishes not only between Kingship and Tyrannis, Aristocracy and Oligarchy (which latter name he employs instead of Socrates' Plutocracy), but also between Democracy governed by law, or moderate Democracy, and arbitrary or unrestrained Democracy. But it is quite a novelty when he undertakes to determine precisely the order of merit of these constitutions, reversing this order in the two classes of constitutions, (1) those where the laws are respected and (2) those where they are not; so that the former are less bad, the latter less good according as the number of the rulers increases.

With this the older account given in the Republic so far agrees that here also Tyranny is depicted as the worst of all constitutions and Democracy and Oligarchy as coming next to it. But while in the Politicus arbitrary Democracy is, as we have said, represented as more tolerable than Oligarchy, in the Republic on the contrary Democracy ranks below Oligarchy, and nothing is said about recognizing a good Democracy or Oligarchy along with the bad forms. Instead of this, Aristocracy, the name given in the Politicus to Oligarchy where the laws are respected, is here reserved for the ideal state itself and this Aristocracy is in its real and essential nature placed on a par with true Monarchy: cp. Zeller Plato p. 469 Eng. tr. But to make up for this, between the only good constitution of the Republic and the three wholly bad ones an intermediate form is inserted, a constitution after and that Socrates reverts to the superficial view which bases a distinction simply on the number of rulers.

² That is, the distinction between government by one man, a few, or a multitude: Plato Polit. 219 D f., 302 C.

the fashion of Sparta and Crete, for which Plato invents the new name Timocracy (rule of honour) because he regards its intrinsic principle as being ambition and the love of honour. We may conjecture that this is partly due to the views of those theorists who originated the doctrine of the mixed constitution and discovered such a combination in Sparta and Crete (II. 6. 17 with n. 219, cp. also Introd. p. 20): for Plato in the Republic does not simply describe Timocracy as a constitution intermediate between Aristocracy and Oligarchy, he expressly says it is a combination of elements of both, of good and bad: IX 544 f., 547 D ff.

Lastly, it was pointed out in the notes on II. 6 §§ 17, 18 that he shews himself very distinctly influenced by these theories in the last of his works, the Laws, where he himself sketches a wholly new and improved form of such a mixed constitution (cp. also n. 191 on II. 6. 4). Thus forms of government are now divided by him into mixed or moderate and pure or unlimited; the latter he represents as merely governments of faction or party in the one-sided interest of the ruling power. This division in the main coincides with that followed in the Politicus, except that it is not stated in the Laws whether Oligarchy or absolute Democracy is regarded as the less bad: nor whether unlimited Monarchy, otherwise called Despotism or Tyrannis, is still regarded as the most intolerable constitution of all. But in any case he no longer assigns to limited or constitutional Monarchy the same high place as in the Politicus, where it ranks not only above moderate Democracy but even above Aristocracy: nor does he make Kingship and Aristocracy identical, as in the Republic. It would appear as if he placed limited Democracy before limited Monarchy rather than in the reverse order: at least he apparently sets both on an equality in merit, but certainly ranks mixed Aristocracy before them both: for if we adopt his own terminology we may thus describe the pattern state of the second rank sketched in the Laws, since he uses the term Aristocracy III 701 A in the sense of a 'government by the best,' although in III 681 D it means a government by nobles, while in the decisive passage IV 712 CD it is employed in such a way that one does not rightly see whether that is still its meaning or what it is that Plato understands by "Aristocracy." We may however conjecture that it is at any rate a government by certain families in which special excellence is really hereditary. It may be seen from Aristotle (III. 7. 3, VI(IV). 7. 1, Nic. Eth. VIII. 10. 1—cp. n. 1230) that the champions of a mixed constitution before Plato's time gave it the common name Πολιτεία, Constitution or Commonwealth in general: evidently (a) because, as a combination of several or indeed of all constitutions with one another, it is so to speak the all-comprehensive constitution or the constitution par excellence; or else (b) because as in their opinion the best constitution it seemed alone deserving of the name, or it may be (c) for both reasons. This name is retained by Aristotle, yet with the remark in the Ethics I. c. that the more correct term would be Timocracy, which however he applies to it in a sense different altogether from that in which Plato coined the expression, to mean the rule of the census or property-qualification, i.e. the rule of a moderate property-qualification. Comp. III. 7. 4 n. (537), VI(IV). 9. 3 n. (1254), VI(IV). 13. 7 n. (1269).

Aristotle for his part follows very closely, as he himself remarks VI(IV). 2. 3 (cp. nn. 1139, 1140), the view presented by Plato in the Politicus, except that he replaces law-abiding Democracy by Polity and adheres firmly to the distinction between law-abiding or moderate Oligarchy and Democracy and their opposites, a distinction which with special reference to the Athenian state was certainly the common property of educated Athenians, even before Plato, in the form of the antithesis between the 'old fashioned' and the 'modern' Democracy—II. 12 §§ 2, 4, cp. VI(IV). 6 § 5, 14 § 7, §§ 11, 12: VII(VI). 4 §§ 1, 2; 5 §§ 3, 4. VIII(V). §§ 10 and n. (406)—which Isocrates, in particular, is fond of using¹. Hence follows the essentially original addition made by Aristotle to the Greek classification of forms of government, which he expressly claims as original VI(IV). 1 §§ 8—11 (cp. n. 1126, also VI[IV]. 2 § 4 n. 1140 b, VII[VI]. 1 § 7 n. 1383 b, VIII[V]. 12 § 18 n. 1787), namely the accurate analysis of the principal forms of constitution, Oligarchy and Democracy in particular, into their sub-species, and the estimate of the comparative merit of the latter, which leads him to assume not simply two but more exactly four forms of Democracy and Oligarchy from the most moderate and law-observing species, which resemble Polity, down to the most unbridled and corrupt, which resemble Tyrannis, VI(IV). c. 4 f, VII(VI). cc. 4—7. Thus in contrast to Plato's procedure in the Politicus and the Laws he certainly regards even the first and most law-observing of these forms as already a degeneration, though it stands still very near to Polity. But even amongst the mixed forms he employs a more exact mode of distinction, particularly to delimitate spurious or mixed Aristocracies from Politics, the name of Aristocracy in its proper distinctive sense being reserved for what is really and truly such, Aristocracy pure and unmixed, the best constitution in the absolute sense: VI(IV). 7 §§ 2—4, 8 § 9, cp. 2 § 1 n. (1133), § 4 (1141); II. 6. 17 (218), IV(VII). 11. 5 (849), also n. (536) on III. 7. 3: for which an ideal Monarchy as the best form of all is at least conceivable: III. c. 13 nn. (595, 597, 601), c. 17 nn. (677, 678); VI(IV). 2 § 1 f nn. (1133, 1136—7), 10 § 4 n. comparing nn. (521) on III. 6. 1, (614) on III. 14. 24, (633) on III. 14. 2. But this, the only Monarchy which has any justification in the developed state, is not tied down to laws but is absolutely unqualified. Comp. Introd. p. 44 ff. The same sketch of the various constitutions had already been given by Aristotle, without specifying the sub-species, in the Nic. Eth. VIII. 10. 1—3:² indeed he had probably expounded it still earlier in one of his dialogues. For it is assuredly probable, if not certain, that when Isocrates, who is trying to maintain the old threefold division into Monarchy, Oligarchy and Democracy, as found in Herodotos³, makes a hit at those who, caring little for essential points, regard Democracy blended with Aristocracy, and Timocracy in the sense of government by property qualification, as separate forms (Panath. §§ 131—133), he is attacking Aristotle. But Isocrates is not referring, as Henkel p. 46 n. 25 thinks, to the Ethics, which at that time unquestionably was not yet published¹; nor is there anything said in the Ethics about a combination of Aristocracy and Democracy at all, much less as a special constitution.

² The divergences which Oncken, p. 158 ff. believes he has discovered rest upon misapprehensions.

Van der Rest p. 415 f, criticizing the principle of classifying constitutions as normal and perverted which had been inherited by Aristotle from Socrates and Plato, says not without some reason : la science ne peut admettre une classification des gouvernements qui s'appuie, non pas sur le principe même ou l'organisation des divers gouvernements, non pas sur leurs différences intrinsèques, mais sur la manière dont usent du pouvoir ceux qui en sont revêtus, sur les qualités morales dont ils font ou non preuve dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions, c'est à dire sur quelque chose de tout à fait en dehors des constitutions mêmes. However there is always this difference ; that certain constitutions by their essential organization may be adapted either to prevent such misuse, or on the other hand to call it into existence, sometimes indeed to render it inevitable. How else could the distinction between a despotism and a really free government be maintained? And is there not a difference in the 'principle of the constitution itself' between a constitution which really favours the rule of the masses and one which distributes power wisely? The conception of Plato and Aristotle may be untenable in this form, but there is something true underlying it. SUSEM. (533)

EXCURSUS II.

PITTACUS: III. 14. 10.

In regard to the life of Pittacus, all that we either know with certainty, or may with some probability conjecture, amounts to very little, as Töpffer more particularly has recently shown in his Quaestiones Pisistratae pp. 81—107

¹ Heitz in his continuation of K. O. Müller's History of Greek Literature, Geschichte der griech. Litt. II ii p. 281 f. (cp. p. 245) is certainly of opinion that the Nicomachean Ethics owes its origin, in part at least, to pupils' notes of lectures delivered by Aristotle during Plato's lifetime in the Academy: but see, as against this, Susemihl in Philologischer Jahresbericht XLII. 1886, p. 4 f. Another possibility, which occurred to Oncken II p. 160 f., is however by no means excluded: —if, that is, on other grounds we really must assume with Teichmüller and Bergk that the polemic of Isocrates in the Panathenaicus §§ 16—34 is directed against Aristotle and his friends, and that consequently after Plato's death Aristotle paid a second visit to Athens from 344 to 342 B.C. and lectured there in the Lyceum on rhetoric and poetry (see Susemihl Jahresber. xxx. 1883 p. 4 ff.). For this would make it at least possible that his lectures extended to ethics, and that Isocrates was informed of the subject-matter of these ethical lectures, and thus came to attack the part of them treating of politics in §§ 131—133 of the same pamphlet (the Panathenaicus). But we do not require such an altogether uncertain hypothesis, and therefore it would be better, I take it, to abstain from it.

(Dorpat, 1886). He is said to have been allied to the Lesbian nobility through his wife, who was descended from the once princely house of the Penthilidae, VIII(V). 10. 19 n. (1681); but on the father's side he was not of Lesbian, but of Thracian descent (Duris Frag. 53 in Diog. Laert. I. 74, Suidas). Yet whilst still in his vigorous manhood he attained great reputation. Mitylene was at that time torn with factions and Pittacus' first political act seems to have been to bring about the fall of the tyrant Melanchros with the aid of the nobles, or at least that party of them which was headed by Antimenides and Kikis the brothers of Alcaeus the poet. Perhaps this also contributed to his election by the Mitylenaeans (presumably not long afterwards) to be their general in the war with the Athenian immigrants into the Troad, who under the leadership of Phrynon had conquered the Mitylenaeon colony Sigeion. In this campaign, which proved disastrous to the Mitylenaeans, Alcaeus also took part. No mention is made of him on occasion of the expulsion of Melanchros, although according to Aristotle's statement here he was afterwards chosen as the leader of the exiled nobles along with Antimenides. He himself describes his flight after a battle with the Athenians, in a poem addressed to his friend Melanippos (Fr. 32 in Herod. v. 95, Strabo XIII. p. 600). The statement that Pittacus slew Phrynon in single combat (Strab. XIII. 600, Plut. De Herod. malign. c. 15, Diog. Laert. l.c., Suidas) is very suspicious, as Töpffer has shown: probably it did not originate long before Strabo's time. At last peace was concluded in accordance with the decision of Periander, the tyrant of Corinth, and the Athenians retained Sigeion (Herod. and Strabo ll. cc., Apollodoros Fr. 78 in Diog. Laert. l.c., Töpffer p. 86 ff.). But there was no cessation of the intestine feuds, in which Alcaeus largely increased his renown as a poet by the composition of his "Faction songs," στασιωτικά, as they are called (Strab. XIV. p. 617). The tyranny of Myrsilos, whose death Alcaeus celebrated in one of his poems, Frag. 20, probably falls within this period, although Strabo mentions him before Melanchros. At length the nobles themselves were banished, and when the exiles threatened to commence an attack, Pittacus was chosen Aesymnetes. He victoriously repulsed the invaders, taking Alcaeus prisoner; but he pardoned him (Heraclitus in Diog. Laert. I. 76, Diod. IX. 20) and permitted Antimenides also to return. He issued a general amnesty, and though he authorized a new division of the land he introduced no changes at all into the constitution, but only into the laws and courts of justice (see II. 12 § 13 n. 429). So completely was peace restored that several years before his death he was able to lay down his office.

The fixed dates in his biography which are given, from the same original source, most fully in Diog. Laert. I. 75, 79 and in Suidas, are based upon very arbitrary calculations. Nothing more was known about Pittacus and Alcaeus than what tradition and the poems of the latter had to tell about them, and that of course furnished very uncertain starting points for chronology. The only trustworthy date established by written evidence was due to the fact of Phrynon having previously won a victory at the Olympic games (viz. according to Julius Africanus, in 636), so that his name stood on record in the corresponding list of victors. If I am right in my conjecture, he was reckoned as being 25 years old at that time and 50 when he conquered Sigeion, and Pittacus as being about ten years younger: hence the floruit (ἀκμή) of the latter, i.e. his fortieth year, perhaps also the beginning of the Sigeian war, was placed in the 42nd Olympiad; more precisely Ol. 42, 2=611 B.C., which would make his birth fall in Ol. 32, 2=651. To the same 42nd Olympiad, but somewhat earlier probably, was next assigned the fall of Melanchros. Those who wanted to bring in the single combat with Phrynon placed it half a decade later than the outbreak of the war, i.e. as Eusebius in the Armenian translation attests, Ol. 43, 3=606¹. Now counting two decades from 611 we arrive at 591; and as it was important that two events which followed at no long interval, viz. the expulsion of the nobles and Pittacus' appointment to be Aesymnetes, should be fixed here, a year earlier, 592, was chosen for the one (the Parian Marble, Ep. 36 as restored by A. Schöne 'Researches into the life of Sappho' in Symb. phil. Bonn. p. 755 ff.), and a year later, 590, for the other. Just as arbitrary was the assignment of ten years to Pittacus' tenure of office and ten years more to the remainder of his life (Diog. Laert. i. 75), whereby the year of his death became exactly Ol. 52, 3=570, and he was made to live just over 80 years, or between 80 and 81 (Laert. Diog. i. 79, where ἔβδομήκοντα must obviously be altered to ὀγδοήκοντα). Now this whole calculation in round numbers, decades and half-decades, may still be approximately correct; but it is quite possible that mistakes of more than ten years have crept in. Hence we must be contented, e.g. to place the Sigeian war in the latter part of the seventh century, some time after 636. Nor can we decide whether Alcaeus was younger than Pittacus, nor, if he was so, by how many years. About Antimenides we learn further, from a poem of Alcaeus addressed to him, of which the beginning has been preserved (Fr. 33), that he served in the Babylonian army. This must certainly have happened after his banishment which, though quite possibly previous to 592, can hardly have been earlier than 605; hence we are obliged to reject the conjecture of Otfried Müller that he took part in the battle of Carchemish, B.C. 605; see his essay, 'A brother of the poet Alcaeus fighting under Nebuchadnezzar,' in Rhein. Mus. for 1827, pp. 287—296. Müller's only reason on the other side, viz. that at the later date he would have been too old, is not valid; for there is nothing to contradict the supposition that he was a man of about fifty, or a little over, in 590. Possibly Pittacus himself was no older in that year; for we must be content to place his birth somewhere about 650—640, and that of Alcaeus still more vaguely, somewhere about 650—630. Hence Duncker is nearer the truth when he remarks op. cit. vi. p. 281; "Antimenides may have taken part in Nebuchadnezzar's Syrian campaigns, or in his conflicts with Pharaoh with a full stop, in place of a comma, after ἀνείλε. If this be done, Suidas does not contradict Eusebius. This too has been correctly remarked by Töpffer p. 55 f.

Hophra, or in the taking of Jerusalem." Moreover, as Alcaeus himself tells us that he reached Egypt (Fr. 106 in Strabo i. p. 37), which was no doubt during his exile, it would appear that he at any rate was exiled for several years. SUSEM. (626) Cp. now Rhein. Mus. XLII. 1887, p. 140 ff

EXCURSUS III.

FRAGMENTA VATICANA RESCRIPTA.

The printing of B. III was almost completed when a very praiseworthy piece of work was published: in the Rheinisches Museum for 1887, vol. XLII p. 102 ff. G. Heylbut communicated to the world his collation of twelve leaves of a palimpsest in the Vatican library (gr. 1298) containing the following passages of the Politics: 1275 a 13—b 33, 1276 b 17—1277 b 1, 1278 a 24—1281 a 37, 1286 b 16—1288 b 37, 1290 a 36—1292 b 20. Notwithstanding their great age¹ the fragments, which we denote by fr., abound in more or less serious blunders of every kind, which need not be fully recorded in the critical notes². The gain accruing to the text is next to nothing: at 1278 a 34 they confirm Perizonius' conjecture ἀστῶν, at 1287 a 34 my rejection of καί, and that is all. No one need be surprised at this when he reflects on the extraordinary accuracy which marks P², the principal codex of the family II², although it is, comparatively speaking, so recent³. For the definite separation between the two recensions II¹ and

¹ Heylbut pronounces the writing to be of the tenth century. Accents are very rare, but not altogether absent; iota adscriptum is written or omitted at random; etacism is very frequent; there are no pauses between the words except at the end of a paragraph.

² It will be found that of some 400 readings cited by Heylbut 59 record the partial illegibility of the palimpsest; 79 consist in the retention of ν ἐφέλκυστικόν; 81 are blunders of spelling (including etacism); there are 9 cases of ditto-graphy, 11 of omission through homoeoteleuton and 14 of words or letters omitted through other causes.

³ Namely, of XIV century, four centuries later than fr.

Π^2 was brought about, as I have shown¹, in the sixth or seventh century while the manuscript of which these fragments have been preserved, was copied from an original of an earlier date than that separation. So far it may be compared with the manuscript which Julian used; but with this difference, that of the two subsequent recensions Julian's MS apparently more nearly resembled Π^1 than Π^2 , while the case is just the opposite with the newly recovered fragments. That is to say, apart from the two readings above mentioned it shares in general both the merits and the faults of Π^1 and of Π^2 . Consequently, as I am bound to state in reply to Heylbut, it is not of the slightest importance for deciding the question, whether on the average the text is better preserved in Π^1 or Π^2 . On the contrary, the reasons which have led me to infer that Π^1 has retained the true reading (or traces of the true reading) somewhat oftener and in more important cases² than Π^2 , and must therefore in all more or less indifferent cases retain the advantage over it, remain, now that the palimpsest has been made known, exactly the same as they were before. More than this I have never asserted.

But besides, Heylbut has made no complete enumeration of the readings in which the fragments agree with Π^1 , or with Π^2 : sometimes too, where he records such agreement, his statement is not quite precise enough to make clear the actual state of the case. Thus he tells us, "1276 b 30 $\delta\iota\omega$ " with Π^2 , 1281 a 35 $\epsilon\chi\omicron\nu\tau\alpha\ldots\psi\upsilon\chi\eta\nu$ placed after $\phi\alpha\nu\lambda\omicron\nu$ with Π^2 , 1287 a 11 " $\epsilon\nu\alpha$ $\pi\alpha\nu\tau\omega\nu$ $\epsilon\nu\alpha\iota$ with Π^2 , a 32 \omicron $\nu\omicron\nu\varsigma$ $\nu\omicron\mu\omicron\varsigma$ as Julian reads, 1288 a 2 $\nu\omicron\mu\omicron\nu$ " $\omicron\nu\tau\omega\nu$ as Π^2 ": whereas in the fourth of these passages Π^1 also agrees with Julian, and in the other four it is not Π^1 , but only Γ M^s (or in the last passage Γ P¹), from which fr. diverge. If Heylbut chose to adopt this procedure (viz. to make divergence from Γ M^s equivalent to divergence from Π^1), he should in all fairness have set down to the credit of Π^1 the readings in which the fragments agree with Γ M^s only; namely, 1278 b 22 $\pi\omicron\lambda\iota\tau\epsilon\iota\alpha\varsigma$, 1280 b 5 $\delta\iota\alpha\kappa\omicron\nu\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu$, 1287 b 13 $\epsilon\rho\chi\omicron\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\nu$. The second of these three erroneous readings is of some interest: for while a codex so late as P¹ has not got beyond the first stage of corruption, $\delta\iota\alpha\kappa\omicron\pi\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu$ for $\delta\iota\alpha\sigma\kappa\omicron\pi\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu$, the fragment as well as Γ M^s had already converted this into $\delta\iota\alpha\kappa\omicron\nu\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu$ ³. Still more interesting is 1292 a 3, where M^s has the true reading with Π^2 , while the frightfully corrupt reading which, as we now see, already stood in the palimpsest was also found in Γ , and originally also in P¹. At 1287 a 33 Γ Π^2 rightly have $\gamma\rho\acute{\alpha}\mu\mu\alpha\tau\alpha$, fr. has $\gamma\rho\acute{\alpha}\mu\mu\alpha$ with M^s P¹. The statement "1286 b 17 $\mu\epsilon\tau\acute{\epsilon}\beta\alpha\lambda\lambda\omicron\nu$ with Π^2 " is quite misleading: for here it is only P¹ that has $\mu\epsilon\tau\acute{\epsilon}\beta\alpha\lambda\lambda\omicron\nu$ at all, at least we cannot determine the reading of Γ . At 1278 a 36 the order of the words in fr. is the same as in P¹ and corr. P⁴, i.e. a branch of Π^1 .

² A reference to a single passage may suffice, II. 2 § 6, 1261 a 39 ff, where Π^2 affords an especially deterrent example: cp. Quaest. crit. col. p. 360 f. I can with the greatest ease supply a series of similar passages.

³ See above p. 76 n. (1). We know that P¹ was copied quite at the end of the fifteenth century: for on the last page but one the scribe, Demetrios Chalkondylas, records the births of his children from the year 1484 to the year 1501.

Remarkable, too, is the reading at 1291 a 39, if Heylbut's statement is accurate: for in that case fr. have βουλευόμενον with Π² and κρινοῦν with Π¹. Heylbut's omission to annotate a number of readings in which fr. agree with Π¹ or Π², as the case may be, is evidently intentional: but on his own principles he should have added "with Π²" in the following cases; 1276 b 33¹, 1277 a 20, 1278 b 19, 1281 a 3, 1288 a 29, 1292 b 9 (εἰπαμεν); and "with Π¹" in the following; 1276 b 36, 1279 a 25 (το πολίτευμα), 1280 b 4 (εἴξει), 1287 b 41, 1288 a 23.

Leaving out of account the circumstance that fr. usually write οὐθείς and γίγνεσθαι with Π², on the basis of an exact calculation made by me the case stands as follows: fr. agree with Π² against Π¹ 62 times; 15 times rightly, 16 times wrongly, while 31 cases are doubtful or impossible to decide: whereas fr. agree with Π¹ 27 times, 20 times rightly and only 4 times wrongly with 3 cases doubtful or not to be decided². The correctness of the calculation that Π¹ has retained the true text oftener than Π² cannot be better brought before us. Moreover the right reading in fr. at 1275 a 27 αὐφαῖ is undoubtedly derived from Π¹. And if we now take into account the cases mentioned above where fr. have the right or the wrong reading in agreement with a part only of the family Π¹, even this makes but very little change in favour of Π².

Assuredly we ought not to reckon amongst the doubtful cases 1278 b 20 f. φύσει μὲν ἔστιν ὁ ἄνθρωπος ζῶν πολιτικόν: on the contrary there can be no doubt that Π² fr. are wrong in omitting the article. That by Aristotelian usage it might in itself be dispensed with, would never have been doubted even apart from the parallel passages which Heylbut adduces; but unfortunately Heylbut has left out the three closest parallels, which are alone sufficient to decide the case: 1253 a 7 διότι πολιτικὸν ζῶν ὁ ἄνθρωπος, Eth. Nic. 1097 b 11 φύσει πολιτικὸν ὁ ἄνθρωπος³, 1169 b 18 πολιτικὸν γὰρ ὁ ἄνθρωπος. [Moreover ΑΝΘΡΩΠΟΣ may be for ἄνθρωπος, as Stöhr suggests.⁴]

On the other hand in the above calculation καὶ εἰ or καὶν εἰ, and in most cases the order of the words, have been regarded as doubtful. Yet as a matter of fact we may hold it more probable that Aristotle everywhere wrote καὶν εἰ. Again no one of course will dispute the fact that he frequently places the attribute after the substantive and repeats the article as in τῆς πόλεως τῆς ἀρίστης: but precisely because this occurs often enough, we must

² Besides the 51 passages noted below in which Π² fr. agree against Π¹ there are 11 others where the text with which Heylbut collated fr., viz. Susem.³, agrees with Π² against Π¹, viz. 1275 a 28 f., 1277 a 12, a 20, a 24, 1279 a 2 f., 1280 b 5, 1288 a 16 (in which cases Π¹ omits words), also 1277 a 23, 1280 a 24, 1291 b 27, 1292

b 5. Similarly with the eight passages 1275 b 32, 1280 b 34, 1286 b 24, 1288 b 27, 1290 b 19, 1291 a 39, b 6, 1292 b 14 in which fr. may be assumed (from Heylbut's silence) to agree with Susem.³, i. e. with Π¹ as against Π²: adding these 8 to the 19 noted below we get 27 readings in which Π¹ fr. are agreed as against Π².

feel some scruples about accusing the author of the recension Π^1 (which, as the figures above show, is on the average the better and more careful) with such confidence as to exclude all doubt, of having three times intentionally altered it 1260 b 23 f., 1288 a 39, 1331 a 5. Just as little do I hold the case to be decided, or even possible to decide, by Heylbut's examples at 1280 a 15 f.,¹ and 1288 a 13 f.² Those which he adduces in favour of μία ἀρετή 1277 a 1 have certainly somewhat more weight³. However I have made it a rule as regards the order of the words, so far as it is of any importance, quietly to follow everywhere the class of manuscripts which is, on the average, the better, in order to limit as much as possible the editor's own subjective leanings: but I have no objection if in the future another editor, bolder than I am, prefers to attempt a decision of each case upon its merits, so long as he only refrains from the wish to deduce theories as to the order of words in Aristotle from a text like this preserved to us by a bifurcate tradition. Otherwise the matter is without significance and not worth contesting. And lastly I fail to see what right Heylbut has to prohibit Aristotle from using two alternative forms μόναρχος and μονάρχης: one should have learnt by now to guard against the endeavour after uniformity of this sort.

In my third edition I did not, at 1278 b 22, bracket the words οὐκ ἔλαττον, my reason being the observed fact that words are more often omitted by Π^1 than added by Π^2 without justification. But now it appears that fr. agree with Π^1 in rejecting these two words; and not only so, but Heylbut has proved that they are untenable⁴. On the other hand, at 1278 b 31 the γ inserted after ἀρετῆς by P^{2.3} fr. deserves perhaps to be accepted, and at 1292 b 15 I shall without hesitation replace τοὺς in the text with P^{2.3} fr. Ald. Bk., as here the sense favours the article. SUSEM.

Heylbut's collation with the text of Susem.³ is as follows (words and letters in brackets being such as are illegible):

1275 a 15 εγγεγραμμενους | 19 γάρ | απλως: λ is added above the line | 21 εστιν | 22 μαλον | 24 εισιν | 26 αοριστος: ο added above the line | 33 (ο μεν) | 34 (λε)γομενους | 39 (ρας...ουσας); there is only room for about 10 letters; probably the copyist omitted τας δε προτερας

1275 b 4 (ναι...εκαστην) πολιτει(αν διο) περ(ολεχθεις) | 5 εστιν | 7 εν omitted | 8 δικαζουσιν | 10 αλλοις αλλας | 11 της ετερας | 12 κρινωσιν | 13 (του) | 15 εστιν | αλλα | 16 βουλεσθαι with Π^2 | 19 βουλευτικης η κριτικης | 20 (προς)...21 (ορι

¹ In favour of φᾶνλοι κριται, the order of Π^2 fr., Heylbut quotes 1282 a 16, Τερ. VIII. 11 § 3, 161 a 37 ἐπει δὲ φᾶνλος κοινωνὸς ὁ ἐμποδίζων κτλ., Nic. Eth. I. 3 § 5, 1094 b 28 ἀγαθὸς κριτής.

² For the less usual order of Π^2 fr., ἀρχεσθαι καὶ ἀρχειν, Heylbut cites 1259 b 37, 1277 b 27, 1284 a 2, 1317 b 2. Comp. 1255 b 8 with Crit. note.

⁴ Heylbut points out that ἐλαττον denotes a less sum, or something less in number, time or space: e.g. πλείους—

ἐλάττους VII(VI). 3 § 3, 1318 a 26: ἐξ ἐλαττόνων εἰς ἑξακοσίους ἦλθεν, VIII(V). 6 § 3, 1305 b 12: οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἑξαμήνους, οἱ δὲ δι' ἐλάττονος (sc. χρόνου) ποιοῦσι τὰς ἀρχάς VI(IV). 15 § 1, 1299 a 6: οὐ γὰρ ἔλαττον διέστηκεν IV(VII). 3 § 2, 1325 a 28. Whereas the sense required in the passage in question is that invariably expressed by οὐχ ἦττον, οὐδὲν ἦττον, the opposite of which is πολὺ ἦττον=much less easily, e.g. VI(IV). 11 § 11, 1296 a 5. At VIII(V). 8 § 7, 1308 a 18, ἦττον is parallel to οὐ γὰρ ὁμοίως ῥᾶδιον.

‡ [It should be observed that considerable alterations have been made in Heylbut's annotation of the readings (see p. 456): also that 1280 a 29 εισενεγκαντα is given as the reading at any rate of Π^2 and presumably of fr. (εισεναγκαντα Heylbut).]

NOTE ON THE BASIS OF THE TEXT.

In Mr Newman's edition I. p. VIII. f. II. p. LIV. there recurs, although in a much milder form, Heylbut's assertion already refuted by me in Jahrb. f. Philol. CXXV. p. 801 ff., and in Excursus III. above, that I seek to base the text of Aristotle's Politics primarily on Π^1 , and especially on Γ . Mr Newman writes:

"Suscmihl bases his text in the main on the first family, and especially on Γ , but he frequently adopts readings from the second."

Now even in my first edition, in which as in the second I certainly too often followed Π^1 , I have nevertheless already said at p. XXXII.:

"quanquam ex eo, quod dixi, satis apparet ita nobis traditum esse hoc Aristotelis opus similiter atque complura alia, ut non nisi mixtam ex utraque codicum familia recensionem perficere hodie queamus, tamen in hac mixtura artis criticae regulas diligentius, quam adhuc factum sit, esse adhibendas periti omnes concedent. Quod ut fiat, ipsius vetustae translationis verba... cum libris affinis Graecis (sunt) conferenda, deinde quaerendum, ubi huius ubi alterius familiae lectiones praestent: ubicumque autem aequae bonam sententiam utraeque praebent, vulgata semper recensio alteri est posthabenda."

Here it is stated, that in my judgment any one who wished a priori to make the recension Π^1 the basis of the text would proceed just as perversely as any one who does, or as if any one were to do, the like with Π^2 ; that on the contrary in the main each case must be decided on its merits: quaerendum, ubi huius ubi alterius familiae lectiones praestent; and only afterwards in all these cases in which on material grounds (I might have added "and on linguistic grounds") a decision is impossible, that family must be followed which in the greater number of determinable cases and at the same time in essential matters has more frequently preserved the true text or the traces of the true text, i.e. according to my opinion and my figures the family Π^1 . The accuracy of this computation I have already endeavoured to establish statistically against Heylbut for those passages which are contained in the Vatican palimpsest: but I will not spare myself the pains of a similar demonstration as against Newman in respect to Books I. and II. which he has edited. I must however prefix one or two observations, although entering as little as possible upon a special controversy.

I gladly acknowledge, that Newman has adopted as against Bekker many readings from Π^1 . In spite of this, he cannot be wholly acquitted of a certain prejudice in favour of Π^2 , as some examples will hereafter show. In addition to this there is a particular circumstance which disturbs his impartiality. He believes that the text of the Politics has been transmitted in an excellent condition, and has therefore a strong dislike to conjectural emendations, so that in order to avoid one he prefers to adopt explanations implicitly containing an absurdity which but for this prepossession could not possibly have escaped a man of his discernment. A truly deterrent example of this sort is to be found for instance at 1272 b 38. Hence wherever a reading in Π^1 , however convincing on other grounds, cannot be retained without the help of a conjecture, though it may be the slightest change in the world, this is sufficient for him to condemn it. But the truth of Spengel's dictum, that the Politics has come down to us in a state legible on the whole but very corrupt in particular passages, can be shown a priori by the consideration that shoals of mistakes in Π^1 are corrected by means of Π^2 and those in Π^2 by means of Π^1 ; whence it follows that in each of the two families the original is preserved with but very moderate fidelity. Who can rationally assume that the original is well preserved where the two families agree, and not rather that a quantity of errors lurk in both? Further Mr Newman has allowed himself to be misled by an assertion of Dittenberger's, to me incomprehensible, into the belief that all the good readings found only in the "Vetusta translatio," or in a single codex, are mere conjectures: whereas this opinion, partially true perhaps of P^1 and Ar., for the rest is certainly true only of the "deteriores" of the family Π^2 ($=\Pi^3$). I ask any one just to consider the not unimportant class of readings to be derived solely from Γ or from P^1 and P^4 (corr.), and soberly to put the question: Do these really look like Byzantine emendations made (say) since the 11th century? And if he is not convinced by this, let him further ask himself: If the Byzantines had thus handled the text, then along with this after all but moderate number of good emendations should we not find a far greater number of attempts at emendation, i.e. of sheer corruptions, common to all our sources of the text? But yet apart from such general considerations how else is the excellence of an old manuscript to be demonstrated, unless it be one so preeminently excellent as e.g. A° of the Rhetoric and Poetic, or Σ in Demosthenes, or Γ in Isocrates? Otherwise it might even be maintained, that the 70 odd passages, where K^b alone presents right readings in the Nicomachean Ethics, are after all only good conjectures. If this cannot rationally be imagined, and if it is just as certain that the pair of right readings lately found in the Vatican fragments are traces of a good tradition, the same view is, in most cases, just as decidedly to be taken where not all, but only single representatives of the recension Π¹, or of the better class of Π², present us with the true text. And then it tells decisively in favour of Π¹, that while these cases are not quite rare in Π¹, in Π² they are almost zero. I am here obliged to repeat what I have put together in my third edition p. XII. ff. [cp. above p. 74 f. notes] on this matter:

This is exclusive of the cases, in which ΓM^a alone or M^aP¹ alone or ΓP¹ alone have preserved the true text: and to these may be added (l.c. p. XI.)

1253 b 33 ὁ om. M^a, erased by P⁴ (whether they are to be followed, is certainly a matter for dispute):

1279 b 22 συμβαίνει P¹⁴:

1309 a 40 αἴρεσιν P⁴ (corrector):

1316 a 38 ἀναξιλάου P¹⁴.

From this also is seen, in what a very restricted sense I assert, or am entitled to assert, that the Vetusta translatio is “instar optimi codicis.” That the text is to be based upon it as far as it can be based upon anything, I never once even dreamed of thinking (as the above remark in my first edition shows) even at an earlier time, when I still overrated the worth of this source of the text.

In the first book indeed Mr Newman has adopted the readings of Π¹ only at 1252 b 28 (ἦδη ΓP¹),

1253 a 7, 1254 a 15, 1255 b 27, 1256 b 13, 32, 1257 b 3,

1258 b 40 (Χαρητίδη Γ),

1259 a 37 (mirabile dictu, even here not without some doubt),

1259 b 28 (δὲ Γ 1st hand of P¹),

1260 a 37 (ἄρα):

and at 1253 b 37 he remarks with justice: ὑποδύεσθαι ΓM^a possibly rightly.

But though it is true, as he mentions, that 1253 a 2 ὁ is only added before ἀνθρώπος in M^aP¹, yet it stands in all the manuscripts just below, at line 7. The two similar passages in the Ethics (as I have remarked on p. 456) also defend the article, which should therefore be adopted 1278 b 21 from M^aP¹; and all this makes for the article at 1253 a 32 also. Similarly in B. II. 1270 b 19 f. Mr Newman pronounces in favour of διὰ τύχην against M^aP¹; but at 1323 b 29, as Mr Hicks reminded me, all manuscripts have διὰ τὴν τύχην. Further on the strength of the well-known Aristotelian idiom Mr Newman erases, 1255 a 35, the καὶ between εὐγενές and εὐθέρον with Π²; and at 1260 a 26 ἦ before τὸ with P^{2.3}S^bT^b. In the latter case he is right, in the former wrong: for this usage is restricted to enumerations (after οἶον, ὥσπερ especially, but also in other cases), and at 1316 b 15

unless καὶ be inserted (which might easily have dropped out before κατατοκιζόμενοι) the explanation must be quite different, viz. ἀσωτενόμενοι κατατοκιζόμενοι must mean "accumulating debts in consequence of their profligacy." At 1252 a 9 Mr Newman himself wavers between admitting εἶναι or leaving it out : as however the latter is the more unusual, to me at least it seems the safer supposition that it is interpolated in Π². And while Mr Newman holds it to be almost indispensable 1257 b 7, I believe that on the contrary I have shown (Qu. crit. coll. p. 353 f.) it is quite out of place in that passage. Although Π¹ is more often wrong in omitting words which are found in Π², yet I hold that anyone with an appreciation of Aristotle's mosaic style must unhesitatingly admit that 1252 b 19 f he wrote ἐκ βασιλευσόμενων γὰρ without συνῆλθον. To be sure nothing of this kind can be demonstrated. At 1252 b 14 I also have accepted ὁμοκάπνους, but it still remains doubtful whether ὁμοκάπνους be not right after all (see Addenda ad loc.). At 1253 b 27 τῶν οἰκονομικῶν (Π²) is defended by Newman by means of a subtle interpretation. But he should say where the apodosis begins. It is certainly upon mere conjecture that b 25 δὲ is omitted by P^{1.6}O¹U^bL^s Ald., but one which is justified by the facts ; for here the apodosis really begins (only it would be better to write δῆ) : that being so, a rational sense can only be obtained by Rassow's emendation, which I have accepted, and this admits only the reading of Π¹ τῷ οἰκονομικῷ. At 1254 a 10, whether it is more natural that ὅλως was explained by ἀπλῶς or conversely, every one may decide for himself. I hold the latter to be much more probable : still the Byzantine gloss-writers were unaccountable people. Why I hold, at 1254 b 23, λόγῳ (Π¹) to correspond better to the sense and grammar than λόγου (Π²), I have laid down Qu. crit. coll. p. 343, and Mr Newman says nothing about this. That at 1255 b 26 ὁψοποιητικὴ and 1256 a 6 κερκιδποιητικὴ are the genuine Aristotelian forms is unmistakably clear from the very materials collected by Mr Newman, and how anyone can prefer, 1256 b 8, the present διδομένη to the perfect δεδομένη and conversely 1260 a 4 the perfect ὑφήγεται to the present ὑφήγεται, I cannot comprehend. As to 1260 a 4 <ἀρχόντων καὶ> ἀρχομένων, see Addenda ad loc.

Leaving out of account the order of the words at 1253 a 7, 11, b 3, 7, 1256 b 26, 1259 b 30, 1260 b 24, there remain, besides 1252 b 15 (ὁμοκάπνους or ὁμοκάπνους), the following quite uncertain cases : 1252 b 2, 5, 14, 1253 a 1, 1254 b 18, 1255 b 24, 26, 1258 b 7, 1259 a 28, 1260 a 21, 31. Also 1256 b 1 κομίζονται and 1258 b 1 μεταβολικῆς (Π¹) may be corruptions of πορίζονται and μεταβλητικῆς ; yet it is much more natural to suppose that on the contrary the former unusual expressions were arbitrarily transformed into the latter which are continually used elsewhere. Π¹ is certainly wrong 15 times : 1252 a 5, 1253 a 25, b 25, 1255 a 5, 24, 32, 39, b 12, 1256 b 18, 1257 a 22, 1258 b 27, 1259 b 2, 1260 a 26, 39, b 17 ; besides it is probably wrong 1254 b 14 (as I must now concede), 1255 b 24 (ταῖς), 1257 b 24. Π¹ is right 24 times : 1252 a 9, b 20, 28 (ἥδη Γ^{P1}), 1253 a 7, b 27, 1254 a 15, b 23, 28, 1255 a 35, b 26, 27, 1256 a 6, b 8, 13, 32, 1257 b 3, 7, 1258 b 40 (Χαρητίῳ Γ), 1259 a 37, b 28 (δὲ Γ 1st hand P²), 1260 a 4 twice (ἀρχόντων καὶ Γ and ὑφηγεῖται), 1260 a 37 (ἀρα), of which it is true 1252 b 28, 1258 b 40 and 1260 a 37 have no decisive importance here: but in return 1253 a 32, 1254 a 10, 1256 b 1, 1258 b 1, and also perhaps 1253 b 37 (p. 463), should probably be added, to say nothing of 1260 b 20 (p. 462). On the other hand possibly the mistake at 1256 a 10 extends to M^a as well as ΓP¹. The glosses which have crept in (1256 b 26) are of course not to be reckoned to the disadvantage of the original recension Π¹, either here or elsewhere.

The comparison tells far more strikingly in favour of Π¹ in the second book, not merely numerically, but by a series of quite unique variants, whereas the mistakes for the most part concern trifles and simple errata, as e.g. φιλίτια, three times (for which moreover the archetype of this family is perhaps not responsible, see Susem.¹ p. XIV.), and the repeated φαλλέας. Each of these is properly reckoned once only in what follows, and the same with the right reading ἀνδρεῖα (ἀντρεῖα). Apart from the order of the words 1265 a 37, b 15, 17, 32, 1267 a 38, 1268 a 11 f., 1271 a 19 f., 1273 b 36, 1274 a 17, b 6, an even approximate decision is impossible 1260 b 36, 1261 a 22, 1262 b 21, 1263 a 23, b 32, 1264 a 16, 21, b 26, 31, 1265 a 4, 12, b 19, 1266 a 23, b 3, 1268 a 6, 6 f., 17, b 5, 9, 17, 32, 1269 a 11, b 21, 28, 1272 b 15 f., 28, 1273 a 16, b 27, 32, 1274 b 8, 14: one feels inclined to decide in favour of Π² at 1261 a 22, b 21, 1269 b 21, but on the other hand in favour of Π¹ at 1263 a 23 (καὶ omitted), 1272 b 28, and 1269 a 11 Mr Newman himself describes with "possibly rightly" the reading of Π¹. In the remaining 109 cases Π¹ has preserved the right reading, or the traces of it, 69 times: 1260 b 27 (see Addenda to 1260 b 20), 28, 41 (εἰς ὁ τῆς Γ), 1261 a 15 twice, 27 (ἐλκύσει ΓP¹), 1261 b 2 f. five times, b 4 (see Qu. crit. coll. p. 360 f.), b 5, 1262 a 3 twice, b 13 (at the least highly probable, see Newman's crit. n.), 33, 1263 a 12, 23 (ἔθεισι), b 7 (see Qu. crit. coll. p. 366 f.), 9, 11, 1265 a 33 f. four times, b 11 (ἄλλαις ΓM^a), 30, 1266 b 2 (Γ), 24, 31, 1267 a 35, 40, b 16, 23, 26, 35, 1268 a 3, 11, 25, b 5, 12, 1269 a 21, b 6, 1270 a 13 (αὐτῆς ΓP¹), 22, 1270 b 19 (p. 463), 32 (αὐτη affects only accent and breathing), 1271 a 15, 17, 20 (κἂν Γ), 37, 40, b 37, 1272 a 3, 29, b 8 f. twice, 36, 39, 1273 a 7, 9, b 1, 41, 1274 a 5, 19, 21 (at least probable), 25, 39, b 13. Π¹ has changed the right reading at the most only 40 times: 1261 a 18 (ἦ omitted by M^aP¹, probably wrongly, whether by Γ also, cannot be known), 35 (at least M^aP¹), b 7 (οὐ, it may however be right), 19, 1262 a 30, 1263 b 1, 6, 1264 a 1, b 3, 1265 a 30, 35, b 4, 21, 39 (at least M^aP¹), 1266 a 20, 23, 37, 39 (φαλλέας), b 6, 1267 b 40, 1268 a 26 (probably at least), b 16, 1269 a 6, b 26, 1270 a 20, 21 (at least M^aP¹), 25, 27 (at least M^aP¹), 34, 1270 b 12, 1271 a 27 (φιλίτια, cp. 1272 a 3, b 34), b 26, 28, 1272 a 1 (at least M^aP¹), 35, 1273 a 9, 10, b 2, 3, 1274 a 4 (unless θατέραν is here nearer to the true reading than θάτερον, θάτερα being the original). To the latter cases Newman certainly adds 1260 b 27, 1261 a 27, b 4, 1263 a 12, 23, b 7, 9, 11, 1264 a 39, 1265 a 33 f., b 11, 30, 1267 a 40, b 26, 1268 a 3, 25, b 5, 12, 1269 b 6 (but Περαιβοῖς is the right orthography), 1270 b 19, 32, 1271 a 20 (but μὴν gives a wrong sense), b 37, 1272 b 9, 1273 b 41 (but was it not more obvious to change τὸ δικαστήριον into the more natural and simple τὰ δικαστήρια?), 1274 a 21: yet not without himself giving expression to his doubts in regard to 1261 a 27, 1265 b 11, 30, 1268 a 3, b 5, 1271 b 37, 1272 b 9, 39 occasionally with some warmth.

I must here content myself with a brief mention of most of these last mentioned passages and one or two besides.

1261 b 2 f. Although Mr Newman is bound to admit that here Π^2 presents attempts at emendation as arbitrary as they are worthless, and although it is clear that in this way $\epsilon\nu\ \tau\acute{o}\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma$ has arisen from $\tau\acute{o}\upsilon\tau\omicron$, yet he seeks to save the former reading, because then $\tau\acute{o}$ before $\epsilon\nu\ \mu\acute{\epsilon}\rho\epsilon\iota$ need not be changed into $\tau\acute{\omega}$; but there is no need of this with the reading $\tau\acute{o}\upsilon\tau\omicron$: see Susem.⁴ crit. n. and Qu. crit. coll. p. 361.

1263 a 23. For $\epsilon\theta\epsilon\sigma\iota$ Mr Newman himself cites the parallel passage 1263 b 39. I should think this would be sufficient for any unprejudiced person. As to 1263 a 28 ff. see the Addenda ad loc. If $\acute{\epsilon}\kappa\acute{\alpha}\sigma\tau\omega\ \pi\rho\omicron\sigma\epsilon\delta\rho\epsilon\acute{\iota}\nu\omicron\upsilon\tau\epsilon\varsigma$ (ΓM^*) is, as it seems, the true reading, this would make the 70th case in favour of Π^1 .

1265 a 33 f. That frugality usually attends as a consequence upon a toilsome life, and liberality upon a life of luxury, is what only an unreflecting person, not Aristotle, would maintain: those who live luxuriously will soon find the means for liberality fail them. But the converse is perfectly true. Π^1 has therefore transmitted the right reading, and we must make up our minds to accept the excellent emendation of the sensible Koraes, without which this reading transmitted to us cannot be maintained.

1265 b 11. How improbable it is that in any of the existing states such regulations as those here proposed can have existed, a man so well informed as Mr Newman cannot fail to see. Nevertheless he admits $\pi\lambda\epsilon\acute{\iota}\sigma\tau\alpha\iota\varsigma$, not $\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\alpha\iota\varsigma$ into the text.

1265 b 30. In case the reading $\pi\omicron\lambda\iota\tau\epsilon\acute{\iota}\alpha\nu$ were right, $\tau\grave{\eta}\nu$ could scarcely be omitted before this word or before $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\omicron\tau\acute{\alpha}\tau\eta\nu$.

1267 b 25 f. With the reading $\kappa\acute{o}\sigma\mu\omega\ \pi\omicron\lambda\upsilon\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\acute{\iota}$ arises the absurdity, that $\acute{\epsilon}\sigma\theta\eta\tau\omicron\varsigma\ \epsilon\upsilon\tau\epsilon\lambda\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$ would depend not simply on $\pi\lambda\acute{\eta}\theta\epsilon\iota$, but on $\kappa\acute{o}\sigma\mu\omega\ \pi\omicron\lambda\upsilon\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\acute{\iota}$. Of this Mr Newman says nothing.

1268 a 3. Is $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\delta\iota\kappa\acute{\alpha}\zeta\epsilon\omega\ \tau\grave{\eta}\nu\ \delta\acute{\iota}\kappa\eta\nu$ in the sense of "to decide the case against the accused" Greek at all, except in the formula $\epsilon\rho\acute{\eta}\mu\eta\nu\ \kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\delta\iota\kappa\acute{\alpha}\zeta\epsilon\omega$?

1268 b 21. Mr Newman's statement in the critical note, that $\eta\delta\eta$ is left out by Π^1 here, is erroneous: it was omitted only by Γ and P^1 (1st hand). So too of his assertion, that 1271 a 15 I have taken $\tau\acute{o}\upsilon\tau\omega$ (Π^1) not as neuter, but as masculine.

τῶν δυνατῶν, with Π¹, to follow δοῦναι (line 9): but unfortunately this is not possible without the conjecture—an extraordinarily slight conjecture, it is true—of Koraes, οἱ ἄν (line 8) for δταν. Now conjectures are once for all forbidden. There is nothing for it but to justify the order of the words in Π², as well, or rather as ill, as possible. Again, one might have imagined that δυναστῶν (Π¹) instead of δυνατῶν (Π²) was sufficiently defended by the fact that the Cretan constitution is declared to be δυναστεία μᾶλλον ἢ πολιτεία. Not so. Once for all, Π² is made out to be the better recension!

1272 b 39. Here in the first place Mr Newman is mistaken in saying that καθ' αὐτὸ is not found in any manuscript: it is in the margin of Π¹, quite apart from the fact that beyond all doubt it was in Γ. He is exceedingly disposed to concede that it is most appropriate to the sense and the language. One might have imagined that given this most appropriate reading καθ' αὐτό, a second κατ' αὐτὸ (Π¹ and somewhat corrupted M*), and a third κατὰ τὸ αὐτό (Π²), the progress of the corruption from the first through the second to the third was at the same time given clearly enough. But it is all in vain. Again, once for all, Π² is made out to be the better recension!

1273 b 6. Here on the contrary Mr Newman has rightly restored to the text εὐπορίαν from Π² and O¹, in opposition to Bekker, myself, and the other editors.

I believe then that I exactly described the state of the case in relation to the recensions Π¹ and Π² when in my third edition p. v. I wrote: "haud raro hanc, saepius illam meliorem." Now to return with a few words to the Vatican palimpsest. According to Heylbut's account, which I have not correctly reported in the Jahrb. f. Philol. CXXV. p. 804 f., it is of the tenth century. Accordingly it furnishes a proof that even at that time, in which undoubtedly the sharp separation of these two recensions had already taken place, copies were nevertheless still made of older codices, which had arisen before this sharp separation, and thus still bore a mixed character, approximating in this case more to Π², but in the case of the codex used by Julian more to Π¹. If the two facts are viewed impartially side by side, no conclusion follows from them in favour of Π² any more than in favour of Π¹: on the contrary, the procedure which I have adopted is only justified anew. This and the confirmation of two conjectures, ἀστῶν 1278 a 34 and 1287 a 34 καὶ omitted, form the total net result of this new discovery. If the codex had been preserved entire, it is probable that other isolated conjectural emendations would have been confirmed: as it is, these two cases are enough to restrain us from an exaggerated mistrust of this means for the restoration of the text.

Mr Newman thinks it possible that William of Moerbeke employed several Greek manuscripts. I see no ground for doing so much honour to the care bestowed by the worthy monk; indeed what makes this assumption very improbable is simply that all these codices must have belonged to the class Π¹. However if this was the case, it can remain tolerably indifferent to us, for the fact remains still the same: the Vetusta translatio is the oldest representative of this family and (excepting the Vatican fragments and the citations of Greek writers) the oldest source of the text anywhere.

I should have much besides to adduce on my side against Mr Newman, but I have no intention of entering on a controversy with him and would far sooner take this opportunity to recognize with gratitude, in spite of all our differences, the very great merits of his work, which contains much both good and new. In regard to I. c. 11 I agree with him : I would not guarantee that this chapter was written by Aristotle himself, but I very much doubt whether a valid proof can be adduced to show that this is not the case, or even that Aristotle inserted it in his work at a later date. In any case it is well known to be older than the so-called second book of the Oeconomics, which had its origin somewhere between 260 and 200 B.C. SUSEM.

B. IV(VII), i.e. the fourth book of the new order, but in the traditional order of the manuscripts the seventh, commences a sketch of the best polity which is continued through the next book, B. V(VIII), there being no break between them, and finally left unfinished at its close. Preliminary questions are discussed in cc. 1—3, the external conditions (the land, the people, the agricultural class, the public buildings) in cc. 4—12; c. 13 treats of the end of the constitution and the means at the legislator's command for realizing it; the most important of which, viz. a system of state education (in the widest sense), receives a detailed exposition, beginning with c. 14 of this book and not completed at the abrupt close of the next. The two books are written in a finished style, carefully elaborated, with minute attention to the rule of the hiatus, which is seldom violated in B. IV(VII) and not at all in B. V(VIII).

1288 b 5, ἀνάγκη δὲ...6 σκέψιν] That this conclusion of B. III, breaking off in the middle of a sentence, is only a parallel version of the beginning of the (old) seventh book, is acknowledged by all who recognize that the proper place for the (old) seventh book is immediately after the third. Beyond all doubt, of the two parallel versions, that at the end of B. III is the original one, as Spengel rightly decides, and it ought not to have been omitted from the text of Bekker's octavo edition*. When the rest of this book had been torn away from its connexion and transformed into the seventh book, some transition was needed; hence the clause περὶ πολιτείας...ζήτησιν ἀνάγκη was added by the redactor. SUSEM.

The grounds for making the transposition of the books have been already noticed: Introd. p. 16 n. (4), p. 17, p. 47 f. The main point to decide is, where in the treatise ought the description of the best polity (in the form of pure aristocracy) to come, whether before the description of the existing faulty polities or after them. The indications of B. III are unmistakeable, especially cc. 13 and 18; and upon them Spengel has rightly insisted (Ueber die Politik p. 16 f., Arist. Studien II. pp. 46 ff., 60 ff., 71). Not less convincing is the assertion in VI(IV). c. 2 that aristocracy, as well as monarchy, has been already discussed. But when the question has been decided upon these grounds, the unfinished sentence at the end of B. III certainly affords striking corroborative evidence.

§ 3 24 πρὸς γε μίαν διαίρεσιν οὐδεὶς ἀν] The appeal to the ἐξωτερικοῖς λόγοις in this passage and in § 5 (see n. 694) thus amounts (in effect at any rate) to an appeal to public opinion, to what was at the time conceded by all, or at least by all cultivated and intelligent men. We should also notice how, as III. 12 § 1, the strictly scientific (philosophical) distinctions and discussions are opposed (1) to opinion universally current, and on the other hand, (2) if not by Aristotle himself at least by his pupil Eudemos (see n. 584), to the ἐξωτερικοῖς λόγοις; and it is hardly possible to regard the latter as anything else but the expression of that universal opinion. Bernays sees in these words an ironical excuse on Aristotle's part in reply to the charge which was no doubt often levelled at him, of useless logical hair-splitting, when he thus expresses the hope that he may be allowed to make one division at least without opposition. But Vahlen rightly urges against this view that, in spite of the announcement of at least this one division, the emphasis is not laid on the division, but on the inference drawn from it; that just because there are three kinds of goods, he who is to be happy cannot entirely dispense with any of the three. But I do not perceive why this thought ought properly to have been elaborated for all three kinds of goods, as Vahlen supposes; at any rate with the form of 'argumentum ad hominem' here chosen, proceeding from premisses universally conceded, where all that was required was to prove the superior claim of intellectual goods, which was alone in dispute. Besides the request that 'he might be allowed just this one division' would appear very strange in connexion with this division of goods. For, except perhaps the comprehensive term "external goods," it is not at all peculiar to Aristotle; and he repeats it elsewhere, e.g. Nic. Eth. I. 8 § 2, 1098 b 12 ff., Rhet. I. 5 § 4, 1360 b 25 ff., and often mentions it in passing as something well known and perfectly certain, without a word of justification or approval. SUSEM. (689)

25 μερίδων] Even though it is plain to everybody that the subject is "goods," yet it is strange that no express mention of the term occurs either here (where it would be very appropriate instead of the word chosen, μερίδων) or in what precedes. SUSEM. (690)

1323 b 1 εἴτ' ἐν τῷ... 2 εἴτ' ἐν ἀμφοῖν] Bernays argues that to leave several possibilities open in this way is another indication that we have something borrowed from a dialogue. But if we presuppose Aristotle's own view of happiness, there is no further need of this argument, or rather it becomes useless. "Opponents however are most effectively met by a proof of the untenableness of their opinions drawn from their own point of view, or the concession of their own assumptions. The conceptions of happiness here brought together in the form of alternatives, all of which alike make the goods of the mind its more important elements, occur elsewhere, e.g. Nic. Eth. VII. 11 § 2, 1152 b 6 ff. [yet it is doubtful if this part of the Ethics is Aristotelian]: cp. 13 is 'whatever is useful is useful up to a certain point [or, has a limit to its utility],

 the sentence would be τὰ ἐκτός ἔχει πέρασ

...ἂ ὑπερβάλλοντα (i.e. ἂν ὑπερβίλλῃ) ἡ βλάβειν ἀναγκαῖον ἢ μηδὲν ὠφελεῖν τοῖς ἔχοντας. Then by a familiar idiom the second alternative is replaced by ἡ μηδὲν ὄφελος εἶναι αὐτῶν (sc. τῶν ἐκτός). The sentence thus becomes somewhat unsymmetrical in form, because τὴν ὑπερ-

precedes: the best condition of two things
'compared in point of superiority,' i.e. as judged by the superiority of the one relatively to the other. All this forms the subject of ἀκολουθεῖν. What is the object? Either τῇ διαστάσει, or κατὰ τὴν διάστασιν (for which cp. c. 14 § 1, 1332 b 15), ἤνπερ κτλ. Normally one would expect this to be changed by attraction of the relative into ἤπερ εἶλχε διαστᾶσαι (or καθ' ἤνπερ εἶλ. διάστασιν). Instead of this, the antecedent is absorbed into the relative sentence and assimilated to its construction ἤνπερ εἶλχε διάστασιν. Such absorption and assimilation may be seen in VI(IV). 4. 8, 1290 b 28, 5. 2, 1292 b 8, 12. 2, 1296 b 20, possibly (see n. ad loc.)
1. 8. 13, 1256 b 29. A good example is Pl. Rep. 400 D εὐθελὲς ἀκολουθεῖ, οὐχ ἦν ἄνοιαν οὖσαν ὑποκοριζόμενοι καλοῦμεν ὡς εὐθήθειαν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ὡς ἀληθῶς... διάνοιαν:
where the construction of the relative sentence invades the resumed principal sentence. See 1323 b 34, 1324 b 13. The periphrasis of ἔχειν c. accus. for a verb is sometimes varied. Here εἰληχέναι διά-στασιν = διεστάναι as Pl. Tim. 38 D, Pol.

288 E δύναμιν εἰληχέναι = δύνασθαι, Phil.
49 C γελοῖον εἶλχε τάξιν = γελοῖα ἐστὶ.
In its simplest form the proposition states that the ὑπεροχὴ of the best condition of two things compared corresponds to the διάστασις between the things. The best state of A: the best state of B :: A: B.
Allow the soul's superiority, and you must allow the superiority of ἀρετῇ and φρόνησις its best states. (Vahlen.)

15 διάστασιν] The order of the words in Γ (distantia quam quidem sortita est quarum dicimus esse ipsas has Will.) may suggest that διάστασιν was originally a variant of ὑπεροχὴν, and to be bracketed (Bojesen, followed by Spengel and Madvig who also proposed <καὶ> διάστασιν).
But Vahlen pp. 28—34 (30—36) has shown that διάστασιν is all but indispensable for the sense, and himself admits that it is not necessary to alter to ἤπερ... διαστᾶσαι. Schneider, who first felt a difficulty, proposed violent changes ἐκ.

αὐτὰς ταύτας] Vahlen shows that this is an instance of the idiomatic attraction of a pronominal subject (here a demonstrative, often a relative) into the number and gender of the predicate. In Plato Phil. 57 E ταύτας οὖν λέγομεν ἐπιστήμας ἀκριβεῖς μάλιστ' εἶναι = this is what we especially mean by the exact sciences. So here: 'the things whereof we say that

"What is desirable on its own account is more desirable than that which is desirable for the sake of something else" (Bernays). Although this point of view (τόπος) is closely related to the one adopted here, yet it is not identical with it. A more important point is that as the precise argument of the Topics is employed e.g. in the Ethics also, I. 7 § 4, 1097a 30, we have no right to follow Bernays in ascribing to this chapter of the Politics a scientific character materially distinct from the method of the Ethics and only suited for popular writings (Vahlen). Moreover there is no development of the 'logical formula' for this proof, as in the former case (see n. 701); while in the passage of the Ethics this is done. SUSEM. (702)

The last remark because Bernays argues (p. 80) that in the dialogues the treatment must necessarily have been somewhat abstract and dialectical; and this side of the dialogue he thinks is reflected in the present chapter. The author wrote, he says, for the public at large, who, if impatient of technical terms, are nevertheless especially qualified to appreciate the tact which adapts to each branch of science its appropriate logic.

§ 10 22 ἀρετῆς καὶ φρονήσεως Cp. III. 4 § 7, II § 2, with nn. (474, 565). SUSEM. (703)

καὶ τοῦ πράττειν κατὰ ταύτας Why Aristotle was obliged to add 'activity in accordance with the virtues' we learn from N. Eth. I. 8 § 9, 1098b 31 ff. διαφέρει δ' ἰσως οὐ μικρὸν ἐν κτήσει ἢ χρήσει τὸ ἀριστον ὑπολαμβάνειν, καὶ ἐν ἑξεί ἢ ἐν ἐργείᾳ. τὴν μὲν γὰρ ἕξιν ἐνδέχεται μηδὲν ἀγαθὸν ἀποτελεῖν πᾶρχουσιν, οἷον τῷ καθέδοντι..., τὴν δ' ἐνέργειαν οὐχ οἷον τε. πράξει γὰρ ἐξ ἀνάγκης, καὶ ἐπ' πράξει. We must agree with Bernays that it is owing to the manifestly popular character of the style of description here followed that Aristotle now avoids the technical term ἐνέργεια used in that passage. Cf. also § 13 with n. (710), and n. (736). SUSEM. (704)

23 μάρτυρι τῷ θεῷ χρωμένοις Bernays wrongly endeavours to discover a solemn religious tone in this expression. It denotes no more than 'taking the happiness of God as evidence' or 'appealing to the happiness of God,' cp. Thuc. I. 73. 2, just as in a similar phrase the Cyrenaics and Epicureans are reproached with appealing to the lower animals, Plat. Philob. 67 B τοὺς θηρίων ἔρωτας οἰονταί κυρίους εἶναι μάρτυρας, Cic. De Fin. II. 33 § 109 bestiis... quibus vos de summo bono testibus uti soletis. It is nothing unusual for Aristotle in his strictly scientific writings to introduce God into the inquiry. Not only is there really not the slightest difference in this respect between c. 3 § 10 (cp. n. 746) and the passage before us, but further the very same thought is worked out rather more fully in Nic. Eth. x. 8 § 7, 1178 b 7 ff., and similar references to the deity occur e.g. Nic. Eth. VIII. 7 § 4, 1158 b 35, cp. VII. 14 § 8, 1154 b 26 ff. Lastly, the comparison here between human and divine happiness is not in the slightest degree carried beyond the proper point. According to Aristotle the activity of God is only speculative thought, and indeed even this thought is nothing but his absolutely perfect thinking upon his own nature, and it is in this that his perfect happiness consists, see Zeller op. c. II. ii. p. 365 ff. Aristotle's aim is to prove, as against the opposite view generally current, the greater necessity for goods of the mind, in order to happiness. A reference to the happiness of God was not unsuitable for his purpose: the inference from this is that happiness in general does not depend upon external goods, but is founded on mental qualities;

and consequently that man, too, cannot find his principal happiness in external goods. On the other hand the notion that man also may be able to dispense entirely with external goods and yet attain happiness is completely excluded by the whole previous course of the argument, which began with admitting each and all of the three kinds of goods to be necessary for human happiness (see n. 689) and endeavoured to determine the relative importance of external and internal goods (Vahlen). § 11 ἐχόμενον δ' ἐστὶ κτλ] Next there follows, without need for fresh arguments, the inference to the happiness and welfare of the best state. For welfare is impossible apart from well-doing. A literal version would be: closely connected and dependent upon the same arguments is the proof that the best state, too, is happy and fares well [like the best man]. It need hardly be insisted that 30 εὐδαίμονα and 31 πράττουσαν καλῶς are predicates of which τὴν ἀρίστην πόλιν is the subject.

30 τῶν αὐτῶν λόγων] Although this makes the essential identity of happiness in the individual and the state rest on no other grounds than those already adduced, we nevertheless get a new proof that human happiness consists mainly in virtue, and we are told (§ 12) that this applies to the state precisely in the same way as to the individual. This supplementary proof is certainly very incomplete. All human thought is largely conditioned and fettered by the language of a nation. Thus among the Greeks the verb πράττειν has (1) the transitive meaning 'to do=to perform certain acts,' line 32 τὰ καλὰ πράττουσιν, (2) the intransitive meaning 'to do=to be (in a certain state),' as e.g. in this present connexion καλῶς πράττειν = to be doing (or faring) well, to be in a prosperous state. Hence it became easy to make the mistake of directly inferring the second meaning from the first, where we of course see only a dialectical play upon words. We do not however draw Bernays' conclusion that Aristotle would not have allowed himself this licence except in a dialogue. Had he looked upon it as a mere play upon words, he certainly would not have admitted it into a dialogue either; most certainly he would not have transcribed it from a dialogue into the present work. As a matter of fact not only has Plato committed the same mistake in all scientific seriousness, Gorg. 507 c [Rep. 353 E], but it is also to be found in c. 3, §§ 1, 8 (cp. mm. 732, 744) and III. 9 § 14 (cp. n. 560 b), and similarly in Nic. Eth. I. 8 § 4, 1098 b 20 ff., though Bernays vainly attempts to disprove the last case (Vahlen). But Spengel is right in thinking it strange that the question disposed of in § 11 is in c. 2 §§ 1, 2 spoken of as still requiring to be settled and is accordingly there settled. This difficulty disappears so soon as we set the two paragraphs side by side as distinct versions of the same subject, and with it another difficulty raised by Hildenbrand p. 368 ff., on which Spengel Arist. Stud. II. p. 73 (565) ff. has laid far more stress than it deserves. Hildenbrand's view is that in III. 18 the question, whether the virtue or the happiness of the individual and of the state is identical or not, is brought forward as having already been settled by III. cc. 5, 6 (cp. mm. 471, 684), whereas in IV(VII). 1 § 11, 2 § 1, the question is first submitted to investigation, and that therefore III. c. 18 is a draft from Aristotle's pen which he afterwards discarded. The error in this conclusion lurks (as Böcker observes) in the words

'virtue or happiness'; for the latter term as used by Aristotle is not coincident with the former, but requires in addition a certain measure of external goods. The proof that the virtue of the state is identical with that of the individual does not therefore by itself in any way demonstrate the identity of their happiness [or wellbeing]. In any case, if we take the one version, that contained in c. 1. § 11, there is no escape from the difficulty that the previous inquiry as to the identity of the virtue of both is also ignored. But if we replace it by the second version, c. 2 §§ 1, 2, there would be nothing to prevent Aristotle expressing himself as he does, even with the distinct presupposition of the earlier inquiry (cc. III. 5, 6) and the reference to it in III. c. 18 § 2. As to the identity of the 'virtue or excellence' manifested by the state and by the individual cp. also c. 13 §§ 9, 10 and VIII(V). 9 § 12 with n. (1642). SUSEM. (708)

§ 12 33. Observe that this is the postulate of Plato in the Republic, made implicitly II. 368 E and reasserted expressly IV 435 B, 442 D ff. On δύναμιν καὶ μορφήν, terms cognate to εἶδος, λόγος, φύσις, cp. Bonitz Ind. Ar. 206 b 12, and n. on I. 4. 6, 1254 a 14. Lat. disciplina, course of study or instruction: in all other passages of Aristotle σχολή=leisure. What is meant is of course ethical science or instruction, which is itself, according to Aristotle, only a portion of politics in the wider sense, ἡ μὲν οὖν μέθοδος τούτων ἐφίεται, πολιτικὴ τις οὖσα, Nic. Eth. I. 2 § 9, 1094 b 11; see Introd. pp. 67, 70 f. As there was a work of Theophrastus called ἡθικαὶ σχολαί (Diog. Laert. v. 47) Kohn op. c. p. 37 ff. finds in this an indication that we have here a passage from his lectures, and not from Aristotle's. But his view requires some stronger proofs. SUSEM. (709) "That σχολή was the recognized term for lecture in the time of Plato is shown by the sarcasm of Diogenes the Cynic τὴν μὲν Εὐκλείδου σχολὴν ἔλεγε σχολήν, τὴν δὲ Πλάτωνος διατριβήν, κατατριβήν, Diog. sequence of cc. 2, 3 upon c. 1 leaves us only two alternatives: either cc. 2, 3 have exactly the same origin as c. 1, although in no way distinguished by the same excellences of style, or else the editor who inserted c. 1 has further added to it from his own materials cc. 2, 3, except of course c. 2 §§ 1, 2 (see n. 708). Even setting aside the difference of style, the second alternative is forced upon us by the numerous difficulties, some slight, others very considerable, which present themselves in this section, see nn. (713—717, 725, 729, 736, 738, 741, 743, 745, 747—749), with which the few points in c. 1 and c. 2 §§ 1, 2 that might raise doubts as to the genuineness of that portion (see nn. 690, 709, 711) should be more closely compared. Read Ed. Müller's exhaustive examination in his History of the theory of art among the ancients II. pp. 366—373, Breslau, 1837, a work universally neglected, which ought to have led subsequent inquirers to a renewed consideration of these chapters. What a deal of pains he takes to remove the difficulties in them, and all in vain. Although my view differs considerably from his, in many respects it is most intimately connected with his exposition. This is not the place to enter into a more detailed examination of his argument, but see n. (743). Only one difficulty is common to the two portions c. 1 (with c. 2 §§ 1, 2) and c. 2 § 3—c. 4 § 1: viz. that later on in c. 3 §§ 3, 4 the inquiry of c. 1, and so too a little further on in c. 13 § 8ff. the inquiry pursued in cc. 2,

3, though in a slightly altered form, is commenced over again, in each case without the slightest sign that they have been already adequately discussed, whereas the interpolator does not fail to refer by anticipation to this later section, c. 3 § 1 (cp. n. 731). SUSEM. (712)

14 ἐν μὲν—22 μεθόδου ταύτης] The transition to the best constitution took place as far back as III. c. 18, and in IV (VII). 1 it was stated that we must first examine the best life; now after having concluded this examination and after having stated that the result holds good for the state as well as for the individual, it seems very awkward to say that there are two questions requiring to be investigated, (1) whether the best life for the individual is one of scientific leisure or of political activity, and (2) which is the best constitution. The first question is violently thrust in, and, as it stands, cannot properly be allowed to take even a secondary rank as a question of politics, which the author at once declares is all that he himself claims for it; it has nothing whatever to do with the science of politics, as Schlosser long since observed. It would be a different thing if it were preceded by, and then taken up and treated as co-ordinate to, the inquiry whether the end of the state is peaceful activity or war, which in § 5 is treated as a co-ordinate question. No account is here taken of the view that history is the aim of the political life, N.E. i. v. 4, 1095 b 23. Whereas in N.E. x. 7. 7, 1177 b 19 ff. αἱ κατὰ τὰς πράξεις ἀρεταὶ are sharply distinguished from ἡ τοῦ νοῦ ἐνέργεια (θεωρητικῇ), here the object seems to be to represent the political and contemplative life as akin, though the latter is in both discussions regarded as ἀυτοτελής (Newman).

34 καὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐκάστω καὶ κοινῇ τῇ πολιτείᾳ] But granting that the speculative (i.e. studious) life is the better end for the individual, the state is in no way concerned in this, beyond rendering such a life possible to the few fitted for it, provided that the rest consent to take active part in the administration: for otherwise the state would itself come to an end. The author is in error (cp. n. 736*) in supposing that the question, whether scientific or political activity ranks highest for the individual, corresponds exactly to the question which arises with regard to the state, whether it should pursue a policy of peace or of war. Cp. nn. (743, 745). SUSEM. (717)

19 ὀβελίσκους] What this word means, is not so easy to decide. The usual translation 'obelisks' or 'stone pillars' is quite reconcileable with the practice of savage tribes. Thus "in New Caledonia rows of stones are found commemorating the number of enemies killed and eaten in former wars." Mr Ridgeway writing to the Academy of Aug. 29, 1885, suggests that this Iberian practice accounts for the stone pillars actually placed around tombs in Western Europe. On the other hand Dr Jackson communicates the following note.

“ὀβελίσκους means, not ‘obelisks’ as the commentators suppose, but literally ‘spits.’ Originally the spits carried the heads of the slain: when the custom of affixing the heads fell into disuse, the spits, which should have borne the actual trophies, continued to be planted ὅσους ἂν διαφθείρῃ τῶν πολέμιων; i.e. the trophy was converted into a badge. On trophy-taking, and its connexion with ‘militancy’, of which Aristotle is quite aware, see Spencer's Ceremonial Institutions ch. ii, p. 48 with p. 186.”

§ 12 22 κατειλημμένα] established, confirmed, secured: Cope Rhet. II. 2 § 20 compares Thuc. v. 21 σπονδὰς εὖρον κατειλημμένας; Plato Latius VII. 823 A τὰ ταῖς ζημίαις ὑπὸ νόμων κατειλημμένα; *Nic. 40 τὸ πρὸς τοῦτο θηρευτὸν] Implying that wild animals which are not fit for food may be hunted for other purposes, and to supply other necessities of life. It is not quite clear whether the writer thinks that for such other purposes it is also under certain circumstances permissible to hunt men, and whether therefore he would allow of war for the capture of slaves, which Aristotle disallows (I. 8 § 12 nn. 65, 75) as a branch of θηρευτικῇ. comp. Zeller II. ii p. 612. But still it is so provided only that under πρᾶξις is included not merely practical, but also theoretical or mental activity, and that consequently the term is understood in the wider sense :
for otherwise this doctrine would not be true of the highest felicity of pure thought, as it pertains to God alone (n. 705), to which however the author himself appeals § 10, n. (746). And of human well-being, too, scientific perfection in active operation is the higher element, moral perfection only the lower element, according to the genuine Aristotelian doctrine. "It must be granted, that then it would be hard to say how the happiness of the individual and of the whole state can be one and the same" (Schlosser). Here Schlosser endeavours to explain the mistake pointed out in nn. (717, 745) by assuming that 'Aristotle subordinated the idea of internal activity to that of contemplation.'

This thought is quite just; but does this unhappy attempt to mend matters by such a confusion look more like the master or a pupil? Granted that this subordination is intended here (and from § 8 this cannot be doubtful—see n. 743), still of those who prefer the scientific life to the practical life it cannot possibly be maintained with truth that they prefer inactivity to activity, nor can Aristotle himself have written anything so inconsistent.

But the qualifications introduced in § 8 seriously impair the comparison.

§ 8 "But the practical life need not mean a life in relation to others, as some suppose, nor those intellectual acts alone be practical which are done for the sake of certain external results of the action: on the contrary the self-contained speculations and processes of the intellect are far more truly practical." By times we should naturally understand Plato: but the cap better fits Aristotle himself, Nic.

Eth. X. 7 § 4, 1177 a 30, ὁ μὲν δίκαιος δεῖται πρὸς οὓς δικαιοπραγήσει καὶ μεθ' ὧν, § 7, αὗται, sc. αἱ πολιτικαὶ πράξεις, ἀσχολοὶ καὶ τέλους τινὸς ἐφίενται καὶ οὐ δι' αὐτὰς αἰρεταί εἰσιν. 20 τὰς αὐτοτελεῖς...διανοήσεις] This can only mean theoretical or purely scientific thinking; Ed. Müller's uncertainty on this point is the chief defect in his whole exposition, which hinders him from arriving at any really tenable result and is the cause of many errors. Cp. Nic. Eth. X. 7 § 5, 1177 b 1 οὐδὲν ἀπ' αὐτῆς, sc. τῆς θεωρητικῆς, γίνεται παρὰ τὸ θεωρῆσαι, ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν πρακτικῶν ἢ πλείον ἢ ἑλαττον περιποιοῦμεθα παρὰ τὴν πρᾶξιν. Upon Aristotle's view two things must be distinguished in every activity, the end and the means; theoretical activity differs from practical and creative activity (see n. 34) in this respect, that in the former internal activity is a self-contained end, while in practical activity the end lies in the act produced by it, which affects some external person, and in the creative activity of art the end is the work or result produced. 'See De Caelo II. 12 § 9, 292 b 6, ἡ πρᾶξις ἐστὶν αἰεὶ ἐν δυνάμει, ὅταν καὶ οὐ ἔνεκα ἧ, καὶ τὸ τοῦτο ἔνεκα, Nic. Eth. VI. cc. 2—5, De Anima III. c. 9' (Eaton): Zeller op. c. II. ii. p. 177 f. preferred to that of the statesman are unconditionally right, nor can we see how far the writer thinks he is mediating between them and their opponents. He would have done so in orthodox Aristotelian fashion only by adding that man must exercise not only his intellectual, but also his moral, powers: that he is an integral part of the whole formed by the state, and not a god, I. 2 §§ 11, 12. That consequently, although it is life in the state which alone renders possible an assured scientific activity itself, yet it may well be permitted to individual men to be active for science primarily, and for the state only secondarily and in the fulfilment of the most general duties of a citizen. That at the same time there must be others who find their real satisfaction in the activity of the statesman and consequently adopt the opposite procedure: while a symmetrical combination of excellence in both will be the highest, and for that reason certainly the least common. See c. 14 §§ 7—11, n. (906), also m. (717, 1024) and Introd. p. 48, p. 50 ff. SUSEM. (743)

§ 9 23 ἀλλὰ μὴν...28 ὁποιοῦν τῶν ἀνθρώπων] 'However even for states placed by themselves and determined upon an isolated life there is no necessity for inaction: activity is still possible to them in sections, for the various sections of the city have many ways of associating. And in the same way this is true of each individual man.' What was recalled to mind in n. (717) is true here also. The comparison is not suitable; for neither is the internal administration of the state a theoretical activity, but rather it is practical or partly practical, partly creative (see m. 34, 743); while in the case of the individual man every activity (except the theoretical) is always finally directed to others. Even on the doctrine of Plato (Zeller Plato p. 451 ff. Eng. tr.), no less than of Aristotle, the individual's moral virtue is primarily a mutual relation of the parts of his soul, the rational soul and that which has to be subjected to the guidance of reason (see m. 41, 112). Yet its active exercise is for the most part possible only in intercourse with others. SUSEM. (745)

29 πᾶς ὁ κόσμος] An activity and happiness of the universe cannot, strictly speaking, be in question on the orthodox doctrine of Aristotle, as he combats the Platonic assumption of a World-soul. The world as a whole is only passively affected, i.e. God causes it to revolve round the earth, which is at rest, in 24 hours: or precisely stated, this passive affection belongs to the rest of the universe, the earth alone being exempt. All other motions and activities, affections and changes, belong to the several beings inside the universe. See Zeller II. ii. pp. 374 ff. 450, 462 ff. And though comprehending all this in its harmonious arrangement we may call it, in a metaphorical sense, the activity of the universe, or even say that the world has its wellbeing in this harmoniously ordered activity, yet considered as an analogy to the internal administration of the state this is more halting than the last (n. 745). For it is intended to prove that the highest happiness of the individual man lies in purely internal or theoretical activity: hence the whole analogy has no meaning unless the wellbeing of the universe (ἔχειν καλῶς) is exactly identical with its happiness (εὐδαιμονεῖν). Yet happiness can only be predicated of a single thinking self-conscious subject, so that if the collective personality of the state may be said to be happy, a world without a world-soul scarcely can. At least, this can hardly be without extraordinary misuse of the term, which I cannot bring myself to attribute to Aristotle. SUSEM. (747)

32 καὶ τοῖς ἀνθρώποις] This somewhat objectionable phrase I once believed, as others have done, to be a later addition. Now however I simply set it down to the interpolator of the entire section, cc. 2, 3, as one more proof of interpolation. SUSEM. (748)

c. 4 § 1 34 καὶ περὶ τὰς ἄλλας πολιτείας] By "other forms of government" were formerly understood all others except the perfect one, and the context which here gives the exact transition to the discussion of the latter, would scarcely permit of any other interpretation. Indeed if we assume that Aristotle himself wrote this as well as all the rest of the chapter, from ἀρχῇ τῶν λοιπῶν onwards, the "other forms of government" can scarcely be understood except as in direct antithesis to the "state to be constituted according to an ideal," τῆς μελλούσης κατ' εὐχὴν συνεσθάναι πόλεως (cp. Diebitsch's excellent remarks, p. 8 f., in opposition to Teichmüller). But then these words would prove that the traditional order of the books is the correct one. Yet the whole of §§ 1, 2 is merely a recapitulation of the contents of the first three chapters, and it is only as such that it has any meaning and connexion, as Spengel, Ueber die Politik p. 26 f., has incontrovertibly proved. The only sensible explanation is this: "After disposing of the necessary introductory questions regarding the best state, we must discuss this best state itself, and must treat first of its external and then of its internal requirements." Thus the intermediate reference to other forms of government (whether the discussion of them has preceded or not) is out of place here and breaks the connexion. Therefore Spengel pronounced the words in question καὶ περὶ τὰς ἄλλας...πρότερον to be an interpolation, and he was followed among others by Susemihl.* But when Hildenbrand p. 363 f. and Teichmüller (Philologus xvi. p. 164 ff.) pronounced "the other forms of government" to refer rather to the other model polities or at least those which are claimed as such, which have been already criticised in the Second Book, as distinguished from the true Aristotelian model state, Spengel gave his adhesion to this view. Yet even if the reference back to these is less injurious to the proposed connexion, still it is an inadmissible interruption, and would have to be set aside as an interpolation by another hand, besides that for the reasons previously stated it is only the former explanation of them, as referring to all other states except the perfect state, which appears possible. But the case is entirely different, if cc. 2, 3 are the work of an interpolator, who must then also be the author of c. 4 § 1 as far as πρότερον. We need then only add this new piece of awkwardness to the rest of his sins, and we shall have after all to decide in favour of the latter interpretation, that the words do refer to B. II., since the interpolator has tacked his composition on to the first chapter, the first sentence of which is immediately connected with the end of Book III., so that, as we have already stated, Introd. p. 48, he either found or made a redaction, which contained the books in the right order. At any rate this is the simplest explanation; we should otherwise have to assume that these words had been afterwards interpolated into his interpolation by a third person, who must already have been acquainted with the order of the 3 § 5), has passed the limits within which civic unity is possible. Such an overgrown city or canton-state must be treated as an ἔθνος: or possibly that is what he contemplates in III. 14 § 1 (πόλει καὶ χώρῃ). The problem which to Aristotle seemed almost insoluble was solved by events, as the federal system became developed; the Achaean league, an ἔθνος, included for a while all Peloponnesus in political unity, Polyb. II. 37. 11.

similar case previously, see on III. 5 § 5) that his own principles require him to withdraw it where increased facilities of communication have enabled men to sur-

At a later time Cicero 'is wholly in agreement' with such opinions, De Repub. ii. c. 3 f. 'Aristotle looks at the question more impartially' (Oncken) and really goes as far as it was possible for him to go with his narrow theories upon Political Economy. But of course even he was greatly hampered by them. See nn. (772, 774). SUSEM. (770)

Thirty years ago our other English commentator Congreve uncompromisingly denounced this dictum: "Any theory and protective system of later times,—which aims at exclusiveness, is to be condemned as a direct attack on the real interests of mankind." Even now how large a part of civilized mankind is in Aristotle's position and fails to discern its real interests in this matter.

 This exactly describes the situation of Athens as the sole mart e.g. of corn from the Black Sea. Cp. Xen. De Vect. 3.

§ 7 1327 b 4 εἰ μὲν γὰρ...βίον] "For if the city is to have a career of supremacy." One would have thought that in his ideal of a state Aristotle would have attended to the domestic activity of the citizens and not to external power and rule: 14 § 21. Nor is this really inconsistent with the present remark, which is very general in its tenor. Proximity to the sea, he says, and a naval force is an advantage to every state: a warlike, conquering state (which on Aristotle's principles therefore is not the best) needs of course a stronger naval force: the best state can do with a smaller fleet. See however n. (917) and Introd. p. 55. SUSEM. (775)

Herakleiot, Anab. v. 6 § 10 (Giphanius). He also calls Herakleia in Pontus a colony from Megara, settled in the land of the Mariandynians (Anab. v. 10 § 1). We know from other sources that there were also Boeotians (from Tanagra) along with the Megarian colonists, and that the colony was founded about 550. Strabo XII. 549 is wrong in designating it a Milesian settlement. The colonists had converted the Mariandynians whom they had conquered into subjects or vassals, in virtue of a compact similar to that made by the Thessalians with the Penestae (cp. n. 280) and by the Spartans with the Helots, containing a special proviso that they should not be sold out of the country. Indeed the Herakleiot did not call them their property or their slaves, but their spear-bearers (δορυφόροι). See Posidonius Frag. 16 in Ath. vi. 263 c, Strab. XII. 542, Plato Laws VI 776 D (J. G. Schneider). See Müller's edition, Fragm. hist. Gr. III. p. 525 ff. There are notices of the early internal history of Herakleia VIII(V). 5 § 3 n. (1555); 6 § 3 (1569), § 7 (1575), § 15 (1582). §§ 2. 3 Compare the remark made by Plato Rep. IV. 435 E, that among the Thracians, Scythians and other northern nations courage predominates; among the Phoenicians and Egyptians love of gain; among the Greeks reason. Hippocrates in his work de aëre, aquis, locis alluded to above in n. (752), p. 547 ff. Kühn, compares in detail the natural differences between Europeans and Asiatics, and describes the happy mean of the Greeks. Herod. IX. 122 makes Cyrus say that fertile countries make effeminate people, since the same soil is not capable of producing rare fruits and warlike men; and in III. 106, he says that Hellas enjoys by far the best climate. Plato Tim. 24 c commends in particular the happy blending of the seasons in Attica, and the combination of warlike excellence and love of knowledge resulting from this influence. In the Aristotelian Problems XIV. 8, 16, there is a discussion of the question why the inhabitants of warm countries are as a rule cowardly, and those of cold countries brave (Eaton). § 2 23 τὰ μὲν γὰρ κτλ] "The nations which live in cold countries, and those which live in Europe." J. G. Schneider tried to explain the text as though Europe were here used in its oldest sense of the country between Peloponnesus and Thrace (Hom. Hymn to Apollo 251). Not only is this interpretation in itself improbable, but the contrast shows that it is not Greek but only non-Greek natives that are here alluded to; and as immediately afterwards Asia is opposed to Europe, the latter must refer to the whole continent just as much as the former. Similarly c. 10 § 3 n. (823). It is necessary therefore to bracket either καὶ or τὰ. In the latter case καὶ will be expegetic: "those who live in the cold countries, i.e. in Europe." SUSEM. (779)

Herod. IX. 2 makes the Thebans say to Mardonios that so long as the Greeks keep united (as formerly had been the case) the whole world could scarcely subdue them: κατὰ μὲν γὰρ τὸ ἰσχυρόν Ἕλληνας ὁμοφρονέοντας, οἵπερ καὶ πάρος ταυτὰ ἐγίνωσκον, χαλεπὰ εἶναι περιγίνεσθαι καὶ ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποισι (Eaton). See further Introd. p. 46. SUSEM. (782)

This is the passage on which Oncken I. 18 ff. II. p. 273 relies for his interpretation of Aristotle's attitude to Alexander and to Greek politics. He compares Isocrates' repeated appeals to the Greek nation to cherish ὁμόνοια (Panegyric, De Pace, Philippos, cp. Ep. 3). According to Oncken the μὴ πολιτεία was already realized de facto in the protectorate over Greece exercised by Philip, and after him by Alexander: the terms of which he infers from the contemporary speech (falsely attributed to Demosthenes) περὶ τῶν πρὸς Ἀλέξανδρον συνθηκῶν. But that the arrangement of 336 B.C. was an alliance of ostensibly free and independent powers, in short a confederation (συνμαχία βοηθείας χάριν) and not a πολιτεία (II. 2 § 3) is proved most conclusively by the wording of the first article; by the orator's argument that Macedon having broken the treaty, Athens has the right to appeal to arms; and by the terms συνθηκαὶ καὶ κοινῇ εἰρήνῃ themselves (cp. Rhet. II. 23 § 18, 1399 b 12 ὅτι τὸ διδόναι γῆν καὶ ὕδωρ δουλεύειν [ἐστίν], καὶ τὸ μετέχειν τῆς κοινῆς εἰρήνης ποιεῖν τὸ προσταττόμενον). Some however are not content to find in the words of the text, as in those of Herodotos, a sudden thought or passing hint. It remains then to inquire: what precisely was the constitution which Aristotle had in mind, under which he thought united Hellas could rule the world? The answer expected is either (1) an absolute monarchy, or (2) a federal state (Bundesstaat). Yet neither satisfies the conditions of a possible answer as given rather in the whole character and tendency of the work than in any single passage. That by 'constitution' Aristotle means the constitution of a city-state and not a race or nation or tribe, is a fundamental postulate, although nowhere expressly laid down. Nations other than the Greek are occasionally mentioned as monarchically and 'despotically' governed, and so far as oriental despotism is one variety of βασιλεία they may be said to have a constitution. But the very words in which this variety is described (see n. on III. 12 § 8) exclude its application to the Greeks: it is because Asiatics are of more servile temper than Europeans, and barbarians generally than Greeks, that they quietly endure the yoke, III. 14 §§ 6, 7. The difficulty lies in the absence of any detailed treatment of the interpolitical relations of the Greek cities. From the silence of our author it would be rash to affirm that theoretically the absolute king who may arise in a single city (III. 13 §§ 13, 14, 24, 25; 14 § 1, § 15; 17 §§ 5—8) has a counterpart in an absolute king over the whole Greek race. The slight evidence there is points to Aristotle's discerning in the hegemony of Macedon (which was nominally all that Philip or Alexander asked and the Congress of Corinth granted) a fact analogous to the old hegemonies of Sparta, Athens, Thebes: see VI(IV). 11 § 18 f., and Frag. 81, 1489 b 26, Plutarch De Alexandri virtute 1 c. 6 ὡς Ἀριστοτέλης συνεβούλευεν αὐτῷ τοῖς μὲν Ἑλλήνων ἡγεμονικῶς τοῖς δὲ βαρβάρους δεσποτικῶς χρώμενος. To us Chaeronea, or Crannon, may mark the end of Greek history. Such was not the feeling of contemporary Greeks—whether they sided with Demosthenes or with Phocion.

§ 6 3 Ἀρχίλοχος] Frag. 67. Archilochus of Paros, who flourished about 680 or somewhat earlier, was the true father of Greek lyrical poetry. Before his time the νόμος belonging to religious poetry had received its artistic development only from Terpander and Klonas (see n. 17 to my edition of the Poetis). The invention of elegiac poetry was disputed between him and Kallinos. But his claim to be the inventor of iambic verse is undisputed, and also to be the first who made a regular arrangement of secular poetry. He seems also to have composed in regular fashion sacred songs for choruses; there is however a doubt as to the genuineness of the ἰὼ Βάκχε attributed to him (Frag. 120), but none as to the hymn to Herakles (Frag. 119). Whether he also wrote dithyrambs and paeans cannot be certainly inferred from Frag. 76, 77. He was the first to introduce the iambic and trochaic metre into poetry and into vocal music constructed according to the rules of art, and he supplied it with a series of strophes composed of short dactylic iambic and trochaic verses, and of verses in which dactyls or anapaests and trochees or iambs were combined. See Westphal Greek Metric II. p. 350 ff., 443, 450, 457, 479 f., 498, 563 ff. The fragment of verse here quoted is a trochaic tetrameter without the opening dipody, and it belonged to a poem composed throughout of such tetrameters, as we see from another longer fragment (Frag. 66). On Archilochus, see Bernhardt History of Greek literature II. p. 486. SUSEM. (788)

§ 7 7 οὐ καλῶς κτλ] Here clearly Aristotle is taking Plato's statements much too literally, and in a much cruder and stricter sense than they are meant. SUSEM. (789)

9 οὐδὲ εἰσὶν οἱ μεγαλόψυχοι κτλ] Plato also Rep. IV. 440 c designates indignation at injuries received as a main element of θυμός, and indeed, as already noticed in n. (641), he refers ambition to θυμός. But Aristotle also mentions Post. Anal. II. 12 § 22, 97 b 15 ff. as one of the chief characteristics of the μεγαλόψυχοι, that they will not brook insult. On the other hand Nic. Eth. IV. 3 § 30, 1125 a 31 ff. that they are not revengeful, but know how to forgive and forget (Eaton). It is not easy however to reconcile what is here stated with the description given there § 24, 1124 b 9 ff., according to which the high-minded man is ready to confer benefits, but is ashamed of receiving them, and always requites services done

The view of De Partibus Animal. 1. 5 §§ 12—16, 645 b 14—20, is that every part (μῦριον) of the body, like an instrument (ὄργανον), is for an end: this end is a function (πράξις τις). The parts are nose, eyes, face, etc.; the functions, more or less specific, γένεσις, αἰσῆσις, ὕπνος, πορεία, κτλ.

The transposition of the clause 27 οἷον
 εἴτε τροφή... 28 ἐστὶν appears inevitable, because 'food' and a 'quantum of territory'
 would otherwise be adduced as instances of ἐν τι κοινὸν τοῖς κοινωνοῖς, for which purpose they are clearly inappropriate.

 The common object of the society, which gives the city its unity, is its ethical end, the conviction of the members that they must endeavour to realize a noble life, § 4, a 36—38 (cp. III. c. 9). On the other hand a supply of food and so much territory are indispensable requisites, and would seem to be included under κτήσις
 a 33.

24 οὐδ' ἄλλης κοινωνίας.. ἐξ ἧς ἐν τι τὸ γένος] "Nor is this true of any other association which is to form a unity of kind" (and not merely of mass, γένος is adverbial accus.): i.e. which is to have a true organic unity, not merely the collective unity of an aggregate or heap. After 25 ἐν τι there is no need to insert ἔσται, for γενήσεται (or ἔσται) can easily be understood. SUSEM. (796)

§ 2 For the real members of the society must have some one identical common interest, though they need not all share in it equally. Haec mihi videtur esse sententia: unum aliquid idemque sociis commune necesse est (Sussemihl).

25 A generic unity, or natural composite whole, I. 5. 3, 1254 a 29 n., but not a κράσις, μίξις, or σύμφυσις in which the mingled elements vanish and give birth to a new product: for the citizens continue to exist as parts of the whole I. 2.

 the mere heap and the organic whole is explained Meta. Z. 17. 8, 1041 b 18 ff. (ex-apart from its constituents). See also

§ 3 There is no such 'common interest' in the case of the means to an end and the end itself, the tools and the craftsman, architecture (the builder's art) and the house. § 4 Hence property may be necessary to cities, but nevertheless does not form part of a city.

28 ὅταν δ' ἢ.....35 ἐστίν] This passage is closely connected with § 6 b 2 ἐπισκεπτέον δὲ κτλ. No one would suspect any loss if the intervening passage §§ 4, 5, 1328 a 35—b 2 were removed. In fact this intervening passage must be regarded as a parenthesis, suggested by a 26 ἂν τε ἴσον ἂν τε ἄνισον μεταλαμβάνωσιν, apparently inserted in the wrong place: Quaest. crit. coll. p. 401. In confirmation of this view may be cited Dr Postgate's remark (Notes p. 9): "the same sense can be got out of the text by making ἐν γάρ τι...μεταλαμβάνωσι, § 2, parenthetical, and ἢ δὲ πόλις κτλ, § 4, a resumption of it: thus οἷον...ἐστὶν will refer to ὅσα ταῖς πόλεσιν ἀναγκαῖον ὑπάρχειν." That is, though his own remedies are different (see Crit. n.), he agrees as to the end in view; viz. the reference of 27 οἷον κτλ to 24 ὅσα ταῖς πόλεσιν ἀναγκαῖον ὑπάρχειν, and the resumption of 15 ἐν γάρ τι...27 μεταλαμβάνωσιν at 35 ἢ δὲ πόλις κτλ.

28 ὅταν δ'] 'When one thing is the means and another the end, in this case at least there is nothing in common, except that the latter receives the activity of the former.' A very doubtful use of λαβεῖν instead of λαβεῖν τι, said of the thing acted upon: by no means established, as Prof. Ridgeway thinks, by Pl. Apol. 25 E, where τινὰ μοχθηρὸν ποιήσω τῶν ξυνόντων is followed by κακὸν τι λαβεῖν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. Dr Postgate's παθεῖν brings out the exact shade of meaning: "the one acts and the other is acted upon; the builder makes and the house is made."

30 οἷον ὀργάνῳ] Nic. Eth. VIII. 11. 6, 1161 a 32 ff. The same incompatibility exists between the tyrant and his subjects as between soul and body, workman and tool, master and slave. Cp. E. E. VIII. 9. 2, 1241 b 17—19. (Could λαβεῖν = be the recipient of services, ποιήσαι = to render them?)

§ 4 33 That property is no 'part' of the state, but merely an indispensable condition, must weigh with us in deciding whether κτητική is a branch of οἰκονομική, I. 4. 1, n. (32), from the constant parallel of household and state 1. 8 § 13, § 15, 1256 b 30, 37 f.; 11 § 13, 1259 a 33 ff.

40 τῷ γίνεσθαι πόλεως εἶδη καὶ διαφορὰς καὶ πολιτείας πλείους] This supplement the statement of III. I §§ 8, 9. An imperfect constitution exists because it is the natural outcome of a given social condition. Either the subordinate ends, which fall short of man's true development, are raised into ultimate ends: or the true end is sought, but not for all' (A. C. Bradley). Cp. c. 9 § 2, 1328 b 31.

1328 b 1 Cp. I. 8. 4 ff.

§ 6-2 The recognition of the 'parts' or Members proper will be facilitated by an enumeration of social functions (ἔργα), i.e. 'occupations' (b 20 ἐργασίας) requisite to the independent existence of the community, which serves roughly to classify the inhabitants working at these occupations: food implies farmers, handicrafts workmen, etc. New terms are introduced in the parallel lists VII(vi). 7. 1, 1321 a 4 ff. (βανανσικόν, ἀγοραῖον) and VI(IV). 4. 9, 1290 b 40 ff. (βάνανσον, ἀγοραῖον, δικαστικόν, δημιουργικόν, βουλευσόμενον): but here τεχνῆται must include βάνανσοι, while τὸ εὐπορον or 'capital' probably furnishes the wealthier merchants (ἀγοραῖον), so far as these are citizens, and the comprehensive κριταὶ τῶν δικαίων καὶ συμφερόντων corresponds in the main to three classes (judicial, official, deliberative) of VI(IV). c. 4. "Both lists reflect the imperfect industrial and professional development of Greek society" (Newman).

3 All the real members, or parts (μέρη), of a city will be indispensable, though not all things indispensable will be members.

4 διὸ * *] There are so many conceivable possibilities for filling up this lacuna that any definite attempt of this kind becomes idle. SUSEM. (802)

§ 7 An enumeration of functions necessary in a city, to some extent parallel, is attempted in Plato Rep. II. 381, cp. Phaedr. 248 D, E.

§ 7 8 πρὸς τε τὴν ἀρχήν κτλ] To these two legitimate ends of warfare is added a third c. 14 § 21, 1334 a 2 n. (918).

Thus it includes the making of laws and the common action of the consultative and executive councils as well as of the officers of state. SUSEM. (803)

§ 8 18 ὡς φαμέν] III. I § 12, cp. n. (447); IV(VII). 4 § 11 n. (759); also n. (21) with the passages there quoted. The present φαμέν is equivalent to a reference to what has preceded, not only here but c. 10 § 9, n. (831), c. 13 § 4 n. (872), 14 § 8 n. (902). Any multitude of men taken at random does not constitute a state; a remark which was made c. 4 § 6 n. (753) and repeated VII(V). 3. 11 n. (1531 b). SUSEM. (804)

§ 9 20 κατὰ τὰς ἐργασίας] must be organized in accordance with these occupations.

Those who remain will have different functions, according to age, military, governmental, and judicial duties. This close body of citizens will own the land: when superannuated, to become priests.

This exclusion of the 'necessary appendages' from full civic rights was foreshadowed in the criticism of Plato's Republic, II. c. 5 §§ 18—28, and of Hippodamus, c. 8 §§ 8—12: it was laid down distinctly III. c. 5: see n. (504).

τοὺς διὰ τὸν χρόνον ἀπειρηκότας] Those who are superannuated: upon the principle stated II. 9. 25, see n. (330). This is the solution of an apparent inconsistency; that in this, the only genuine aristocracy, n. (530), all citizens have equal rights, see n. (930), and yet aristocracy is the rule of a minority: III. 7 §§ 1—3, 15 §§ 8—10 n. (648), cf. III. 18. 1. For if the citizens of the ideal state must complete military service before admission, at the age of 35, into the popular assembly (c. 16 § 9 1335 a 30 ff., Exc. II.), and are not eligible to the Council or the offices of state (military commands excepted) till they are about fifty, while later on they are again released from all civic duties and lose all civic rights by becoming priests, it follows that it is only from his fiftieth to about his seventieth year that each citizen can have a share in the entire government and administration, as indeed was remarked Introd. p. 51, p. 54. For these twenty years only is he actually a full citizen, in the active exercise of his rights. This being so, the ruling body of full citizens will always remain, beyond all doubt, a minority of the civic body in the wider sense, including the soldiers and superannuated old men, even if the boys and youths are excluded. Comp. c. 13 § 9, 1332 a 34 n. (885), c. 14 §§ 4, 5. On the position

The historical digression is apparently an interpolation by a well-informed Peripatetic. (818) Hippodamos (see II. 8. 2) also adopted this division between the military and agricultural population, which was always one of the main features of the Spartan state, II. 5. 17, 1264 a 10 note. A later historian finds a parallel to Plato's republic in the Indian state: Holm Griech. Gesch. III. p. 185.

1329 b 3 τὰ μὲν οὖν] An instance of the idiomatic use of the particle οὖν not illative, at the beginning of a sentence, but explanatory and distributive, introducing a subordinate clause: "μὲν οὖν saepe usurpatur, ubi notio modo pronuntiata amplius explicatur" Bonitz Ind. Ar. s.v. The stock instance is Poet. c. 22 § 4, 1458 a 23: ἀλλὰ ἂν τις ἅπαντα τοιαῦτα ποιήσῃ, ἣ ἀνιγμὰ ἐστὶ ἣ βαρβαρισμός, ἂν μὲν οὖν ἐκ μεταφορῶν, ἀνιγμὰ, ἂν δ' ἐκ γλωττῶν, βαρβαρισμός. Vahlen Beiträge III. 317 f. points out that this sentence should not be divided by a colon or period after the first βαρβαρισμός. So closely is the whole connected that the clause ἂν μὲν οὖν serves simply to distribute the preceding clause into its parts, explaining τοιαῦτα by ἐκ μεταφορῶν and ἐκ γλωττῶν. Consequently οὖν is not illative: a simple μὲν and δὲ would have sufficed (as in the present passage they do suffice below § 2, b 6 f. τὰ μὲν...τὰ δέ...). Vahlen classifies the present passage and Soph. El. 6. 15, 169 a 19, as precisely similar. He admits Categ. 2 § 1, 1 a 17, Top. 105 b 21, 108 b 9, b 38 to be not very different: while Pol. I. 2. 8, 1252 b 29 (see Crit. note), IV(VII). 17. 8, 1336 b 4, b 6 (ὅλως μὲν οὖν...μάλιστα μὲν οὖν), and VIII(V). 12. 8, 1316 a 8 are somewhat dissimilar. Perhaps De Rep. Athen. c. 43 § 3, p. 111, 6 K¹, but Harpocration omits οὖν.

4 Σεσώστριος] The Greeks were accustomed to refer all manner of Egyptian institutions to this celebrated king, in whom they seem to have combined (see Duncker History of Antiquity, I.⁵ 134—158, Eng. tr. 1877, pp. 142—159) two real kings, Sethos I. (1439—1388 B.C.) and Ramses II. (1388—circa 1350), just as all Spartan institutions were attributed to Lycurgus, and all Cretan institutions to Minos. In reality the caste-system, or rather the organization of the Egyptian population (Duncker I.⁵ 191 f., Eng. tr. pp. 197—200) existed long before these two kings, and in germ at any rate goes back to the earliest records of Egyptian history. SUSEM. (819)

"The monuments prove that there was no such thing as caste, in the strict sense of the term, in Egypt. The son might, and usually did, follow the father's calling: professions and offices of state were often inherited. But there is no evidence of compulsion, or of obligation to marry only in a given caste": A. Wiedemann on Herod. II. 164, Herodots zweites Buch p. 573, who quotes Plato Tim. 23, 24, Isocr. Busiris 6—8, Diod. I. 73 f., I. 28, Strabo XVII. p. 787. Cp. Les castes en Egypte in Le Muséon, 1886. Also E. Meyer Gesch. des alten Aegyptens (Berlin 1887) II. p. 169. Meyer (ib. p. 292) doubts whether Ramses II. really corresponds to Sesostrius, any more than User-tesen II. (as supposed by Manetho), or indeed any one military conqueror more than another among the kings. Wiedemann however (Aegyptische Geschichte p. 429 f.) follows Lepsius in regarding Ramses II. as the nucleus, around whom, as around Alexander the Great, legends collected. Cp. Ranke Weltgesch. I. p. 26, Maspero Genre ép. p. 83: 'Setsû, var. Setsû-râ, le nom populaire de Rhamsès II.'

Of Aristotle Wiedemann says (Gesch. p. 117): "the three notices dealing with Ἰταλόν τινα... 15 γεωργούς] Antiochus (Fr. 6 apud Strab. VI. 254 f.) however calls the Lametic gulf the Napetine: the name common in later times is ὁ Ἰπ-πωνιατικός. This gulf is in the south-west of Italy, in Bruttium, and is now Golfo di S. Eufemia: just opposite to it, on the east coast, is the Scylletic Gulf or Golfo di Squillaci. Strabo describes them as 160 stadia [i.e. 18 miles 660 yds] apart, rather more than half a day's journey. The name Italy was then originally confined to the south-west promontory of the peninsula, between the strait of Messina on the one side and these two gulfs on the other. Oenotria means Wine-land, Italus the Ox, or calf: Italy, the land of Oxen. The ox used for ploughing must be meant, a symbol of the transition of the Graeco-Italians from a pastoral to an agricultural life; and this, one of the oldest legends of the Italian race, shrewdly connects the original Italian legislation with the transition. Another version of the same belief makes the ox the leader of the primitive Samnite colonies; while the oldest national names in Latin distinguish the people as reapers (Siculi perhaps also Sicani) or field-labourers (Opsi). See Mommsen, History of Rome I. p. 21 f. Eng. tr. Thucydides VI. 2. 4 calls this king Italos not an Oenotrian but a Sicel. For the name Europe, see c. 7 § 2, n. (779). SUSEM. (823)

terpolator has taken the opportunity to air his historic knowledge, for this whole passage has nothing whatever to do with the point he wants to prove. The nearest neighbours of the Oenotrians or Itali on the north-west and north-east only, are mentioned here. At any rate this must be supposed to have been the writer's intention, if indeed the mention of these places has any meaning at all. The name of the one, Opici, is the same as the Opsci or Oscans, explained in n. (823). Why the Greeks called them Ausonians we cannot tell. Iapygia denotes what was afterwards called Apulia and Calabria. The Siris is a river in the south-east of Lucania. His inclusion of the Chonians among the Oenotrians is another proof of the author's agreement with Antiochus (Frag. 6, n. 823). But the Oscans were not near neighbours of that oldest Italy; even according to the account given by the interpolator they lived south of Tyrrhenia (Etruria) in Latium, and more especially in Campania, north of the Gulf of Paestum. Cp. Arist. Frag. 567 [558 Arist. pseudop. = 609 ed. Teubn.] in Dion. Hal. Ant. Rom. I. 72 where Latium is described as a region in Οπίκε, τὸν τόπον τοῦτον τῆς Ὀπικῆς, ὃς καλεῖται Λάτιον (Eaton). But Antiochus goes on to say that the name Italy, and probably also the earlier name Oenotria, had first been extended further north as far to the north-west as the river Laos which flows through the south-west of Lucania and to the north-east as far as the plain of the Siris and Metapontum, situated to the north of this plain in the north-east part of Lucania; so that Tarentum, which is not far east of Metapontum, was still included in Iapygia; for he tells us, the country round the plain of the Siris had been inhabited by a great

Oenotrian tribe, the Chonians, who gave it the name Chonē. Thus the whole of the west coast of this region newly added to the old designation Italy is washed by the Terinaic Gulf, of which the Hipponia-tic in the extreme south is only a particular bay. Thucydides' use of the word Italy quite accords with this, for he includes Metapontum in Italy, but makes it the boundary towards Iapygia (VII. 33 § 3), while he appears to include Tarentum in Iapygia (VI. 44 § 2) and places Campanian Cuma in Opicia (VI. 4 § 5). Herodotos (I. 167) even extends the designation Oenotria beyond the Laos and the Terinaic Gulf, so that Elea also is included in it. The country of the Opici would then touch this enlarged Italy on the north-west, but unfortunately in our present passage there is no mention of this extension of the name; and, besides, the Chonian territory is not said to border on this enlarged Italy or Oenotria, but is itself included in it. The whole passage is therefore doubtless a wretched interpolation, and as such would have to be removed from the rest, if that really belonged to Aristotle. But it will be shown in notes (829, 830) that the whole passage §§ 1—9 has been added by another hand, and that its author, one of the oldest Peripatetics, though he has drawn from good historical sources, may yet have written this sentence, in which he has certainly made very bad use of them. § 8 34 τὰ δὲ παραλελειμμένα πειρᾶσθαι ζητεῖν] How can that be done, if everything has been already discovered? It is hardly possible to attribute this paradox to Aristotle. The intermediate link is wanting, which explains that what has been already discovered may be lost in oblivion and therefore require to be rediscovered. SUSEM. (829) Cp. Plato Laws 630 E of legislators: οὐ γὰρ ἂν ἕκαστος ἐν χρεῖᾳ γίγνηται, τοῦτο ζητεῖ νῦν παραθέμενος. But Waitz compares the end of the Topics, 184 b 6—8.

§ 9 36 ὅτι μὲν οὖν...39 χώραν] If we compare this new recapitulation with the one given above in c. 9 § 10, it is clear that it passes over everything intermediate, as not containing anything peculiar or important for the course of the inquiry, but as seeking historic confirmation partly for what is affirmed in c. 9 and partly, with an eye to what is coming, for the syssitia, which do not come up for discussion until 10 § 10; like the former recapitulation, it summarizes everything discussed before c. 10. But while the former is rightly confined to the contents of the two preceding chapters, with which alone what follows (6—9) is connected, the latter wrongly passes over the passage c. 5 § 4—c. 6 § 7, as though none of it were there at all, and goes back to the subject-matter of c. 5 §§ 1—3, although this has no immediate connexion with what follows. We can clearly detect the interpolator, who has framed this second recapitulation, so entirely out of place here, with the sole object of fastening his own composition (i.e. c. 10 §§ 1—8) on Aristotle's treatise. αὐτῆς δὲ πρὸς αὐτὴν εἶναι...κατατυ-χάνειν...37 βλέποντας] The construction of the infinitives εἶναι, κατατυγχάνειν is disputed, and Bonitz Ind. Ar. s. v. suspects the latter word. Busse (op. c. p. 17) compares (as Götting had done) phrases like ἐκὼν εἶναι and the like: he thinks an object of the verb κατατυγχάνειν can be supplied without trouble from what follows. On the contrary, if κατατυγχάνειν is sound, it is on this verb that the accus. with infinitive τὴν θέσιν εἶναι must depend: this construction already given in Passow's lexicon has lately been proposed anew by Dr Jowett (=τοῦ θέσιν εἶναι). To this Susemihl objects: "at non hoc optandum est ut τὴν θέσιν accipiat urbs, sed τὴν ἐπιτηδεύαν θέσιν vel τὴν θέσιν ὡς δεῖ, quod ut subaudiri posset e verbis πρὸς τέτταρα δὴ βλέποντας, scribendum potius erat fere sic: αὐτὴν δὲ καθ' αὐτὴν τῆς θέσεως κατατυγχάνειν. Aut igitur lacuna deformatus esse videtur locus aut, quae est Bonitzii suspicio, κατατυγχάνειν corruptum. Omnia bene se haberent, si <τοῦ ἐπιτηδεύαν> vel <τοῦ οἶαν δεῖ> εἶναι legeretur, sed in re tam incerta praestat a coniecturis abstinere." Mr Welldon's proposal is met by the inquiry, Can κατατυγχάνειν govern an accusative? and if it can, would it not be easier to omit εἶναι with P⁵? (See Quaest. crit. coll. p. 407, of which the foregoing is an abstract.) SUSEM.

Aristophanes Wasps 265 speaks of the north wind as rainy, and so also Theophrastus De ventis § 4: like the trade winds, he adds, which are described sometimes as north-east and sometimes as north-west winds. Socrates in Xen. Memor. III. 9. 9 and Xenophon himself Oecon. c. 9 § 4 (a passage almost literally copied Pseudo-Arist. Oecon. I. c. as Schlosser remarked) prefer a house with a south aspect (Eaton). § 5 20 ἀριστοκρατικόν] This holds good of the best constitution also, since this is at once the true and the best form of aristocracy: VI(IV). 7. 2 n. For it is only in an aristocracy that fortified places are used solely as a protection against external foes; and the latter will plainly find the conquest of the city more difficult if they have to capture many such. Under a monarchy or an oligarchy the Acropolis, or single citadel, was also used for defence against popular insurrections; for this reason it is against the interests of democracy, because liable to become the rallying place of movements in favour of the tyrant or the oligarchs; in short usurpers may establish themselves there. These remarks are not disproved by the fact that democratic states like Athens itself retained their old Acropolis. SUSEM. (849)

But "Aristotle probably has in view the experience of Perinthus, when besieged by Philip of Macedon. Grote asked how, if Sparta had had walls like those of Babylon, they could have procured for her any greater protection than her strong position afforded in the first Theban invasion, 370—369. But in his last invasion, 362, Epaminondas,

it unawares, actually penetrated into the

So of the remark of Archidamus, which Camerarius quotes from Plutarch, that at 5 The repetition of εἰς before ἄρχοντας is not without parallel. But as the soldiers form an important element of τὸ πλῆθος τῆς πόλεως, it is probable either that they were mentioned here (possibly the double εἰς conceals some corruption), or that πόλεως is itself a corruption of πολιτεύματος, the governing body. See Quaest. crit. coll. pp. 409—411. It is apparent from a comparison of II. 6. 2, 1264 b 32, εἰς δύο μέρη, τὸ μὲν εἰς γεωργούς, τὸ δὲ εἰς τὸ προπολεμιῶν μέρος, and infra c. 14 § 12, 1333 a 30 ff. διηρηται...τῶν πρακτῶν τὰ μὲν εἰς τὰ ἀναγκαῖα καὶ χρήσιμα τὰ δὲ εἰς τὰ καλὰ, how much harsher the text is than would be the following e.g. τὸ μὲν εἰς ἱερεῖς τὸ δὲ εἰς ἄρχοντας.

With τὴν τῶν ἱερῶν οἰκοδομημάτων understand, from b 1, ἀγορὰν as in b 11. See Quaest. crit. coll. p. 410. This removes one of Prof. Ridgeway's objections (Transactions II. p. 143), but it is still strange that ἱερῶν should be an adjective here when it is a substantive § 2, § 8.

This next chapter, c. 13, is preliminary to that detailed account of Education in the best state which forms the subject of the treatise from c. 14 to the (incomplete) termination of B. v(VIII). We have here a string of remarks on the end of the state, and the best means to secure it by a given character in the citizens: remarks not very dissimilar to parts of cc. 1—3, or again to c. 14. For this reason the chapter has been bracketed by Congreve and Broughton, either wholly or in part.
See Ana. p. 115 f., Introd. p. 88 f.
Prof. J. Cook Wilson's view, as there stated, is that c. 13 seems like a shorter duplicate of cc. 14, 15. "The chief difference is that c. 13, 1332 a 7—9, takes the definition of the Good in the general form given in Nic. Eth. I. c. 7 (or Eud. Eth. II. 1), while cc. 14—15,

§ 4 1332 a 2 οἱ δ' εὐθὺς] The δὲ answers μὲν of 1331 b 40: 'whereas others, with the means at their command, from the outset miss the right way to attain happiness.' For this sense of εὐθὺς comp. I. 5. 2, 1254 a 23 εὐθὺς ἐκ γενετῆς. Bonitz Ind. s. v. distinguishes (1) a temporal use, as in III. 16. 9, 1287 b 10, I. 8, 9, 1256 b 9, κατὰ τὴν πρώτην γένεσιν εὐθὺς; so VI(IV). 11. 6, 1295 b 16, εὐθὺς οἰκοθεν, and VIII(V). c. 4 § 9, 1304 a 30, § 12, 1304 b 9, c. 5 § 3, 1304 b 32, c. 11 § 23, 1314 b 29: (2) a quasi-causal sense, suaute natura, = φύσει εὐθὺς (ὑπάρχει), as in V(VIII). 5. 23, 1340 a 40: (3) introducing, in a series of reasons, one which is at once perfectly obvious, as I. 13. 6, 1260 a 4, III. 4. 6, 1277 a b, IV(VII). 14. 2, 1332 b 18, V(VIII). 2. 2, 1337 b 2.

3 ἐπεὶ... 7 λανθάνειν] It is pointed out in Exc. I. (p. 559) that the same expression has already been employed twice before, (i) in c. 1 § 1 ff. and (ii) in cc. 8 and 9 (c. 8 § 4 f. 1328 a 35—39, with which must go c. 9 § 3, 1328 b 34—39, § 7, 1329 a 22). The first time this resulted in an independent investigation of the nature of Happiness, εὐδαιμονία, while on the second occasion Happiness was merely defined (as ἀρετῆς ἐνέργεια καὶ χρῆσις τέλειος 1328 a 38), without further explanation and without reference either to the previous discussion of c. 1, or to the Ethics. Hence—assuming the genuineness of c. 13 and especially observing that in this present passage, too, the discussion of c. 1 is ignored—we inferred that the first chapter of our present book was not intended, in Aristotle's final plan, to find a place in this work. Another difficulty, certainly, though a less serious one, arises from the fact that here the passage in cc. 8 and 9 is equally ignored. Had Aristotle put the finishing touches to his work, he would doubtless have inserted a reference to the Ethics there (i. e. in c. 8 § 4), and a short allusion to the previous passage (c. 8 § 4 f., c. 9 § 3, § 7) here. The difficulty is however much diminished by the reading adopted in c. 13 § 1, φαμὲν δὲ καὶ διωρίσμεθα, where the present φαμὲν should perhaps be again taken—as at 1328 b 18 n. (804), 1329 b 41 n. (831), 1331 a 19 n. (902)—in the sense of ἔφαμεν, and thus as referring back to cc. 8 and 9. Cp. also n. (807) and I. 2. 8 n. (21). SUSEM. (872)

§ 5 8 ἐν τοῖς ἠθικοῖς] Nic. Eth. I. 7. 9 ff., esp. § 15, 1098 a 15 ff., 1101 a 14 ff. Comp. cc. 6—8. SUSEM. (873)
 εἴ τι τῶν λόγων ἐκείνων ὄφελος] It is impossible to decide whether this parenthetical remark is due solely to Aristotle's love of qualifying and limiting expressions (see n. 401), or is to be explained, as Bernays supposes [Dialogue, p. 72], from his relations with practical statesmen as a half-sarcastic reference to the scornful way in which men like Phocion and Antipater would look down upon his philosophical treatment of such questions. SUSEM. (874)

With far less probability Grote in an essay on the Ethics (in Fragments p. 133 f.) connects this passage with Nic. Eth. I. 3. 2 f., 1094 b 14 ff. and II. 2. 3—5, 1104 a 1—11 (πειρατέον βοθηεῖν) as an indication of Aristotle's despair of reaching certainty, or securing any common agreement upon matters of ethics and politics (cp. 1337 b 2): "that Aristotle regarded 9 The grammatical subject of εἶναι is εὐδαιμονίαν. The definition in full is ἐνέργεια καὶ χρῆσις ἀρετῆς τελεία, οὐκ ἐξ ὑποθέσεως ἀλλ' ἀπλῶς. Comp. Mr Newman's remarks I. p. 575 f., II. 385—401.

τελείαν] We may paraphrase: "matured and relatively permanent." See Rassow Forschungen p. 116 ff. Happiness of too short duration is no true happiness, as Aristotle shows in the passage to which he refers. At the same time in expressing himself thus he is doubtless thinking of a certain immaturity in age: for a child has not yet attained to Well-being, because its virtue is not yet developed: Nic. Eth. I. 9. 10, 1100 a 1 ff., cp. Pol. I. 13. 11, n. (120). The corresponding negative term, too, ἀτελής, is used for the undeveloped and immature virtue and reasoning power, as well as for that of a commonplace man who has never attained full intellectual or social development: I. 13. 7 f. (cp. § 11), III. 11. 9 n. (572), V(VIII). 5. 10 n. (1033). SUSEM. (875)

There are no good English equivalents for these technical terms: 'conditional' (or contingent) and 'absolute' are attributes not very suitable to moral or virtuous activity, or goods in general.

§ 6 11 τἀναγκαῖα] On this passage see Dr Jackson's article, Journal of Phil. X. 311, to which should be added that he justifies "the rather abrupt use of the word τἀναγκαῖα for morality enforced by law and custom by a reference to Plato Rep. VI. 493 C: ἀλλὰ τἀναγκαῖα δίκαια καλοὶ καὶ καλά, τὴν δὲ τοῦ ἀναγκαίου καὶ ἀγαθοῦ φύσιν, ὅσον διαφέρει τῷ ὄντι, μήτε ἑωρακὸς εἴη κτλ." Cp. c. 14 § 12, 1333 a 32: πρακτά=(1) ἀναγκαῖα καὶ χρήσιμα, (2) καλά, and Nic. Eth. III. 8. 5, 1116 b 2 f. δεῖ δ' οὐ δι' ἀνάγκην ἀνδρείον εἶναι, ἀλλ' ὅτι καλόν.

 is not made there in so many words: this is much more nearly the case in the two ἐνέργειαι. In fact χρήσις and ἐνέργεια are both opposed to ξίσις. The use which from time to time he makes of these goods (not of their opposites) attests his absolute virtuousness and goodness.

 Hence to consider external goods the cause of Wellbeing is the same thing as to attribute to the instrument what is really the result of the player's skill.

25 διὸ..., 26 ἀγαθῶν] Because external goods are just those which while absolutely good (ἀπλῶς ἀγαθὰ) are not good for every one, but only good at all times to the good man: Nic. Eth. v. 1. 9, 1129

 the whole passage, §§ 2—8, from 1331 b 26

 unnecessary interruption of the reasoning.
 "What was said" (a 28, τῶν εἰρημένων)
 would then mean what was said cc. 4—12; and that would undoubtedly serve to explain what according to §§ 9, 10 requires explanation ἐκ τῶν εἰρημένων. But then the following passage a 31 τὸ δὲ σπουδαῖον κατὰ lacks all proper connexion unless it has been directly preceded by the statement that Wellbeing consists in the practice of virtue assisted by the requisite external conditions. This alone makes all follow in regular order: these conditions, we are now told, § 9, depend on Fortune, but if the external conditions are present it is the governing intelligence that produces virtue. Hence the fundamental idea of §§ 1—8 is indispensable for the context, and the athetesis of that passage is not the right way to remove the objection noticed in nn. (687, 872), although we do not deny, and in n. (872) have clearly stated, that the present detailed discussion would doubtless have received a different character had the final touches been given to the work. With Congreve, square brackets do not necessarily imply an un-Aristotelian origin. Still it is all but inconceivable, if the connexion intended was that assumed by Congreve, that Aristotle himself should have spoilt it by the inserted passage. Apart from the connexion, the whole passage does not look un-Aristotelian. For, though we cannot stop to prove this here, of all Broughton's objections to the genuineness of c. 13 the only valid one is that mentioned in nn. (876, 879), which taken by itself is far from decisive; while the genuineness of the passage is supported by the reference back to it embedded in the context of c. 15 § 7, 1334 b 6 f.; cp. n. (931). SUSEM. (881)

28 ἐκ] It follows from what has been said: cp. n. on 1254 a 31.

τὰ μὲν = ἐκ τίνων καὶ ποῶν δεῖ συνεστάσαι τὴν μέλλουσαν ἔσσεσθαι πόλιν μακαρίαν = χορηγίᾳ ἀρετῆς ἀπλῶς καὶ τάγαθὰ ἀπλῶς. To this is opposed the work of the legislator as in I. 10. 1, 1258 a 21 ff., II. 5. 8, 1263 a 39, II § 15, 1273 b 21. The drift of §§ 9, 10, seems to be this. Of the two requisites, the one, χορηγία, is due to Fortune: the other, ἀρετή, is the legislator's task (σκεπτέον). Cp. 1333 a 14 πραγματευτέον, viz. by education. 13 f. Against the proposed transposition (see Crit. n.) Dr Jackson argues in the following note: 'Aristotle here contrasts (a) the permanent assignment of the functions of ruling and being ruled,
so that the man who rules never is ruled,
the man who is ruled never rules, with (b)
the alternation of the functions of ruling and being ruled, so that at one time X rules, Y is ruled, at another Y rules, X is ruled. Now a priori the phrase τοὺς αὐτοὺς εἶναι might be used to describe either of the contrasted systems: i.e. it might be said that, when the functions are permanently assigned, "the same person always rules, the same person always is ruled"; or again it might be said that, when the functions alternate, "the same persons rule and are ruled." But although the phrase might be used in either sense, plainly it should not be used simultaneously in both senses. Susemihl however, though he has altered the text in 1332 b 13, 14, so that the phrase τοὺς αὐτοὺς εἶναι bears the latter of the two meanings above distinguished, nevertheless employs it in the former of those meanings in 1332 b 22. Thus the alteration creates an inconsistency. On the other hand, if the phrase is taken in both places in the former of the two meanings, the unaltered text is consistent and intelligible.'

What Jackson calls an inconsistency Susemihl assumes to have been the cause of the alteration: "vitium inde ortum esse videtur, quod deinde pro τοὺς ἀρχον-τας καὶ τοὺς ἀρχομένους ἐτέρους εἶναι διὰ βίου potius dicitur διὰ τοὺς αὐτοὺς τοὺς μὲν ἀρχειν τοὺς δ' ἀρχεσθαι καθάπαξ (v. 22 sq.) et pro τοὺς αὐτοὺς εἶναι accuratius πάν-τας ὁμοίως κοινωνεῖν τοῦ κατὰ μέρος ἀρχειν καὶ ἀρχεσθαι (v. 26 sq.)." Qu. crit. coll.
p. 412. Where the reasons on each side are so equally balanced, the traditional order in the text indicates no more than non liquet.

§ 7 6 ἐλευθέρων * *] The passage which is wanting here, must have stated that in the government of the best state only the latter kind of rule can be in question, and that the power of ruling over slaves is not such as can only be learnt by previous corresponding service; on the contrary, the service of a slave is unworthy of a free man, and ought not to be learnt at all by the young sons of our citizens. Compare the discussion III. 4 §§ 11—14, which is analogous in other respects too, and where § 13, like § 7 here, contains a limiting clause:—"except sometimes of necessity and for their own use," 1277 b 5 ff. SUSEM. (900)

6 διαφέρει δ' 11 τίνος ἕνεκεν] See v(VIII). 2. 6, 1337 b 17 ff. with n. (983). SUSEM. (901) The end redeems and ennobles apparently menial offices, as for a soldier to groom his own horse.

§ 8 If the good officer, who has learnt to command by obeying, is also the good man, how are we to train up good men? By this section we are brought back to 1332 a 36. But the last clause τί τὸ τέλος τῆς ἀρίστης ζωῆς carries us back further, to 1332 a 7 or the beginning of c. 13, 1331 b 24 ff. How tortuous the course of the discussion is, may be seen from the fact that after the Unity of Education we take its two main branches, moral and intellectual Education; next criticise Sparta; then after much repetition arrive at a similar halting place to the present, 1334 b 5, πῶς δὲ καὶ διὰ τίνων ἔσται, τοῦτο δὴ θεωρητέον.

12 φαμεν] The present may well stand here also (see nn. 804, 831, 872) in the sense of a past tense: if so there is certainly a reference to III. 4 § 5. Comp. n. (471). SUSEM. (902)

14 τοῦτ' ἂν εἴη..... 16 [ζῶης] The virtues which must be learnt by obedience are however only the moral virtues, not the intellectual ones, as in the case of φρόνησις has been clearly proved in III. 4. 17. The question now to be considered is which of the two rank the higher; in other words—is development of character or of intellect the highest aim in education? Aristotle decides in favour of the latter. Cf. also v(VIII). 2. 1 n. (977), also n. (1024) and Exc. 1. to B. v(VIII). Also Introd. p. 48, p. 50 ff. SUSEM. (903)

 The passage in brackets as far as 26 δηλονto raise here the further questions: In regard to Reason itself, is it the theoretical or the practical side that occupies the higher place? Is it the intellectual development of the former, or rather the cultivation of practical and political insight, which is the chief and final aim of Education? Yet these questions are not raised anywhere in the context and so the passage serves no useful purpose. What is worse, it interrupts the connexion in the most confusing manner: it must therefore be pronounced an interpolation by an alien hand. SUSEM. (905)

Here we again clearly perceive how slight is our knowledge of such political literature before Aristotle. It is highly probable that among the writers here alluded to were those too who were the first to set up the theory of a mixed constitution, see II. 6. 17, nn. (219—221) and B. III. Exc. tion of their ideal, 1265 b 33 with n. (219). Thimbron, or Thibron, according to another reading, is quite unknown to us. There can scarcely be a doubt that Aristotle was also thinking of the work on the Lacedaemonian constitution which bears the name of Xenophon. At any rate its author, I. 1. f., makes the happiness which the Lacedaemonian citizens attained by obeying the Laws of Lycurgus consist chiefly in the fact that, in spite of their small number, they had proved themselves the most powerful and celebrated state in Greece; and Aristotle's next remarks sound exactly like a polemic against the opening words of this little work: ἀλλ' ἐγὼ ἐνόησας ποτὲ ὡς ἡ Σπάρτη τῶν ὀλιγανθρωποτάτων πόλεων οὐσα δυνατωτάτη τε καὶ ὀνομαστοτάτη ἐν τῇ Ἑλλάδι ἐφάνη, ἐθαύμασα ὅψ ποτὲ τρόπῳ τοιούτ' ἐγένετο· ἐπεὶ μέντοι κατενόησα τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα τῶν Σπαρτιατῶν, οὐκέτι ἐθαύμαρον. The suggestion would therefore be natural enough that Thimbron, and not Xenophon, was the real author; but the true authorship of Xenophon has been lately demonstrated with such certainty by Naumann De Xenophontis libro qui Λακεδαιμονίων Πολιτεία inscribitur (Berlin 1876) that it is scarcely possible to adduce any tenable argument against it. Oncken's suggestion, too, op. c. II. p. 179, that Xenophon wrote it under the assumed name of Thimbron, is just as unsatisfactory as that of v. Leutsch (Philologus XXXIII. p. 97) that he wrote the first part of the Hellenica under the name of Cratippus. Both these hypotheses themselves depend on an hypothesis, the falsity of which has been demonstrated by Nitsche (after Morus) in a dissertation Ueber die Abfassung von X. Hellenika (Berlin 1871) p. 42 ff. This is the hypothesis, unquestionably dating from ancient times, that, according to his own statement, Hell. III. 1, 2, Xenophon published his Anabasis under the name of Themistogenes of Syracuse. But the right interpretation of the passage in question is that Themistogenes also wrote an Anabasis, to which Xenophon refers because his own was not written at the time. Moreover there is no ground for the supposition that Xenophon ever published any of his works under an assumed name. Thimbron or Thibron is a well-known Laconian name, and the one alluded to here by Aristotle was doubtless a Laconian by birth, and this may have been the reason why Aristotle cites him by name, without mentioning Xenophon. SUSEM. (911)

v. Wilamowitz identifies the author Thimbron with the Spartan who commanded in Asia Minor 399 B.C. (Xen. Anab. VII. 6. 1, 8. 24, Hell. III. 1. 4, IV. 8. 17). His words are; "Next there appeared on the scene a champion of Oligarchy, Thibron, an ambiguous character and incompetent official, but one of the ruling caste: he wrote in glorification of Lycurgus. Well might Agesilaos request his literary agent, Xenophon, to draw up a new version of the story" of Sparta, "just as he had entrusted him with the task of justifying before public opinion the period from 404 to 388.... The foundation for the common traditional view of Sparta was laid in the half century 403—350: its author was probably Dieuchidas of Megara" (Homericische Untersuchungen p. 273 f.). He conjectures in a note that possibly Plato's strange authority for Sparta in the Laws [B. III. esp. 683—693] was Thibron.

§ 18 21 δῆλον] That is, on their own premisses such eulogies are refuted. Aristotle fastens on the logical inconsistency of post hoc propter hoc.

23—25] As Mr Newman observes, there were evidently two views current in Greece as to the cause of the decline in the Lacedaemonian state. (1) Many ascribed it to a departure from the laws of Lycurgus, e.g. Xen. De Rep. Lac. c. 14, [Plut.] Inst. Lac. c. 42. (2) But Aristotle ascribes it to faults in them: cp. 1270 a 19. Possibly Plutarch's authority for the 'Life of Agis' adopted the first view, and was anxious to save the credit of Lycurgus from Aristotle's criticism in B. II. and in the Politics. Thus Plutarch replies in effect that (a) Lycurgus was not in fault, but Epitadeus and degenerate Spartans: (β) Lycurgus had nothing to do with the Crypteia, or the treatment of the Helots: and (γ) it was not true that he had failed to subject the women to his training.

Aristotle did not necessarily imagine his

§ 2 16 πρὸς τὴν σχολὴν καὶ διαγωγὴν] Besides its general meaning 'mode, or condition, of life' and the more special sense, extending beyond the necessities of existence, 'refinement of life' (Meta. I. 1. 15. 981 b 18, I. 2. 11, 982 b 23), the word διαγωγή in Aristotle, with or without the attribute ἐλευθέρως (cp. v[VIII] 5. 8 with n. 1027) or some similar expression, or ἐν τῇ σχολῇ "in a condition of leisure" (v[VIII] 3 § 3, § 8, cp. n. 993), means the occupation of leisure worthy of a really free man, such as he attains when his political duties have been performed, or such as he always possesses, provided he is peculiarly independent, and leads a life of true study or contemplation. The occupation of such leisure, i.e. in other words (see Nic. Eth. x. 7. 6, 1177 a 4, cp. nn. 907, 548, and 922) the highest degree of human happiness and satisfaction, is however activity: according to Aristotle, the highest activity there is. It consists in the study of all branches of knowledge and the contemplation of all works of art: it confers the highest intellectual enjoyment and most nearly approaches to the divine blessedness, Meta. xii (Λ). 7 § 7, 1072 b 14 f. and above nn. (702, 728). From this meaning of 'the highest intellectual enjoyment,' the word sometimes descends to the more commonplace one of mere occupation and especially 'social occupation or intercourse': N. E. ix. 11. 5, 1171 b 13, Fragm. 90, 1492 a 28; cp. also e.g. Pol. v(VIII). 2 § 9 with n. (995). Then it is used in the plural for societies whose object is such intercourse, especially refined intellectual culture (iii. 9. 13, 1280 b 37, where it might be translated "social clubs," cp. n. 558 and v[VIII]. 5. 11 with n. 1035) and even for regular feasts, gambling and drinking parties: Nic. Eth. x. 6 § 3, § 8, 1176 b 12 ff., 1177 a 9. In such cases the word becomes identified with the amusement, sport, or pastime, undertaken for recreation (cp. Nic. Eth. iv. 8 § 1, 1127 b 33 f.); though in the former and stricter interpretation, the two are sharply distinguished: v(VIII). 3 § 3 § 3—8, c. 5 § 1 ff. § 9 ff., c. 7 § 3 ff., comp. nn. (993, 995, 1023, 1024, 1027, 1032, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1038, 1041) and especially Exc. v. on B. v(VIII). See also Schwegler ad Arist. Meta. Vol. III. p. 19 f., Bonitz, Arist. Meta. II. p. 45, Ind. Ar. 178 a 26 ff., and especially Zeller³ II. ii. p. 734 f. n. (5). SUSEM. (921) In short, a term which may stand for any employment of leisure, even on vulgar amusements, receives a special application to (1) elevated intellectual enjoyments (1339 a 25); in particular (2) those of philosophy and art, including music.

20 οὐ σχολή δούλοις] Comp. n. (548) on iii. 9. 6. Slaves do certainly need recreation, but leisure in Aristotle's sense of the word, as explained n. (921), is something quite different from recreation. SUSEM. (922)

§ 3 23 φιλοσοφίας] Bonitz Ind. Ar. s. v. refers this to the meaning 'investigatio,' as in iii. 12. 2, 1282 b 23, or Phys. I. 2. 5, 185 a 20: and hence explains it as 'virtus intellectualis.'

§ 4 29 δοκοῦντας] Porson discusses this idiom, accus. not dat., in a note on Orestes 659. It is not confined to Euripides amongst Attic writers (Valckenauer on Hippol. 23): see Aesch. P. V. 86, and the comic fragment apud Herodianum Pierson, p. 450, εὐρυχωρίας σε δεῖ, as cited by Porson.

31 οἱ ποιηταί] First in the Odyssey IV. 561 ff., next the author of the episode on the ages of the world in Hesiod's Works and Days 167 ff., then Pindar Olymp. II. 60 ff., and others. The Isles of the Blest, or Elysium, are placed at the remotest ends of the earth: it is the land of privileged heroes who do not die but are taken alive from the earth: here, 'where falls not hail or rain or any snow,' where gentle breezes are ever blowing, they spend a most blessed life in undisturbed enjoyment of all good under the sway of Kronos or Rhadamanthus. See Preller Griech. Mythol. I. p. 635 ff.; cp. pp. 53, 69. SUSEM. (925)

μάλιστα γὰρ οὗτοι κτλ.] This is the moral of Plato's fine myth respecting the children of Kronos, Politicus 272 A—D. Though it is not there stated that the advantages of the golden age failed to confer greater happiness, there can be little doubt that this is Plato's meaning. Several expressions of the Politicus, παρούσης αὐτοῖς οὕτω πολλῆς σχολῆς...κατεχρῶντο τοῖς ἐμπασιν ἐπὶ φιλοσοφίαν...ἐμπιπλάμενοι σίτων ἄδην καὶ ποτῶν 272 B, C, seem to find an echo here.

32 φιλοσοφίας] Culture, cp. II. 5. 15, 1264 a 40. Intellectual aptitude, a habit of intellectual inquiry, to give occupation in leisure and save the citizens from rusting. Liberal and refined pursuits such as music, literature, philosophy in the restricted sense, must in leisure hours replace the active business of life, τὰ ἀναγκαῖα καὶ χρήσιμα.

33 σχολάζουσιν] This conception of a life of cultivated leisure, distinct from work and recreation, as the ideal life (cp. 1337 b 30), which only 'philosophy' can train us rightly to enjoy (cp. 1267 a 11), is of primary importance for the discussions in Book V(VIII). See esp. V(VIII). c. 3 §§ 4—8 with notes.

§ 5 39 ἀνδραποδώδεις] This term 'slavish' means to Aristotle 'sunk like beasts in low sensual enjoyments.' Plato traces out exactly the same line of thought,

Mr Newman well observes that this correction of the one-sidedness of Lacedaemonian training tells just as much against all systems which, like Stoicism and Puritanism, tend to develop something less than the whole man.

ἐπεὶ δὲ μείζω...3 ἀρετῶν] The passage is defective: we may supplement it from II. 9 § 34, 1271 b 4, thus: 'But as they esteemed these goods higher than the virtues, and the enjoyment of them higher than that of the virtues, <they maintained their state only while at war, and fell after they had acquired empire.> (Thurot.) SUSEM. (929)

11 διημαρτηκέναι τῆς βελτίστης ὑποθέσεως] To miss the truest (highest) conception or ideal: as is explained in c. 13 § 2. See c. 4 § 1, 1325 b 35. Men may be led astray by habit as well as by reason.
 With ἦχθαι = drawn cp. N. E. i. 4.
 6, 1095 b 4. The sense of ὁμοίως is virtually, ‘amiss.’ Göttling is quite wrong in rendering “eodem perduci moribus quo perduxisset ἡ βελτίστη ὑπόθεσις.”

§ 8 12—15] Mr Newman thinks much light is thrown on this difficult passage by De Part. Animal. 11. 1. 6, 646 a 30 ff.

13 ἡ γένεσις ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς] The sense of ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς is clear from c. 16 § 1, see n.
 (937): ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς τὸν νομοθέτην ὁρᾶν δεῖ ὅπως κτλ. “Obviously birth is the first or earliest thing which demands our care,”

i.e. we begin with birth. The next words mean ‘the nearest or proximate end from any starting-point’—understanding ἐστὶ with the gen. ἄλλου τέλους, ‘belongs to [is referred to] another, or new, end.’
 The proximate end is but a means, subordinate to a higher end; Nic. Eth. i.

 this higher end is intellect and reason.

20 τὸ μὲν ἐστὶν ὄρεξις τὸ δὲ νοῦς] In English, as in German, it is not easy to find two terms, mutually related as ὄρεξις and ἐπιθυμία. Striving, or effort in general, is the meaning of ὄρεξις [Hamilton’s conation]; ἐπιθυμία denotes sense-desire, or appetite, in particular. This explains why ὄρεξις alone denotes ‘the motive force of the irrational soul’ (as I should translate ἐξῆς; characteristic possession, or attribute, is not strong enough), while within the soul θυμός, passion—see nn.

(641, 786)—ἐπιθυμία, desire, and βούλησις, will, are distinguished: and further, why in I. 5. 6 the term ὄρεξις is first used, I 254 b 5, and afterwards I 254 b 8, τὸ παθητικὸν μέρος 'the emotional part,' see note (40). The same trichotomy of the irrational soul is also found in De Anima II. 3. I, 414 b 1, III. 10. 3, 433a 23 ff. (That these passages are not in conflict with De Anima III. 9. 3, 432 b 4 ff. and Topica IV. 5. 6, 126 a 12 f., if the statement ἐν τῷ λογιστικῷ ἢ βούλησις be rightly interpreted, is shown by Susemihl Jahrb. f. Philol. CXIX. 1879, p. 743 n. 17.) The spurious treatise De Motu Animal. c. 6 § 4, 700 b 22, ἀλλὰ μὴν ἡ ὄρεξις εἰς τρία διαιρεῖται, εἰς βούλησιν καὶ θυμὸν καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν, and Eud. Eth. II. 7. 2, 1223 a 26 f. βούλησις δὲ καὶ θυμὸς καὶ ἐπιθυμία πάντα ὄρεξις... ὥστε κινεῖ πρῶτον τὸ ὀρεκτικὸν καὶ τὸ διανοητόν, need not be taken into account. The Will appears, as the passage from Eud. Eth. more particularly proves, as ὄρεξις = impulse, whether rightly or wrongly guided by reason, directed to real or apparent good, see N. Eth. II. 4 (II. c. 6 Bk.), while Desire (ἐπιθυμία) aims at what is pleasant, and Anger (θυμὸς) at revenge. See Walter Die praktische Vernunft pp. 194—212. Yet all this does not suffice to explain the present passage, which rightly denies to the child (at all events to the infant just after birth) the possession of any rational impulses. The difference between our passage and the two cited from De Anima is that here θυμὸς and βούλησις are again drawn closer together and opposed to ἐπιθυμία. Should θυμὸς καὶ βούλησις be taken to mean 'aversion and liking'? In any case at b 22 βούλησις is used in what Zeller calls (op. c. II. ii. p. 587, n. 3) a wider sense, or more precisely a weakened sense, denoting something more analogous to θυμὸς than to ἐπιθυμία. SUSEM. (935)

§ 10 We must then train the body first; next the impulses, the motive forces of the irrational soul; and lastly the reason.

But in the further and decisive step, of making education begin not merely before birth but even before conception, Aristotle quite follows Plato's procedure Laus IV 721, VI 774—776, 783 D ff., 788 ff. (comp. Rep. V 458 E, Politicus 310). It is in imitation of the Spartan model: see Xen. De Rep. Lacadaem. I. 3 ff., Plut. Lyc. 14 (Eaton). SUSEM. (937) Add Critias, Fr. 1, *F. H. once for two generations.... Those who marry at an advanced age will probably escape the encroachments of their chil-

§ 6 13 θηλυτόκα] This point is not mentioned Hist. Animal. v. 12. 1 (v. 14 Bk.), 544 b 16, where the offspring are merely said to be weak and puny. SUSEM. (938)

We find it however, with the presumed physical cause, De Gen. Animal. iv. 2. 1, 766 b 29 ff., τὰ τε γὰρ νέα θηλυτόκα μᾶλλον τῶν ἀκμαζόντων, καὶ γηράσκοντα μᾶλλον· τοῖς μὲν γὰρ οὕτω τέλειον τὸ θερμόν, τοῖς δ' ἀπολείπει. Falstaff, Henry IV. Part II, Act 4 sc. 3, humourously calls this one of the ill effects of water-drinking.

15 τεκμήριον δέ·... γὰρ] If the Index Ar. s. v. may be trusted, this is the only instance of this usage in its normal form, the pronoun being omitted. We had σημείον δέ·... γὰρ c. 7 § 6, 1328 a 1, and Bonitz ib. 677 b 9 ff. cites ten other instances, including 1312 b 21, 1318 b 17.

16 ἐπιχωριάζει] Comp. v(viii). 6. 12, 1341 a 34. The verb appears in another sense in Pl. Phaedo 57 A. The supposed passive of the Lexx. (see Crit. n.) receives its coup de grâce from Kaibel, the last editor of Athenaeus, who at xiv. 619 f. reads κατὰ τινα ἐπιχωριαζομένην παρ' αὐτοῖς.... ἄδοντες, with the critical note

“παρ' αὐτοῖς < ἐορτὴν > Wilamowitz, recte defendens ἐπιχωριάζεσθαι verbum medium.”

§ 7 18 πονουσί τε μᾶλλον] This statement reappears in the spurious B. VII. of Hist. An. c. 1 § 16, 582 a 20.

19 τὸν χρησμόν] A gloss cites the oracle in the form μὴ τέμνε νέαν ἀλοκα, ‘till not the fresh furrow.’ Götting proposed to alter νέαν to νέας, thinking there was a play upon νεᾶς which he took to be gen. of a supposed νεά= novale, fallow land [for which νεός, Attic νεός, is the received form]. § 9 28 διὸ τὰς μὲν κτλ] In Rep. v. 460 E Plato fixes the period for procreation amongst his guardians from twenty to forty in the woman, and from twenty-five (apparently) to fifty-five in any case in the man. His regulations in the Laws are not consistent. The marriage of the sons is at one time enjoined when they are between thirty and fifty-five (IV. 721 A, VI. 785 B), at another time when they are between twenty-five and thirty-five at latest (VI. 772 D). Similarly the daughters are to marry before the age of twenty, but while the earlier limit is once fixed at sixteen (VI. 785 B), it is elsewhere raised to eighteen (VIII. 833 D).

In the spurious B. VII. of Aristotle's Historia Animal. cc. 5, 6 there are statements about the limits of age for getting offspring in tolerable agreement with the present passage. The limit is said to be, as a rule, sixty in the man, forty in the woman, with occasional prolongation to seventy and fifty respectively. Xenophon (Oecon. 7 § 5, cp. 3 § 13) fixes the earlier limit in the wife's case at fifteen. SUSEM. (940)

6 § 12: see nn. (209, 211), also II. 7 § 5 n. (236). Plato, too, Rep. v 460 D, 461 C, orders exposure in the case of weakly or deformed infants of the guardian class (as was remarked n. 140), and in the case of conception occurring where the law or the magistrates' orders have been infringed, abortion, or (presumably if this has been delayed) exposure. Indeed he goes further than this by condemning the offspring of inferior guardians: τὰ δὲ τῶν χειρόνων, καὶ ἐὰν τι τῶν ἐτέρων ἀνάπηρον γίγνηται, ἐν ἀπορρήτῳ τε καὶ ἀδήλῳ κατακρύψουσιν, 460 C. But even in the Timaeus 19 A his words convey the impression that he had not given any instructions for exposing the children of less qualified parents, but meant simply a secret transference of them to the third class of the population. Under the guise, that is, of a mere repetition, he modifies his former regulation in this sense (see Zeller Griech. Phil. ed. 4 II. i. 909 n. 2, ed. 3 pp. 771 n. 3, Eng. tr. p. 478 n. 55, Susemihl Plat. Phil. II. p. 171). In the Laws (see nn. 192, 208) he drops the preventive means of abortion altogether, nor does he say anything about exposing illegitimate and deformed infants. Thus in the course of his own lifetime Plato gradually attained to a more humane view. In this respect Aristotle's ideal state goes far beyond that of the Laws in the stringency and callousness, or rather, to give it its true name, the abominable cruelty of its regulations. As to exposure, the example of Sparta has again had a determining influence on both thinkers. In all other Greek states it was left to the father's decision whether he would expose his child or not: but at Sparta a committee of the eldest members of the Phyle decided, and in accordance with their decision the deformed or weakly infant had to be despatched to the place of exposure (Ἀποθέται) on Taygetos. See Schömann p. 270 f. (Eng. tr. 256). Comp. also Introd. p. 52 f. SUSEM. (946)

Note that ὥρισθαι...πλῆθος is a virtual repetition of II. 6. 12, 1265 b 6 ff., just as c. 4 § 2, 1325 b 38 f. reproduces 1265 a 17, in both cases without the conventional ὡς εἰρηται πρότερον (Newman).

23—25] Here the indignation of some honest reader found vent in the remarkable gloss on the margin of P³, τί λέγει ὁ δαιμόνιος τοῦτοις; Doubtless the same hand which scribbled φλναρεῖ, φλναρία, against 1269 b 26, 1272 a 23. Whether from this "thin end of the wedge" came the gradual depopulation of Greece, which Polybius (xxxvii. 9) deplores, is another matter. Cp. Thirlwall Hist. VIII. 463 ff.

§ 7 41 ὅτι ἤκιστα μετὰ δούλων ἔσται] Comp. § 9 n. (962). Here then Aristotle refuses to adopt the idea of common games for children, in which the children of aliens and slaves of this age also take part, as was proposed by Plato, here again the more humane of the two, and briefly mentioned in n. (957). His refusal is on the ground that by means of these infant schools Plato begins the public education as soon as the third year has been reached, while he follows the Spartans in postponing it to the seventh year: see Schömann p. 271 (Eng. tr. p. 206). Further see § 5, n. (958). SUSEM. (960).

1336 b 2 εὐλογον οὖν ἀπολαβεῖν κτλ.] This and the two following sentences with the double use of μὲν οὖν gave occasion to many critical doubts, for which see Bonitz Ind. Ar. 540 b 55 ff., Vahlen *Poetics*² p.

εἰ μὴ παρά τισι θεοῖς...17 ὁ νόμος]
As, for instance, Dionysos, Aphrodite, Priapos, Eileithyia (Kapp). Aristotle himself, it is well known, traces the origin of Comedy to the worship of Dio-nysos, namely, to the improvised speeches added to the choral ode by the chief singer or leader of the chorus in the phallic songs; such phallic songs, he says, were still customary in many places (γενομένη ἀπὸ τῶν τὰ φαλλικά ἐξαρχόντων), Poet. 4 § 14, 1449 a 11 ff. These improvised speeches certainly contained improprieties of the sort here mentioned.
But that even in the phallic songs properly so called there was often much that was positively indecent might hardly be doubted, even apart from the specimen we have in Aristoph. Ach. 263 ff., where Dikaïopolis sings a burlesque of one, as he himself says (261). Other facts relative to this matter are mentioned by Athenaeus XIV. 621 d—622 d, on the authority of Sosibios and Semos. Both writers mentioned certain reciters, called αὐτοκάβδαλοι, who delivered monologues or even dialogues (ῥήσεις) from the stage crowned with ivy according to Semos, and were at a later date called ἱαμβοί, like their poems. It is beyond all doubt that Archilochos, n. (788), found similar iambic lampoons in current use at the merry festivals of harvest and vintage, and therefore in the worship of Dionysos and Demeter, which was especially cultivated in his home of Paros and her colony Thasos, where Archilochos settled. Comp. Homer Hymn to Demeter 496, Paus. x. 28. 1, Steph. Byzant. s. v. Πάρος, Hesych. s. v.

Κάβαρροι; Welcker Kl. Schrift. 1. p.
87 ff. It was out of this natural popular poetry that he fashioned his own artistic iambic poetry. Aristotle himself mentions directly afterwards (§ 11) the recital of such artistic compositions (ἱαμβοί), which certainly took place at such religious festivals at Athens and elsewhere at the proper season, probably in contests between rhapsodes. For it would appear from the pseudo-Platonic Ion 531 A that a contemporary rhapsode might include Archilochos in his repertoire; in any case his iambic poetry, on the analogy of the present passage: whether also his elegies, is doubtful. About that time also the burlesque epos and its recitation by rhapsodes were brought into vogue by Hegemon of Thasos, in contests at festivals of this kind. SUSEM. (964)

21 κατακλίσεως ὑπάρξει κτλ] The term μέθη which recurs V(VIII). 5 § 2, n. (1019) denotes the advanced stage of the banquet, at which men's spirits were more elevated and they began to drink wine undiluted (ἄκρατον): cp. Plato Lysis II. 271 E, Ath. II. 40 a (J. G. Schneider). Comp. also V(VIII). 5 § 8, n. (1028), 7 § 13 f. n. (1067), also n. (113). But, as was remarked in Introd. p. 55, κατάκλισις, or admission into συσσίτια, in all probability commenced with initiation into military service from the seventeenth year onwards: see V(VIII). 4 § 9 Exc. I. to B. V(VIII) but when recruits have a compulsory diet prescribed for them (Exc. to B. V(VIII)) they certainly have sysstitia of their own, and only when their education has been completed, from their twenty-first year onwards, are they admitted to the sysstitia proper, at first those of the soldiers, and allowed the other liberties here mentioned. SUSEM. (966)

§ 13 28 Θεόδωρος] It is beyond all doubt that Theodoros is here treated as one deceased: but I fail to see that he is spoken of Rhet. III. 2 § 4, 1404 b 22 ff. as if he were still living and on the stage, as Zeller II. ii. p. 131 n. (1) maintains. From the latter passage it is very clear that he was the greatest tragic actor of recent times. Aelian, V. H. XIV. 40, relates a story of the powerful impression which his acting made on the tyrant Alexander of Pherae. Plutarch mentions him along with Polos as a famous protagonist actor in leading parts in De regim. 21, 816 F, and with Nikostratos, Kallipides, Mymniskos, Polos in De Gloria mathematics generally: this lasts until the seventeenth or eighteenth year. The next two or three years, until the twentieth, are to be spent in military exercises. The second course of ten years for the more highly qualified students is in the higher mathematics, pure and applied; the third or philosophical course, which is only for the most richly endowed natures, lasts five years longer, as we had occasion to mention in n. (182) on II. 5 § 25. See Rep. II. 376 E f., III. 403 C, VII. 534 C—535 A, 536—537 D, 539 D ff. In the Laws (see VII. 794 C—795 D, 809 E—813 C, 817 C—822 D, cp. 813 C ff.). Plato prescribes the elements of gymnastic from the sixth to the tenth year (cp. n. 956); reading and writing from ten to thirteen; music, singing, and at the same time the really severer instruction in dancing and gymnastic from 13 to 17; lastly, the elements of arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy—no doubt from seventeen to eighteen. It has been explained in n. (193) on II. 6. 5 that even in the Laws the better endowed natures were afforded opportunity, after the age of thirty, for the same higher education as that furnished in the Republic by the second and third courses, or at least for something similar to it. Butcher, Some Aspects, p. 241). He adds: "in the passage from the Physics also it is probable that the distinction is not, as would at first sight seem, between useful and fine art, but between two aspects of useful art. The sentence is not quite logical in form, but the meaning is that useful art on the one hand satisfies those needs of man for which nature has not fully provided, on the other hand its processes are those of nature."

Οἱ ἑξωτερικοὶ λόγοι.

NOTE ON IV(VII). I. 2, 1323 a 22 (687).

It would take us too far out of our way to give a detailed or perfectly complete account, supposing it were even possible, of the meaning of this expression which recurs in III. 6. 5, 1278 b 32, and in six other passages¹. Inquiry has not by any means as yet disposed of the subject. The one point which has been conclusively established is that in general 'outside discussions' (or discourses) are opposed to strictly scientific discussions (οἱ κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν λόγοι, III. 12. 1, 1282 b 19, see n. 584). But whether they are (1) discussions by others, or by Aristotle himself: whether, in the latter case, the reference is to (2) Aristotle's dialogues and popular works, or to (3) dialectical discussions, in Aristotle's sense of the term dialectic as the tentative solution of problems², in his scientific writings, and whether they should be sought in another work or, as in Physics IV. 10. 1, 217 b 31, in the same work³: whether in fact writings of any sort, or merely (4) oral controversies and expressions of opinion are intended, must on each occasion be decided from the context, if at all⁴.

Now here, as at III. 6. 5, n. (527 b), it appears to me that the only meaning which really suits the context is 'discussions in daily life' or 'in ordinary intercourse.' Aristotle appeals (see n. 689) to what has already become the common property of the ordinary cultivated consciousness and

⁴ This is a point quite rightly emphasized by Vahlen. But how is it consistent to say e.g. that 'the division of 'goods which follows has furthermore 'been laid down and explained in the 'outside discussions and does not require 'to be repeated in detail here' (cp. Vahlen p. 9), when Vahlen at the same time in this passage accepts as possible the interpretation of the phrase 'outside discussions' accepted by me? And how can the supposition of a previous explanation be got out of the words? They contain nothing but an appeal to what is universally admitted. Cp. n. (688).

has developed into a permanent conviction of universal validity; what is treated as a settled and generally accepted fact in the conversations and discussions on such subjects in educated circles¹. In other words he calls in good sound common sense. Bernays on the other hand, Dialogue des Arist. p. 69 ff., 158 ff., finds here a quotation from an Aristotelian dialogue and thinks that the very lively fluent style of this chapter, which presents a marked contrast to the remainder of the book, should be explained by assuming that Aristotle in the main borrowed and transferred it from that dialogue, reproducing even the very words. Vahlen², Aristotelische Aufsätze II. (Phil.-hist. Sitzungsber. der Wiener Akad. LXXII. p. 5 ff.) has conclusively shown how weak is the foundation for this hypothesis (cp. also the review by Susemihl Philol. Anzeiger v. 1873, p. 673 ff.). He has not made another attempt on his own part to clear up this fact, but only remarked that this chapter forms a complete whole by itself, which must be retained or condemned as a whole—a statement which no one would be likely to controvert. Still for a right decision of the matter considerable importance attaches to his pertinent observation, that Bernays appears not to have fully met the difficulty of the surprise we naturally feel³ that for a question discussed in the Ethics Aristotle should quote his popular writings in preference to that treatise.

This difficulty remains the same, even though we substitute an appeal to the popular judgment for the appeal to popular writings. In the Ethics the whole investigation turns on the inquiry, "What is the best life, or human happiness?" and that this factor also should be utilized was perfectly in point. In the Politics Aristotle might have done in starting this inquiry what he has done on several other occasions (II. 1. 5, III. 5 § 9, 7 § 1, VI(IV). 9 § 2, cp. IV(VII). 12 §§ 3, 4: see iii. 133, 545, 584, 873, 879, 1289); he might simply have referred to the results of the Ethics. But if he had intended to begin in this place a fresh discussion of the question over again in detail, and in such a manner that his investigation should not merely satisfy the requirements of science, but so far as possible compel the assent of ordinary opinion with its own peculiar assumptions and prepossessions, then at any rate, when the same subject comes up for discussion later on, it would have been impossible so utterly to ignore this exposition, to treat it as so altogether non-existent, as is actually the case.

¹ For Bernays' proof of the impossibility of this interpretation, though advanced with full confidence in its success, can be easily refuted. And Zeller op. cit. II ii p. 119 n. (2) reads into this passage something very different from what is there. It does not state that ordinary opinion agrees with the outside discussions merely in holding that mental goods are required for the best kind of life, but it says:—"as we believe many of the statements current in ordinary conversation respecting the constituents of the best life to be perfectly correct, we should in the present instance make use of them. For one thing at any rate is universally conceded, that there are three kinds of goods, and that all three are necessary to the best life, or in other words, to happiness. But of course our agreement with ordinary opinion (ἐξωτερικοὶ λόγοι) goes no farther: for the ordinary view regards mental goods, i.e. the virtues, as subsidiary, whilst we make them the principal thing."

³ See Krohn op. cit. p. 37.

Now already at c. 8 § 4, cp. n. (799), and at c. 9 § 3, § 7 Aristotle has returned to the position, that the state has for its aim the best possible life, and that the best constitution is the one by which the state attains the greatest happiness (cp. n. 806). In the first of these passages it is merely stated what constitutes the best life or happiness without any such addition as "according to our previous inquiry," and equally without any reference to the investigation of this question in the Ethics. In the second passage there is a reference, but apparently it is to the former passage, c. 8, and not to c. 1 at all; see nn. (807, 813). There is this further and more serious difficulty, that c. 13 (cp. n. 872) begins, just like c. 1, with the statement that, as the best constitution is that which enables the state in the highest degree to attain happiness, the precise nature of happiness must not be left obscure. For the general character of this transition is not in the least altered by the fact that c. 13 treats, not of the best life, but of happiness, and the happiness of the state in particular. But in this the non-existence of c. 1 is expressly implied; the other course—of a reference to the results of the Ethics—is quite gratuitously adopted, and thus the matter is settled. However if the genuineness of c. 13 is not quite above suspicion (see nn. 876, 879, 881¹), there only remain the other and minor objections to c. 1 in its present place upon which dependence can be placed.

But taking everything into consideration, are we to decide offhand that c. 1 is spurious? There is nothing in the following chapters which is materially inconsistent with it², and there is nothing to disturb the suggestion made in the Introd. pp. 12, 15, 48, that in his oral lectures on Politics Aristotle was accustomed to effect the transition to the description of the ideal state in the very words before us, however different may have been his procedure when committing his thoughts to paper. If this be so, we have before us in this chapter a portion of some careful hearer's notes which the editor has inserted, although it stands in no organic connexion with the rest of the work. Cp. also n. (711). SUSEM. (687)

The oldest view of this much disputed phrase, which implied a twofold form of the Aristotelian teaching, had long been felt to be unsatisfactory when Bernays, in 1863, in the work already cited, put forward the brilliant and attractive theory that the Aristotelian dialogues are meant. Subsequent writers were much influenced by this theory, but very unequally. Thus Grote, who discussed the expression Aristotle I. pp. 63—75, not content to understand by it 'discourses outside the subject,' thinks a negative character, διὰλεκτικὸν διδασκτικόν, is intended, appealing especially to Phys. IV. c. 10 where all the difficulties which beset the notion of time are noticed and traced out. For this view, which is substantially that of Thurot, Études p. 213, he can cite Alexander in Τοπικά διὰλεκτικῶς δὲ πρὸς δόξαν, ὡς ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ πραγματείᾳ (the Topics) καὶ ἐν τοῖς ῥητορικοῖς, καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἐξωτερικοῖς, 260 a 24 ed. Brandis. So too Simplicius, τὰ ἐξωτερικὰ=τὰ κοινὰ καὶ δι' ἐνδόξων περανόμενα.

¹ On the other hand this is the very utmost that can be conceded: see n. (881).

thinks he has discovered are too deep for me to detect.

² For the inconsistencies which Krohn

Grote then understands the term "extraneous to philosophy" (because dialectical) to include not merely oral debate but writings, whether Aristotle's own or the Platonic and other dialogues.

Zeller also in the third edition (1879) of his great work has advanced beyond his earlier standpoint, by recognising in ἐξωτερικός more than one primary meaning. First, simply 'extraneous,' as when applied to σκέψις Pol. I. 5. 4, 1254 a 33; equivalent to the phrase οἱ ἔξωθεν λόγοι, II. 6. 3, 1264 b 39, and so unquestionably used by Eudemus who paraphrases Aristotle's own ἀπορίαν...ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς τὸν λόγον Phys. I. 2. 9, 185 b 11, by ἀπορίαν ἐξωτερικὴν Simpl. in Physica 85, 26 Diels. But the word may also mean 'relating to what is outside,' and this again may bear more than one sense. Thus to suit Phys. c. IV. 10, Zeller adds the meaning (2) discussions 'that do not go deep into the subject,' and from Eud. Eth. II. 1. 1, 1218 b 33 compared with Nic. Eth. I. 8, 1098 b 10 καὶ ἐκ τῶν λεγομένων περὶ αὐτῆς, (3) oral, not written, discussions. Lastly, he admits (4) that some lost Aristotelian writing of a more popular character is referred to in the six remaining passages, including those in the Politics, 1323 a 22, 1278 b 32.

In the view taken of these six passages we trace the influence exerted by the theory of Bernays, that the 'exoteric discourses' are Aristotle's own dialogues: a theory adopted, in the main, by Heitz and by Bonitz (Ind. Ar. 104 b 44 ff.). More recently this theory has been vigorously attacked by Diels in a paper entitled Ueber die exoterischen Reden des Aristoteles reported in Monatsberichte der Berl. Akad. 1883 pp. 477—494, in its turn followed by a note from Hirzel, defending Bernays, Rhein. Mus. XXXIX. p. 178 f. n. 1, and an article by Susemihl in Jahrb. f. Philol. CXXIX. 1884, pp. 265—277. Diels insists that the term is a technical term in the Peripatetic school, and holds it to be indispensable that its meaning should be constant wherever it occurs. The explanation he gives is 'discussions carried on outside the Peripatetic school,' τὰ ἔξωθεν λεγόμενα, including such as were customary in the Academy or had been held of old by philosophers or laymen. He rejects the view of Grote (and Thurot) that the imperfect form or the dialectical character, is intended by 'exoteric,' arguing that if evidence from without confirms Aristotle, in what form it is stated or how obtained is not the essential point: though doubtless a Peripatetic will attach to it no more credit a priori than to ἐνδοξα generally. Moreover, if the difference of method is emphasized in the formula of citation, why is not the appeal to λόγοι διαλεκτικοί? (cp. λόγοι ἐπιχειρηματικοί, 451 a 19). Diels allows that when contrasted with οἱ κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν λόγοι all outside discussions present a character of their own. Not that they are all to be rejected: on the contrary the Peripatetics are unwearied in their use of the wisdom of the ancients, philosophers and famous men, verses of the poets, sophistic declamations: but in such ἐνδοξα we have only the raw material of knowledge; only true scientific method, viz. that in use inside the Peripatetic school, can properly test the alloy and extract the ore from it.

This view is based in the first instance on a detailed examination of our present passage and comparison with Nic. Eth. I. c. 8, where a similar intention is announced, 1098 b 9 σκεπτόεν δὲ περὶ αὐτῆς οὐ μόνον ἐκ τοῦ συμπεράσματος καὶ ἐξ ὧν ὁ λόγος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκ τῶν λεγομένων περὶ αὐτῆς· τῷ μὲν γὰρ ἀληθεῖ πάντα συνάδει τὰ υπάρχοντα, τῷ δὲ ψευδεὶ ταχὺ διαφωνεῖ τὰ ληθέν. The evidence got from the use of terms, from popular or philosophic views, is to be set side by side with the syllogistic conclusion and philosophic definition. Then follows the threefold division of goods, as in our Politics passage. Diels pronounces it a current Academic division, familiar to Plato (Latius III. 697 A, B), adopted by Xenocrates and his successors, and points triumphantly to the words 1098 b 16 ff. ὥστε καλῶς ἂν λέγοιτο κατὰ γε ταύτην τὴν δόξαν παλαιὰν οὖσαν καὶ ὁμολογουμένην ὑπὸ τῶν φιλοσοφούντων. "Thus he has found support for his definition in this old opinion. Observe the γέ: 'at least this διαίρεσις is wholly recognized': the particle recurs in Pol. IV(VII). I. 3, 1323 a 24, while the confidence in general recognition is repeated § 5, 1323 a 34, ταῦτα μὲν λεγόμενα ὥσπερ πάντες ἂν συγχωρήσειαν. That he had the Ethics in mind is shown by the words of 1323 b 39 ἐτέρας σχολῆς, and by the citation c. 13. Returning to 1323 a 22, we see that the emphasis is on ἱκανῶς:—believing that a sufficient account of the best life can be drawn from much of what is found in Outside Discourses, we must now also make use of it: καὶ νῦν, here in the Politics as before in the *Ethics*¹."

Working on these lines, the temptation becomes irresistible to find a parallel in the older literature for all the passages where the phrase (or οἱ ἐξωθεν λόγοι and the like) occurs. E.g. Alcmaeon (? Epicharmus) is suggested as the authority for the dichotomy of the soul in N. E. I. 13, 1102 a 26; Plato Charmides 163 A for N. E. VI. 4, 1140 a 3; Hesiod, Homer, or the Sophists for 1278 b 32 ff. Thus Diels succeeds in satisfying his own postulate of a technical term with constant meaning, and for consistency he is bound to infer that the ἀπορίαι concerning Time in Phys. IV. c. 10 have come down to Aristotle from his predecessors.

It may however be gravely questioned whether the interpretation in all passages should be so strict. "With the same fundamental meaning the phrase may have had different shades of meaning in different connexions: not only is it external and referring to what is external, but in contradistinction to οἱ κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν λόγοι, it would naturally be used for *non-philosophical discussions*²." What all men say may be a part of the ἐξωτερικοὶ λόγοι though it is not necessarily the whole. Certainly in Eud. Eth. II. 1 it is just='what all the world says.' And this meaning makes both Politics passages, 1278 b 32 as well as 1323 a 22, more logical. But on the other hand with regard to Meta. 1076 a 22—28, Eud. Eth. 1217 b 22, and Physics IV. 10 it can plausibly be maintained that the reference is not so much to λεγόμενα as to something lying 'outside of philosophy' by reason not of its origin, but of its method³.

puted phrase οἱ ἐν κοινῷ γινόμενοι λόγοι De Anima I. 4. 1, 407 b 29, is eae disputationes quales homines elegantiores instituere solent. This at least does justice to the present participle.]

NOTE ON IV(VII). II. 6, 1330 b 26.

δυσέξοδος γὰρ ἐκείνη τοῖς ξενικοῖς καὶ δυσεξερέυντος τοῖς ἐπιτιθεμένοις.

Aristotle here recommends the older sort of street architecture on the ground that it makes it difficult for strangers who are within to get out, and for enemies who are without to attack, thus echoing the latter part of the precept πρὸς μὲν οὖν τὰς πολεμικὰς αὐτοῖς μὲν εὐέξοδον εἶναι χρή, τοῖς δ' ἐναντίοις δυσπρόσοδον καὶ δυσπερίληπτον 1330 b 2, but at the same time amplifying it, in so far as account is taken of the case in which strangers are endeavouring to make their escape, as for example Thucyd. II. 4. It seems strange however that, whereas the case in which the stranger or enemy wants to get out (1) cannot occur until he has first got in, and (2) is exceptional and comparatively unimportant, Aristotle should give it both precedence and prominence. Should we not expect δυσείσοδος? and if so, would it not seem that δυσεξερέυντος should correlate with ξενικοῖς, δυσείσοδος with ἐπιτιθεμένοις, rather than δυσείσοδος with ξενικοῖς, δυσεξερέυντος with ἐπιτιθεμένοις? I conjecture therefore δυσεξερέυντος γὰρ ἐκείνη τοῖς ξενικοῖς καὶ δυσείσοδος τοῖς ἐπιτιθεμένοις. H. JACKSON.

EXCURSUS II.

THE AGE OF SUPERANNUATION.

ἔτι δὲ ἡ διαδοχὴ τῶν τέκνων τοῖς μὲν ἀρχομένοις ἔσται τῆς ἀκμῆς, ἐὰν γίνηται κατὰ λόγον, εὐθὺς ἢ γένεσις, τοῖς δὲ ἥδη καταλελυμένης τῆς ἡλικίας πρὸς τὸν τῶν ἐβδομήκοντα ἐτῶν ἀριθμόν. IV(VII). 16. 10, 1335 a 32—35.

The sense is: Furthermore supposing the birth of children to follow upon the marriage as early as may reasonably be expected, the eldest (or only) sons will succeed their fathers at a time when the former (i.e. the children) begin to enter on their prime, while the latter are already in their decline towards their seventieth year.

Aristotle has in view simply the normal case: the eldest son, born nine months after the marriage, grows up to manhood. If the number given in the text, 1335 a 29, for the man's age at marriage (37) were correct, the eldest son would be only about 32 at the time when the father is about 70. But it is in the highest degree improbable that he should succeed to his father's civic rights (so I take διαδοχή) before he is himself permitted and obliged to marry. Besides, Aristotle approves (§ 17, u. 947) the division of human life into periods of seven years. Now suppose that, with Spengel, we replace 37 by 35: in that case, by the time the eldest son reaches 35 the father's age will be, on the foregoing assumptions, $70\frac{3}{4}$ years. The father may then be relieved from active citizenship and give up the two family properties: his son steps into his place, while he as priest is superannuated, c. 9 § 9, 1329 a 30—34. It might certainly be supposed to be in favour of the number 37, that Aristotle demands the simultaneous cessation of the reproductive faculty for husband and wife and fixes the limit in the one case at seventy, in the other at fifty years: if a man of 37 marries a wife at 18, this calculation is fairly exact, since when the husband is 69, the wife will be 50: whereas if the man marries at 35 he reaches the limit three years before his wife. To this we may reply, that beyond all doubt a mere approximation is quite sufficient, especially as the husband is forbidden to have children after his 55th year (§§ 16, 17, 1335 b 26—38). In the whole question, the younger sons, if any are born, are left out of account: there is no place for them on Aristotle's scheme, except to fill the vacancies caused by death or to be adopted into childless families, where the head of the house finds himself after his fifty-fifth year without male offspring (§ 15, 1335 b 21—26, II. 6. 10—13, 1265 a 38—b 16, cp. II. 7. 5, 1266 b 9 ff.). Further, the remark in Introd. p. 54, that the citizens do not serve on the jury-courts or become members of the popular assembly until they are fifty, requires now to be modified: even as early as at thirty-five, it appears, they become qualified for these functions and must take them. But it may be doubted whether their obligation to military service ceases then, and unquestionably Aristotle intended to fix a higher age, presumably 50, as the qualification for serving on the Council and filling the magistracies (with the exception of military commands). What arrangements were to be made in case the heir did not attain the age of 35 until from one to twenty years after the superannuation of his father, or adopted father, is a matter which receives no elucidation either in our incomplete sketch of Aristotle's ideal of a state or elsewhere in his writings. The only conceivable solution is that the exercise of political rights in this family is dropped in the interval, and the family properties are managed by guardians, though not necessarily for the full term until the heir becomes thirty-five. If we remember that full civic rights are exercised only from the age of fifty to the age of seventy, it still remains true that their possessors are only a minority of the whole civic population, n. (817).

The above explanation premised, a word or two of criticism on the views of Ridgeway and Jackson. The former (Transactions of Cambridge Philological Society II. p. 146) would read $\tau\alpha\iota\varsigma \mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu \grave{\alpha}\rho\chi\omicron\mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\alpha\iota\varsigma$, thus opposing the wife's physical prime to the husband's intellectual prime (about 49). That this is unsatisfactory is pointed out by Jackson (ib. p. 118), who in his turn retains $\grave{\alpha}\rho\chi\omicron\mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\eta\varsigma$ (Γ and corr. P³), but, while rightly referring $\grave{\alpha}\rho\chi\omicron\mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\eta\varsigma \tau\eta\varsigma \acute{\alpha}\kappa\mu\eta\varsigma$ as well as $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\lambda\epsilon\upsilon\mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\eta\varsigma \tau\eta\varsigma \eta\lambda\iota\kappa\iota\alpha\varsigma$ to the father, takes $\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma \mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu$ to be the older, $\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma \delta\grave{\epsilon}$ the younger children by the same marriage, and explains $\eta \delta\iota\alpha\delta\omicron\chi\eta \tau\omega\upsilon\upsilon \tau\acute{\epsilon}\kappa\nu\omega\upsilon$ as the children's attainment of the age of puberty. Had this been the sense we should have expected $\tau\omega\upsilon\upsilon \mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu \dots \tau\omega\upsilon\upsilon \delta\grave{\epsilon}$ instead of the datives, and perhaps the addition of $\tau\omega\upsilon\upsilon \pi\alpha\tau\acute{\epsilon}\rho\omega\upsilon$ after $\tau\eta\varsigma \acute{\alpha}\kappa\mu\eta\varsigma$ and of $\acute{\epsilon}\kappa\epsilon\iota\omega\upsilon$ after $\eta\lambda\iota\kappa\iota\alpha\varsigma$ would then have conduced to clearness. This however is a small matter. The chief difficulty is the strange sense given to ἡ διαδοχὴ τῶν τέκνων; as if it meant that the children succeed (not their father but) one another, i.e. they successively attain puberty between the thirty-eighth and fifty-sixth years of the father's age. This presupposes several children, comparatively speaking a large family: whereas the passage quoted above from B. II. as well as the whole of the present chapter make it abundantly clear that Aristotle is committed to the system of small families—in the normal case, one son and one daughter,—in order to keep the population stationary. B. V(VIII). The same subject continued: the true system of state education.

This book joins on so closely with the preceding that it is not easy to make a parting at all. Undoubtedly Spengel's proposal to begin at πρῶτον μὲν is in full accordance with the usage of Aristotle. The same thing frequently happens at the commencement of a chapter. Aristotle recapitulates before starting a fresh subject. The worthy people who divided his books into chapters ignore this: see e.g. cc. 3, 5, and 7 of this book, which more properly should begin at 1337 b 22, 1338 b 39, and at 1341 b 9 respectively. The alternative commencement has actually been marked in this edition at II. c. 12, p. 314, III. c. 2, p. 359.

c. 1. Three points to decide: (1) Should there be a systematic education? (2) Should it be a public system? (3) What subjects should it include? While (1) and (2) are soon settled in the affirmative, B. V(VIII) leaves off before we are far advanced with (3). Cp. Anal. p. 118.

c. 2. Conflict of views as to what should be taught: divergent theories of the end of education: § 1, 2.

The knowledge needed for affairs of life must be imparted, but only within certain limits. Even in scientific studies there is much which a gentleman would not pursue, or only as means to a given end: §§ 3—6.

37 οὔτε πρὸς ἀρετὴν—ἄριστον] But Aristotle would not recognise any such dilemma as 'virtue or happiness,' unless

The three theories of the end of education are that it should be (1) directly utilitarian i.e. subservient to a livelihood, or should cultivate (2) the moral, or (3) the intellectual faculties. They still find supporters in the modern controversies on the subject.

42 πρὸς ἀρετὴν] Here and in the following clause (b 1) ἀρετὴ is evidently restricted to 'moral virtue' combined with φρόνησις, practical wisdom. SUSEM. 7 ταύτην μέντοι... 9 καλλίστων] Comp. Nic. Eth. I. 8. 10 ff., 1099 a 7 ff. (Congreve). I cannot understand how Döring p. 109 f. is able to prove from these words, that the pleasure which belongs as a necessary condition to the life of happiness is not the pleasure which arises from virtuous action and theoretical knowledge, but something which taken by itself is an integral factor of happiness. (To this view Döring's reviewer Walter, Jen. Littz. 1877 p. 29, rightly took exception.) From what other source can it arise? Every pleasure, as Aristotle rightly maintains (see Zeller op. c. II ii p. 617 ff.), can only be conceived as a consequence of some bodily or mental activity—even the pleasures of taste or the agreeable sensation of falling asleep: for eating and drinking are bodily activities, and the very act of falling asleep (inasmuch as the cessation of a movement is itself a movement) is also an activity. Döring is no less mistaken when he goes on to state that the pleasure which is introduced as an integral factor into the end of life itself contributes to the highest intellectual enjoyment (διαγωγῇ), whereas the latter is really due to the cognitive faculties and the pleasure inseparably associated with their strenuous exercise. The thought of Aristotle is a very simple one: that those activities alone can belong to happiness, which naturally produce the purest possible joy with the smallest admixture of pain. Comp. further c. 5 § 10, n. (1032). SUSEM. (992)

§ 6 10 Dr Jackson writes: "in the face of τὴν ἐν τῇ σχολῇ διαγωγῇ § 8, a 21, I cannot reconcile myself to this phrase. Is it possible that σχολὴν is the interpolation of a scribe, who, finding πρὸς τὴν ἐν τῇ διαγωγῇ, did not see that with these words ἡδονὴν should be understood from the preceding sentence?" Dr Postgate Notes p. 15 defended both phrases, explaining this as 'our training must include certain studies available for leisure to be spent in rational amusement,' and a 21 as 'rational amusement to be pursued in leisure time.'

§ 11 νῦν δὲ τοσοῦτον...37 δῆλον] The sequence of thought here is liable to be misunderstood. In §§ 2—9 Aristotle has proved, or tried to prove, that the ancients had regarded poetry and music as being preeminently a means to intellectual training, which in his eyes is more important than moral training, and to the highest intellectual enjoyment associated with it. It is true the evidence he has produced suffices for no more than the inference that the ancients considered music and poetry in the light of higher rational amusements for men of riper age, but not that they adopted music in the education of the young with the view of training them for this rational enjoyment in the future: cp. nn. (993, 1024). He does not, in §§ 2—9, touch upon the question, see n. (993), whether this art may not be utilized for the development of character: this he discusses later on, c. 5 § 1, where he expressly states that he will resume the inquiry of c. 2 § 3—c. 3 § 11, which had been left incomplete: see nn. (1017, 1018). Hence he is here contrasting the intellectual and theoretical aim of education not with its moral aim, the development of character, but only with the third and lowest aim, a knowledge of what is absolutely necessary and practically useful. All three aspects are more intimately concerned with the mental side of education. The third is disposed of in §§ 11, 12; in § 13 Aristotle reverts to the difference between intellectual and moral training, without however pursuing the inquiry more precisely into particulars, his attention being at present especially directed to the proper development of the body.  SUSEM. (1002)

7 τούτων γὰρ κτλ] From what follows, as well as from c. 3 § 1, compared with IV(VII). c. 14 § 9 ff., c. 15 § 8 ff., it is plain that instruction in gymnastics does not conduce merely to physical development, but also to the moral education of the mind in courage. For the difference between παιδοτριβικὴ and γυμναστικὴ see also Galen De valet. tuenda II. 9, T. VI. p. 143 Kühn, where the relation between trainer (παιδοτρίβης) and teacher (διδάσκαλος) is compared to that between a cook and a physician. See VI(IV). I. 2 n. (1115), and for this passage generally c. 4 § 7 ff. n. (1015), i.e. Exc. I. p. 619. SUSEM. (1003) ποιάν τινα ποιεῖ] The phrase recurs c. 5 § 3, 1339 a 13 f., § 24, 1340 b 11, c. 6 § 16, 1341 b 18. Like τοιοῦτος (see n. 1. 8. 7, 1256 a 37) the precise import of ποῖός τις = "of a definite character" is determined by the context: in 1339 a 24 = δυναμένην χαίρειν ὀρθῶς (cp. 1339 b 24); in 1341 b 18 = βάνανσος simply; while in 1340 b 11 it is as vague as ὀργαστικά καὶ παθητικά 1340 b 3. In our present passage it is substantially βελτίω ποιεῖν, πρὸς ἀρετὴν (τὸ ἦθος) συντελεῖν; in short, παιδεύειν, "develop," "influence." A correlative phrase, ποιοὶ τινες γνώμεθα, occurs c. 5 § 16, 1340 a 7 f., where see note. Comp. N. E. I. 9. 8, 1099 b 31, Rhet. I. 1. 9, 1354 b 20.

c. 4 Athletic training. Two errors to avoid: we do not desire to make professional athletes, or to realize the Spartan type: §§ 1—7. Bodily exercises to be relaxed in favour of other studies for three years after puberty: §§ 7—9.

The censure of an athletic training was passed IV(VII). c. 16 §§ 12, 13, 1335 b 2—12. The criticism of the exercises of the Spartans widens into a condemnation of their political system in general on the lines of B. II. c. 9, IV(VII). c. 14 §§ 15—22, c. 15 § 6.

10 αἱ μὲν...ἐμποιοῦσι] Some endeavour to make their sons professional athletes. Aristotle evidently considers that such a career is βάνανσος: cp. § 6, b 33, n. (1012), § 9, n. (1015), i.e. Exc. I., and IV(VII). 16. 12, 1335 b 5 ff., n. (944). SUSEM. (1004)

In his condemnation of the mania for sports, Aristotle had predecessors in Xenophanes Frag. 2, Euripides Autolyc. Fr. 1, as well as Plato Rep. III. 404 A, 407 B, 410 B—D, VII. 535 D, IX. 591 C. The judgment of poets and philosophers was confirmed by practical soldiers like Epaminondas and Alexander, and later Philopoemen (Plut. Vita Phil. c. 3, p. 357 c), by medical authorities like Galen (Προτρ. Λόγος cc. 9—14, I. p. 20 ff. K.; cp. Plut. De sanil. tuenda c. 16, p. 130 A ff.), and by the Romans. On the degradation of the athletic sports, see P. Gardner New Chapters pp. 300—303, Mommsen The Provinces I. p. 269, 287—289 Eng. tr. The chief causes for the prominence of the professional element were (1) the increasing popularity of the heavier sports, boxing and the pancratium; (2) the change of diet, see n. (1015); (3) the progress made in the science and art of training. "But it was Herodicus of Selymbria who ruined athletics, by introducing elaborate rules for eating and drinking and exercise. He first discovered that the human body can by scientific tending be made, not healthy and beautiful, but muscular and adapted to this or that special service: he improved the speed of the races and the skill of the wrestlings, but spoiled athletics as a means of education for life and happiness" (Gardner). The evil increased until in Roman times no pro-

§ 6 32 οἱ δὲ λίαν κτλ] In Sparta, reading and writing were not included among the subjects taught by the state. But this did not prevent individuals from learning them on their own account, if it seemed expedient to do so (Plut. Lyc. 16), and it is therefore a rhetorical exaggeration for Isocrates to make the sweeping assertion (Panath. § 209) that in the most ordinary education they were so backward as not even to know their letters (Schömann Eng. tr. p. 259). Yet the author of the Hippias Major (258 c) says very few Spartans understood figures (Eaton). Plato Rep. VIII. 548 b f. conclusively proves that they attached far greater importance to gymnastics than to music. Chamaeleon in Athen. IV. 184 d asserts that all the Lacedaemonians learnt flute-playing, but this cannot be accepted in the face of Aristotle's statement, c. 5 § 7 n. (1026), that they were not taught music. This disposes of Schömann's assertion to the contrary. And yet strictly speaking this would include singing as well; but the expression should probably not be pressed. Singing, no doubt, formed part of the prescribed course of study. Many too must of their own accord have learned to play the lyre and flute, or else it would be difficult to explain how the choregus of whom Aristotle tells a story, c. 6 § 12, n. (1026), could have attained such mastery of the flute. From Aristotle's language c. 5 § 7, it may be inferred that the Spartans who simply listened to others, as well as those who could themselves play, held music to be a means of moral training, and not simply a source of pleasure and amusement. 19 The quotation is from the Bacchae 381, ἀποπαῦσαι τε μερίμνας. The preceding line is μετὰ τ' αὐτοῦ γελάσαι, and the choral ode continues ὅποταν βότρυος ἔλθῃ | γάνος ἐν δαιτὶ θεῶν, | κισσοφόροις δ' ἐν θαλίαις | ἀνδράσι κρατῆρ ὕπνον ἀμφιβάλλῃ. SUSEM. (1020)

§ 3 διὸ καὶ τάττουσιν κτλ] The sense of this corrupt passage is quite plain. Lambinus has perhaps made the best attempt at its restoration. Postgate would explain the text as it stands, taking τάττουσιν = prescribe, recommend as in VI(IV). 2. 18; "and so it (music) is also appointed for the purpose of recreation alone, and all these things are employed in like manner." But then the words in italics have to be supplied. With Flach's transposition ἅμα τούτοις τάττουσιν = 'and so they rank music with all these, and employ them all alike.' SUSEM. (1020 b)

21 τὴν ὄρχησιν] Reiz correctly quotes Ath. i. 9 f. ff. in illustration of the passage, but he should not have adduced Od. i. 151 f., for in Homer's description of dancing and singing as "ornaments of the feast" (τὰ γάρ τ' ἀναθήματα δαιτός) Aristotle perceives, c. 3 § 8 notes (995—998), a higher estimate of these arts as a means of refined amusement and the best intellectual enjoyment. In Ps-Plato Alcib. i. 108 c the term μουσικὴ is used in the widest sense to embrace the whole of the rhythmic arts, music, poetry, and dancing: but Plato himself only uses the word to include music and poetry. He makes dancing a part of gymnastics, Laws II. 673 A, VII. 795 E, 813 A ff.; and distinguishes between imitative dancing and non-imitative, called 'gymnastic' dancing in the narrower sense of the term, 795 E τῆς ὀρχήσεως ἄλλη μὲν Μούσης λέξιν μιμουμένων, τό τε μεγαλοπρεπὲς φυλάττουσα ἅμα καὶ ἐλεύθερον, ἄλλη δὲ εὐεχίας ἐλαφρότητός τε ἔνεκα καὶ κάλλους τῶν τοῦ σώματος μελῶν (Eaton). Aristotle Poet. i. 5. 6, 1447 a 27 f. finds it necessary to lay special stress on the fact that either this first kind of imitative dancing—or artistic dancing properly so called—or else (as I have assumed) all dancing belongs to the group of imitative arts of the rhythmical or musical class (the defective text of the Poetics admits of more than one explanation, and one explanation can be extorted from the words as they stand, see Vahlen Beiträge zu Arist. Poet. i p. 3 [267]). As to sleep, see n. (990). SUSEM. (1021)

ἢ μᾶλλον] The second use: for moral training and formation of character, as gymnastic trains the body.

24 ἐθίζουσιν δύνασθαι χαίρειν ὁρθῶς] According to Aristotle's theory, which is diametrically opposed to that of Kant, moral virtue is only found where love of the good is present, and where the moral activities are really exercised with pleasure and delight. The main thing in the formation of character, as Plato teaches, Laws II. 653 B, C, is to awaken and render habitual this right feeling of pleasure: see Nic. Eth. II. 3. i, 1104 b 3 ff., X. i. 1, 1172 a 19 ff., X. 9. 6 ff., 1179 b 23 ff., and below c. 6 § 17 ff. with n. (1044). Compare Nic. Eth. III. 9. 2 ff., 1117 a 32 ff., III. cc. 11 and 12, IV i § 13, 1120 a 26,

In the same way the moral judgment is confused and moral perception hindered by the wrong and harmful feeling of pleasure and pain, see Nic. Eth. iii. 4. 4 f., 1113 a 29 ff., vi. 5. 6, 1140 b 12 ff., and even ordinary pleasures of sense, which are permissible and within due limits necessary, easily delude men into over-estimating their importance: see below § 13 f., 1339 b 31 ff., n. § 4 The third use: to promote rational enjoyment and the culture of the intelligence.

26 φρόνησιν] Bonitz Ind. Ar. 831 b 4: φρόνησις latiore sensu, syn. γνώσις, ἐπιστήμη. The passages cited, amongst them 1288 b 22, 1289 a 12, are sufficient proof that the term is found in Aristotle with the meaning 'intellectual culture,' which is here appropriate, as well as in the kindred sense of 'knowledge' or 'science.' By this additional term Aristotle emphasizes the fact that rational activity as well as rational enjoyment is one element of our highest satisfaction: while c. 5 § 8 he can equally well emphasize the other element by inserting εὐημερίαν καὶ before διαγωγὴν ἐλευθέρων: see n. (1027). There is nothing therefore to justify alteration, bracketing, or transposition. Spengel's suggestion εὐφροσύνην, on the analogy of the second passage, is least open to objection: yet amusement, as well as music, is εὐφροσύνη and Aristotle would hardly have designated amusement as εὐημερία. SUSEM. (1023)

27 παιδιᾶς ἔνεκα] Comp. Nic. Eth. x. 6 §§ 3—8, 1176 b 6 ff.

28 μετὰ λύπης] But Happiness is οὐ μετὰ λύπης ἀλλὰ μεθ' ἡδονῆς, c. 3 § 5, 1338 a 6. The inference is obvious. If learning is painful, teaching is difficult: a tacit contradiction of the Sophists' belief that education is no more than cramming: see Pl. Rep. 345 B, 518 c: and Aristotle's own comparison of the sale of ready-made commodities De Soph. El. 33 § 17, 184 a 2—8 (Butcher). On the pleasures of learning see Rhet. i. 11. 21, 1371 a 31 ff., b 4 ff., also the application to art, Poet. c. 4 § 4, 1448 b 12 ff.

29 οὐδὲ] See IV(VII). 3. 1, 1325 a 19, n. 30 τελεῖ γὰρ ἀτελεῖ προσήκει τέλος] Döring p. 137 is right then in saying that the young are incapable of enjoying art either as an amusement (παιδιά) or by deriving from it the highest intellectual gratification: although it is really only in the latter sense that the 'enjoyment' of art can be spoken of. For the rest of the passage cp. c. 6 § 2, n. (1062). In IV(VII). 14 § 9 ff., 15 § 1 f., cp. n. (903), Aristotle says intellectual training is the highest aim of education, and moral training only a means thereto; while V(VIII). 3. 6 he says that even for the highest intellectual gratification we need to be educated and to learn certain things, adducing (c. 3 § 2 f.) the fact that the ancients considered Music in this sense a part of education: cp. n. (993), n. (1000). This inconsistency can only be reconciled by assuming (a) that in the passages from IV(VII),—παιδεύετον 1333 b 4, τὴν τῶν ἐθῶν μελέτην 1334 b 16, τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν b 25—he does not use education in the exclusive sense in which it is applied to the education of the young up to their twenty-first year, and (β) that, as appears from c. 5 §§ 5, 6, n. (1025), § 8, n. It thus would pave the way for the true artistic enjoyment of music of a high order, and consequently for that highest gratification which is to flow therefrom. See also § 7 n. 21 Μουσαῖος] Not an historical character, but a mythical personage. Under this name went a variety of ancient poems, the real authors of which were unknown, including (α) hymns—Pausanias, IV. 1. 4, maintains that a hymn to Demeter is by Musaeus, and is the only genuine fragment of his which has been preserved—(β) oracular responses (χρησμοί); collected by Onomacritus of Athens under the direction of Hipparchus and esteemed of such importance that Onomacritus was banished from Athens for the interpolation of a single line, which was discovered by Lasus of Hermione: Herod. VII. 6, VIII. 96, IX. 43; also (γ) a gnomic poem addressed to his son Eumolpus, referred to by Plato Repub. II. 363 C, called 'Eumolpia' by Pausanias, X. 5. 3, but 'Ἐποθῆκαι,' 'Precepts' or 'Advice,' by Suidas. SUSEM. (1034)

23 διαγωγὰς] The plural has a concrete meaning 'social gatherings,' 'the more playful forms of social intercourse,' approximating to παιδιὰς, from which διαγωγή is in general carefully discriminated. Comp. n. (921), and III. 9. 13, Nic. Eth. x. 6 § 3, § 8 there cited. SUSEM. (1035)

24 καὶ ἐντεῦθεν] In order that in mature life they may find in music a recreation: cp. c. 5 § 5 with nn. (1024, 1025). The difficulty there raised, as to why in that case boys should learn to sing and play themselves, has been postponed for future discussion: § 9, n. (1030). SUSEM. (1036)

The order of the words in Π¹ must be modified. There is authority for ὑπολάβοι τις ἂν, 1265 b 6: or we might comp. 1277 a 32, κάντεῦθεν ἂν κατῖδοι τις. Yet as at § 14, b 39, all mss. give ἂν τις ὑπολάβοι, we should probably adopt the same order from Π² here.

§ 12 25 ἀβλαβῇ τῶν ἡδέων] A Platonic conception: Phil. 51 A—52 B, 66 C, Rep. II. 357 B αἱ ἡδοναὶ ὅσαι ἀβλαβεῖς, Latius II. 667 D, E. The harmless pleasures, especially those of imitative art, "conduce both to our great end, Happiness, and to rest by the way. Few men have the fortune to find themselves at the goal. All, however, take frequent rest and pastime" (Jebb).

27 ἐν μὲν τῷ τέλει γίνεσθαι] An unusual phrase, which must mean τοῦ τέλους τυχεῖν, to achieve that highest end of life.

Possibly the following is a burlesque of some encomium on music: εὐθὺς ἀπολαύει τῆς τέχνης ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ μανθάνειν, καὶ ἅμα τε ἄρχεται καὶ ἐν τῷ τέλει ἐστίν, Luc. De Parasito 14.

29 οὐχ ὅσον ἐπὶ πλεόν] "Not merely for the sake of a good beyond it, but also for the sake of the pleasure." Even the man who spends his leisure in contemplative activity requires a change: the most cultivated would then seek repose not in difficult but in easy music, though not perhaps such music as is described c. 7 § 7, 1342 a 22 ff., cp. nn. (1097—1099). But Congreve is right in calling attention to the fact that in Nic. Eth. x. 6. 3, 1176 b 6 ff., virtuous activities and pleasant pastimes (αἱ ἡδέαι τῶν παιδιῶν) are declared to be the only two things which men pursue purely for their own sakes and with no other end in view. (1037 b) The verb συμβαίνειν has before been used of awkward consequences which overtake an argument or an opponent: II. 3. 5, 1262 b 4, II. 5. 10, 1263 b 7.

32 ἔχει γὰρ... 37 λύτης] "The true end, no doubt, is fraught with pleasure too,—though not of the commonplace sort. Pursuing the commonplace pleasure, men mistake it for the true pleasure, because it is a faint image of that to which all their actions tend. The true end is desirable independently of things to come after it. So it is with pleasures of this sort; they are desirable independently of what may come after them, and solely on account of what has gone before them, such as toil or pain" (Jebb).

Pleasures are πόνων ἕνεκεν, because § 10, b 16 f., they heal the pain which comes of toils: in Pindar's words ἄριστος εὐφροσύνῃ πόνων κεκριμένων ἱατρός Nem. IV. 1; ἐκρούει τὴν λύπην καὶ διὰ τὰς υπερβολὰς τῆς λύπης, ὡς οὐσης ἱατρείας, τὴν ἡδονὴν διώκουσι N. E. VII. 14. 4, 1154 a 27 f.

34 διὰ τὸ τῷ τέλει... ἔχειν ὁμοίωμά τι] One consequence of the similarity here explained is that men forget the essential difference, viz. that the higher intellectual pleasure contains its end in itself, whilst ordinary sensuous pleasure, so far as it is harmless and necessary, has its end in recreation, becoming (when used at the right time and in moderation) something positively useful and not merely harmless. Cp. c. 3 §§ 1—4 with n. (988). Döring op. c. p. 107 f. points out the apparent inconsistency with the parallel passage Nic. Eth. x. 6. 6, 1176 b 27 ff., quoted in that note, but without attempting to clear it up. In the Ethics Aristotle says: Happiness does not consist in amusement. For amusement is closely connected with recreation, and man needs recreation because he is not capable of supporting unbroken exertion. Consequently recreation is not an end but a means to activity. οὐκ ἐν παιδιᾷ ἀρα ἡ εὐδαιμονία. καὶ γὰρ ἀποκτίνον τὸ τέλος εἶναι παιδιάν, καὶ πραγματεύεσθαι καὶ κακοπαθεῖν τὸν βίον ἅπαντα τοῦ παίζειν χάριν. ἅπαντα γὰρ ὡς εἰπεῖν ἑτέρου ἕνεκα αἰρούμεθα πλὴν τῆς εὐδαιμονίας. τέλος γὰρ αὐτῇ σπουδάζειν δὲ καὶ πονεῖν παιδιᾷ χάριν ἡλίθιον φαίνεται καὶ λαν παιδικόν. παίζειν δ' ὅπως σπουδάζῃ, κατ' Ἀνάχαρσιν, ὀρθῶς ἔχειν δοκεῖ. ἀναπαύσει γὰρ ἔοικεν ἡ παιδιὰ· ἀδυνατοῦντες δὲ συνεχῶς πονεῖν ἀναπαύσεις δέονται. οὐ δὲ τέλος ἡ ἀνάπασις· γίνεται γὰρ ἕνεκα τῆς ἐνεργείας. Here the end of recreation is said to consist in the work to be done, not the work already done, and rightly enough: recreation is naturally to lead from the labour of the past to new labours. But although a man may know this very well, nevertheless, in the midst of recreation (if it is to be a real and enjoyable rest) he will forget the fact, and without any thought of future labour give himself up entirely to a feeling of satisfaction at having happily ended the past toils, for which the present holiday is a recompense and restorative. This appears to me to be the idea which Aristotle wishes to express in the Politics in contradistinction to the idea in the Ethics. Cp. also n. (1143). SUSEM. (1038)

§ 17 The clause ἔτι δὲ...αὐτῶν is not a further reason for inferring ποιούς τινες διὰ τῆς μουσικῆς γίνεσθαι: it gives the ground for the reason already alleged in § 16. If the melodies of Olympus inspire ecstasy, that is because they express ecstasy: quod rhythmis et modulationibus eundem animi affectum exprimebant. And why does such an effect follow upon such a cause? 'Quia eosdem omnino semper in auditoribus omnibus excitant affectus, qui eis exprimuntur, rhythmi atque modulationes': Quaest. crit. coll. p. 420. Hence ἔτι requires emendation, and the whole clause finds a better place below. There is no difficulty in taking χωρὶς as an adverb: apart from the words, when the performance is instrumental solely (ψιλή). SUSEM. There is possibly a tacit correction of Plato who in Laws II. 669 E condemns instrumental music

14 ἐπεὶ δὲ...b 13 νέουσ] This is all one portentous period (monstrum periodi, perhaps the most extended in Aristotle), employed to formulate the second reason for the inference ποιούς τινες διὰ τῆς μουσικῆς γίνεσθαι.

The first clause ἐπεὶ...τῶν ἡδέων finds an echo § 25, 1340 b 15—17. The succeeding clauses are continually interrupted by parenthetical remarks: still the logical connexion, if harder to detect in a 14—18, is plain for the remaining links of the chain. Music can give most realistic imitations (ἁμιούματα) of certain feelings, love, hatred, courage, temperance, § 18; habituation to feel pleasure in the imitations tends to create sympathy with the realities, § 19: it is peculiar to the sense of hearing that it can thus be the channel of a moral imitation (forms and colours are not expressions but only symbols, σημεία), §§ 20, 21: melodies are imitative expressions of character, § 22: hence, there is a definite affection of the soul produced by Music, and if the music be rightly chosen it can be used to educate the moral nature, § 24.

Evidently the term μανθάνειν is used in a narrower sense here for the development of the intellect. Although we are only concerned with the education of ἦθος, character, still no ἡθικὴ ἀρετὴ, no moral virtue = excellence of character, exists apart from φρόνησις, practical wisdom or insight: and the converse is true, Nic. Eth. VI. c. 12 § 8—c. 13 § 6, 1144 a 20—b 32. Also there is no true pleasure apart from a right moral and aesthetic judgment. But judging is a function of the intellect and not of the will. give the fullest expression to all the moral virtues and vices, and to all the emotions without exception, e.g. fear and pity. Such is Aristotle's view (Liepert). Cp. Excursus III. and n. (1089). SUSEM. (1047)

§ 19 Aristotle fully believes, as Plato had done before him, that an educated ear and correct musical taste are no inconsiderable aids to a right discipline of the emotions. On the other hand, the Epicurean Philodemus maintains a negative attitude to all the fundamental propositions of the Peripatetics and Stoics respecting Music. He appears to be contorting in his De Musica the arguments of Theophrastus and Diogenes of Babylon. He denies that Music is μίμησις and musical strains ὁμοιώματα τῶν ἡθῶν. He further denies that music can effect any change in character; fr. 55. § 20 This is maintained even more strongly in the Problems: XIX. 29, 920 a 3, διὰ τί οἱ ῥυθμοὶ καὶ τὰ μέλη φωνῇ οὐσα ἡθεσιν ἔοικεν; ἢ ὅτι κινήσεις εἰσὶν ὥσπερ καὶ αἱ πράξεις; ἥδη δὲ ἡ μὲν ἐνέργεια ἡθικὸν καὶ ποιεῖ ἡθος: so XIX. 27, 919 b 26 ff., esp. b 35 αἱ δὲ κινήσεις αὐταὶ πρακτικαὶ εἰσιν, αἱ δὲ πράξεις ἡθους σημασία ἐστίν. This points to an exaggeration of the rhythmical element: see Butcher op. c. p. 271 ff. Ordered movements reproduce the moral life which is itself an activity, i.e. a movement.

29 τοῖς ἡθεσιν] For the meaning see Exc. III. p. 622 ff. Comp. also generally n. (1084). SUSEM. (1048)

30 ἀλλ' ἐν τοῖς ὁρατοῖς] We may translate "The objects of sight do indeed, in a slight degree, [present an image of moral affections]—since forms have this moral suggestiveness, and the perception of it is universal, though it does not go far. Besides, these forms are not images [of moral character]: forms and colours are rather symbols of the characters on which they usually attend." It is not a little surprising to be told that the strongest impressions are not conveyed through the eye, but through the ear.

31—32] The words ἀλλ' ἐπὶ μικρόν are a poor qualification of τοιαῦτα, which they follow in the MSS. Moreover the next sentence needs some limitation, which fact led E. Müller to alter to οὐ πάντες. The slight transposition makes all right.

31 σχήματα] There is no word which denotes all that is signified by σχήματα, viz. forms, gestures, bodily motions generally, including figures and attitudes in dancing (cp. σχηματίζειν). Still shape and line and colour even here retain something of their significance; and their meaning is helped out by symmetry, which in the arts of repose answers to rhythm." Butcher, Some Aspects p. 274 ff. The element lacking in painting and sculpture, but present in music, has been called "ideal motion." Plato, Phaedrus 250 A ff. makes the most lustrous copies of the ideas to be apprehended by sight: Thompson ad loc., "by ὅσα τιμια ψυχαῖς he seems to mean moral ideas, among which he proceeds to show that beauty alone has its clear antitype on earth."

καὶ τοῦτ'... 35 πάθεσιν] I.e. in a state of emotion a man reveals his inner self by his outward appearance. These words are incorrectly explained by Döring op. c. p. 150 f. and the text is slightly altered by him to suit the meaning. But he does well in calling attention to the fact that, whilst Aristotle rightly enough makes music and the creative arts excite in the spectator the same states and processes of feeling as are represented, on the other hand the emotions evoked by tragedy and epic poetry are fear and pity, the object for representation in both kinds of poetry being that which excites fear or pity (Poet. c. 11 § 4, c. 14 § 1), just as in comedy it is that which excites laughter (γελοῖον, Poet. c. 5 § 1). Yet Aristotle nowhere expressly adds:—"and not fear or pity itself," or "and not that emotion itself which finds expression in laughter;" he nowhere expressly speaks of a difference in this respect between Tragedy, Epic Poetry, and Comedy on the one hand, and Sculpture, Painting, and Music on the other. It is therefore very doubtful whether he was ever conscious of this contrast, and Döring seems to have been the first to follow up this idea, suggested by Aristotle. However, both Aristotle, in assigning to tragic and epic poetry as their only result the excitement of pity and fear, and Döring in insisting upon the difference between poetry and the imitative arts, have overlooked their similarity. Do we not, apart from fear and pity, take pleasure in the noble and high-minded characters brought before us? Does not the overpowering pathos of the emotions they exhibit take us out of ourselves, inspiring us with a faint measure of similar feelings? Take the charming scenes between Odysseus and Nausicaa, which form an essential part of the plot: what have they to do with fear and pity? Their charm consists rather in the vividness with which they call up before us the noble disposition of the maiden in all its shrewdness and naïveté, its natural innocence and sprightliness, and the hero's feelings under this severest test of his constancy, with the manly spirit, at once firm and tender, which he displays on this occasion. SUSEM. (1052)

36 δεῖ μὴ τὰ Παύσωνος... ἀλλὰ τὰ Πολυγνώτου] Polygnotus of Thasos, the creator of the 'art' of Greek painting, flourished after the Persian wars. Cimon brought him to Athens, and he became an Athenian citizen. Thus his work falls in that stirring period so full of the rapidly unfolding promise of Attic art. Pausan was rather younger, as he is often ridiculed by Aristophanes, Ach. 854, Thesm. 949, Plut. 606. See Poet. c. 2 § 1, 1448 a 5 f. Πολύγνωτος μὲν γὰρ κρείττους, Παῦσων δὲ χείρους, Διονύσιος δὲ ὁμοίους εἰκαζεν: the one was a master of ideal representation, the other of caricature. In Poet. c. 6 § 15, 1450 a 26 ff. ὅταν καὶ τῶν γραφῶν Ζεῦξις πρὸς Πολύγνωτον πέπονθεν· ὁ μὲν γὰρ Π. ἀγαθὸς ἡθογράφος, ἡ δὲ Ζεύξιδος γραφὴ οὐδὲν ἔχει ἥθος, Polygnotus is held up for praise in contrast to Zeuxis. It would seem his strength lay in the portraiture of character and that he drew noble characters. We see then that a 38 ἡθικός must be understood in the sense proposed Exc. III.

n. (1043) p. 624. As the originator of that 'ethical' style, pure and self-contained, of which the Parthenon frieze is the highest embodiment, Polygnotus, "the Raphael of antiquity," takes the same rank among painters as Pheidias among sculptors. Pausan however was not precisely a caricaturist, but he delighted in comic scenes of deformity and crime, or satirical pictures of low and vulgar subjects. As regards both painters, see Brunn Gesch. der griech. Künstler II³ pp. 14—46, 49—51; Vahlen Aristoteles Lehre der Rangfolge der Theile Tragödie in Symb. Philol. Bonn. p. 159 ff. 38 ἐν δὲ τοῖς μέλεσιν αὐτοῖς κτλ] "Melodies on the other hand contain in themselves imitations of character." Prof. Butcher has written an able commentary on this op. c. p. 267 ff. Premising that upon the Aristotelian conception of fine art as μίμησις "a work of art is a copy or likeness of an original, and not a symbolic representation of it," he shows that "the various arts reflect the image from without by different means, and with more or less clearness and directness. Music in most of its forms was, by Aristotle, as by the Greeks generally, regarded as the most 'imitative' of the arts. It is a direct image, a copy, a reflection, of character.... Not only states of feeling but also strictly ethical qualities and dispositions of mind are reproduced by musical imitation, and on the close correspondence between the copy and the original depends the importance of music in the formation of character." He forcibly contrasts the exactly opposite modern view. "We generally think of music quite otherwise. The emotion it suggests, the message it conveys, corresponds but little with a reality outside itself. It is capable of expressing general and elementary moods of feeling, which will be variously interpreted by different hearers. It cannot render the finer shades of extra-musical emotion with any degree of certainty and precision. Its expressive power, its capacity to reproduce independent realities, is weak in proportion as the impression it produces is vivid and definite."

§ 22 40 ἡ τῶν ἀρμονιῶν φύσις] Besides its general meaning of 'music,' 'musical sounds' (for which see § 25 below; the soul assumed to be a 'harmony') ἀρμονία has a special musical signification: scale, octave, definite succession of notes. Unfortunately 'harmony' in modern music has totally different associations: as a technical term in music it denotes the 'combination of simultaneous sounds' or parts—in fact, part-writing, something almost (not quite) unknown to Greek musicians, for which their word is συμφωνία. The best rendering for the technical term ἀρμονία is not 'key' or 'scale', but Mode, a term which still survives in musical treatises where Major or Minor scales are more correctly designated scales 'in the Major or Minor mode.' Comp. the Miltonic description of the Dorian Mode, Paradise Lost i. 550 ff. 'to the Dorian mood | Of flutes and soft recorders; such as raised | To highth of noblest temper heroes old | Arming to battle, and instead of rage | Deliberate valour breathed, firm and unmoved | With dread of death to flight or foul retreat; | Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage, | With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chase | Anguish and doubt and fear and sorrow and pain.' See further Excursus IV on Greek Music generally, p. 624 ff. SUSEM. (1054)

Trans. "So essentially distinct in nature are the several musical modes that they produce a corresponding variety of mood and do not affect the hearers alike. Some, like the mixolydian, cast us into grief and gloom; others, the relaxed modes, soften the spirit; another will produce a sober and sedate frame of mind, an effect which seems peculiar to the Dorian mode: while the Phrygian excites to ecstasy." For the non-musical reader we may sum up thus: the Dorian was the old national minor scale of Greece; the Lydian and Phrygian two foreign major scales (from a modern standpoint abnormal), borrowed from their neighbours by the Greeks of Asia.

For this effect of the mixo-Lydian mode Plato vouches and accordingly banishes it, Rep. 398 D f. *τίνας οὖν θρηνώδεις ἁρμονίας; Μιξολυδιστί, ἔφη, καὶ συντονολυδιστί καὶ τοιαῦτά τις. 2 τὴν διάνοιαν] Not the subject of the infinitive (ἔχειν or διατίθεσθαι) but the adverbial acc. after it.

3 τὰς ἀνειμένας] The modes called here "relaxed" are obviously those which Plato calls χαλαραί, Rep. 398 E: τίνας οὖν μαλακαί τε καὶ συμποτικάς τῶν ἁρμονιών; Ἰαστί, ἦν δ' ὅς, καὶ λυδιστί, αἵτινες χαλαραὶ καλοῦνται. The terms refer to pitch: ἀνειμένη (χαλαρά) = low, low-pitched, σύντονος = high, high-strung. See Pratinas Frag. 5: μήτε σύντονον δίοικε, μήτε τὰν ἀνειμένην Ἰαστί μοῦσαν, ἀλλὰ τὰν μέσαν... νέων ἀρουραν αἰδολίζε τῷ μέλει... πρέπει τοι πᾶσαν αἰοῖδὰ λαβράκταις Αἰολίς ἁρμονία (Athen. § 23 5 οἱ περὶ τὴν παιδείαν ταύτην π.] Amongst others, no doubt, Aristotle refers to Damon mentioned in n. (1054), i.e. Exc. Aristoxenus, see n. (1083); probably also to his fellow-pupil Heraclides of Heracleia in the Pontus Athen. XIV. 624 C, who preferred to call the three chief Modes by Greek names, Dorian, Aeolian, Ionian. Damon was also a politician, an associate of Pericles: most probably it was he who started the idea of providing pay for the Dicastes and Bouleutae (μισθὸς δικαστικός, μ. βουλευτικός), as Wilamowitz Hermes XIII. 1880. p. 318 ff. has shown. 17 καὶ τίς ἔοικε... 19 ἀρμονίαν] The transposition is recommended by Böcker for the simple reason that the words in the traditional order do not suitably follow on the remarks immediately preceding, that music is adapted for the education of the young. If we could be certain that Aristotle always fitted in his notes at the right point, and never turned back to a subject he had just dismissed, this would be ample justification: see Böcker's own remarks p. 32 (cited above Introd. p. 95 n. 5).

17 συγγένεια] Butcher compares Pl. Tim. 47 D, ἢ δὲ ἀρμονία ξυγγενεῖς ἔχουσα φοράς ταῖς ἐν ἡμῖν τῆς ψυχῆς περιόδοις. 'Musical tones and measures have a certain affinity'—the context plainly shows the meaning to be 'with the soul': but the extraordinary brevity and allusiveness of Aristotle's style seem to have permitted the ellipse. The Aristotelian text-books, οἱ κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν λόγοι, were composed, it should be remembered, for the members of the school; in their peculiar terminology, Diels observes, they resemble a system of shorthand to which only the pupils possess the key: and he compares Galen De sophism. xiv. 585 K. σίνηθες δὲ τὸ τοιοῦτο τάχος τῷ φιλοσόφῳ καὶ καθάπερ ἐπὶ τῶν σημείων ἐκφέρειν τὰ πολλὰ καὶ διὰ τὸ πρὸς τοὺς ἀκηκόοντας ἡδὴ γράφεσθαι.

18 πολλοὶ τῶν σοφῶν] This was a Pythagorean doctrine. After them two pupils of Aristotle, Aristoxenus, who had previously been trained among the Pythagoreans, and Dicaearchus held this same view without any essential difference: see Zeller Phil. d. Griechen I.⁵ p. 444 (ed. 4 p. 413), II. ii.³ p. 888 ff. Eng. tr. Pre-Socratics I. p. 476. SUSEM. (1057) The earliest evidence is Plato Phaedo 85 E, on which see the note of Mr Archer Hind who thinks Simmias must be the exponent of a widely received opinion. The examination of this doctrine in De Anima I c. 4 assumes that ἀρμονία = κράσις, a blending of diverse or opposite elements (λόγος τις τῶν μυχθέντων ἢ σύνθεσις): and so Simmias in one place of the Phaedo 86 B, though again he compares the soul to the music or tune i.e. something immaterial played upon the material lyre, which answers to the body. The present passage certainly favours the latter interpretation of the ambiguous term ἀρμονία.

19 οἷ δ' ἔχειν ἀρμονίαν] Pl. Phaedo 93; the soul has in it virtue, which is a harmony. Cp. Susemihl Plat. Phil. I. p. 440 f., 443. SUSEM. (1058)

He was seven times στρατηγός, the highest political and military office in his native city, an honour not usually conferred more than once upon the same citizen; he led the army to victory in several wars (Diog. Laert. VIII. 79, 82) and was for a long time the leading statesman of Tarentum (Strab. VI. 280). Plato made his acquaintance on his first voyage to Sicily, and it was through his diplomatic mediation that Dionysius the younger at last allowed Plato to depart in safety on his third journey (Diog. Laert. VIII. 79, III. 22). Archytas was a man of excellent character, and his interest in education as well as his kindness towards his slaves is shown by the story that he delighted to get their children about him and teach them himself (Athenodor. in Athen. XII. 519 b). The rattle which he invented became proverbial (Athenodor. l. c.), cp. Aelian Var. Hist. XII. 15, Suidas s. v. 'Αρχύτας, Poll. IX. 127). No very definite opinion can be pronounced upon his merits as a man of science, since the writings bearing his name were for the most part forgeries. Fragments of several of them are extant: of these the fragments from the beginning of a work upon Mathematics can hardly be assailed, whilst the work upon Acoustics was cer-

§ 5 The censure passed on music implies that the pursuit of excellence as a performer degrades the youthful citizen into a professional. It is remarked in Exc. I. p. 620, that the feeling of the Greeks in the fourth century towards artistic specialists seems to have varied with the eminence of the artist much more than it does amongst us. While the artists of genius were recognised as great men, the ordinary artist was a mechanic, who had left the true political life for a bread-and-butter study.

§§ 6, 7 There must be no practising upon instruments which unfit the citizen for taking his part in war and in athletic exercises. Musical training must not be such as to fit the learner for contests of artists.

ἡδονὴν φυσικὴν. Aristotle means that sensuous charm, that tickling of the ears, produced by every kind of music, good or bad, simply as music by its native means of expression, harmony, melody, rhythm. A feeling for rhythm is, to a greater or less extent, innate in all men: Poet. c. 4 § 7, 1448 b 20 f. Comp. Döring p. 114 f. SUSEM. (1069) See Probl. XIX. 38, 920 b 29—36. It will be seen, c. 7 § 6, that some scope is allowed to this inferior pleasure. Plato indeed, Laus II 655 D, shrinks from adopting the standard of pleasure: καίτοι λέγουσί γε οἱ πλείστοι μουσικῆς ὀρθότητα εἶναι τὴν ἡδονὴν ταῖς ψυχαῖς περιζούσαν δύναμιν. ἀλλὰ τοῦτο μὲν οὔτε ἀνεκτόν οὔτε ὅσιον τὸ παράπαν φθέγγεσθαι.

τῶν ἄλλων ἔνια ζῶων] The limits of any such appreciation of musical sound by the animals are strictly defined Eud. Eth. III. 2. 8, 1231 a 2 ff.: οὐθὲν γάρ, ὅ τι καὶ ἄξιον λόγου, φαίνεται πάσχοντα [sc. τῶν θηρίων] αὐτῇ τῇ ἀκρόασει τῶν εὐαρμόστων, εἰ μὴ τί που συμβέβηκε τερατώδες.

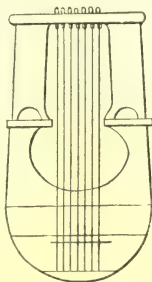

§ 9 18 αὐλοῦς] Usually translated by 'flute.' But in reality the instrument had a mouth-piece (ζεῦγος), with a vibrating reed (γλῶσσα) fitted in it, so that it more closely resembled our 'clarinet.' The σύριγξ μονοκάλαμος may have represented the modern flute. Hom. Il. x. 13 mentions both, αὐλῶν συρίγγων τ' ἐνοπήν. The αὐλὸς was always played in pairs (Latin tibiae, cp. § 13, 1341 b 4, αὐλοῦς), the two instruments being connected by a leathern strap, φορβεῖά, worn round the mouth. SUSEM. (1070) Consult further L. v. Jan Art. 'Flöten' in Baumeister's Denkmäler and A. A. Howard in Harvard Studies IV. 1893, p. 1 ff.

οὐτ' ἄλλο τι τεχνικὸν κτλ.] By these words Aristotle excludes every instrument except the κίθαρις, or lyre, also called φόρμιγξ in Homer (as L. van Jan conjectured to be the case before Westphal; though on insufficient grounds, as appears to me, he afterwards withdrew the conjecture, and pronounced κίθαρις and φόρμιγξ to be the same as κιθάρα but distinct from λύρα). The lyre was the most ancient and the most easily handled of Greek stringed instruments: beside those here represented Jan gives (p. 45) other shapes of the lyre and κιθάρα.

Kepion a pupil of Terpander, Plut. De musica c. 6, 1233 C, invented the κιθάρα about 700 B.C. This was the ordinary instrument used by professional players and solo-singers. It possessed greater resonance, being of the shape here shown.

See Westphal Gesch. der alten Musik p. 86 ff.; cp. L. van Jan De fidibus Graecorum p. 5 ff. Plato Rep. IV. 399 D permits both Lyre and κιθάρα to be used in teaching: on the other hand, he restricts the instruction to be given to a yet greater extent than Aristotle. δείας must depend on ἀγαθοῦς: 'such only as will improve the hearers of them in respect of their musical or general education.'

21 The change of ἔτι δὲ to ἐπειδὴ is thus defended Quaest. crit. coll. p. 421: Aristoteles dixit quidem v. 17 sqq. δῆλον δ' ἐκ τούτων καὶ ποῖους ὀργάνους κτλ, sed nondum docuit cur hoc sit δῆλον ἐκ τούτων. Secuntur demum hae causae. Ergo hoc quoque loco non ἔτι δὲ scripsit, sed ἐπειδὴ. SUSEM.

22 ὀργιαστικόν] I.e. it produces an ecstatic frame of mind, it intoxicates with excitement and elevation of the feelings. This appears plainly from c. 7 §§ 3, 4, 8, 9. Cp. also c. 5 §§ 22, 23, Excursus IV. p. 628 nn. (1054, 1092), and especially n. (1107). SUSEM. (1072)

Since ἡθικόν = expressing character, ὀργιαστικόν should mean expressing orgies or fanatical excitement. It is because this wild, excited music interprets the excesses of religious frenzy, that it also accompanies and stimulates them. See n. on c. 5 § 17.

ὥστε πρὸς τοὺς τοιοῦτους κτλ.] "Hence the flute should be used at such times when the effect of the concert is to purge the emotions and not to instruct."

23 κάθαρσιν] Here occurs for the first time the idea of purging or curing emotion by means of emotion. How is this effect of music related to the three already discussed (1339 a 16 ff., b 13 πρότερον παιδεῖαν ἢ παιδίαν ἢ διαγωγὴν sc. δύναται)? For the present we are only told that it differs from παιδεία, that pleasurable enjoyment which goes to form character. But we receive no information as to its relation to the recreation which music affords (παιδιά, ἀνάπανσις), or the full aesthetic enjoyment which belongs to διαγωγή, the highest intellectual gratification. See p. 638, Excursus v. n. (1101). SUSEM. (1073)

Besides its literal meaning cleansing (καθαίρειν) which is necessarily vague, κάθαρσις has two definite metaphorical senses: (1) religious, or rather liturgical, purifying=lustratio, expiatio; (2) medical (or rather pathological) purging. The latter metaphor is prominent in Aristotle: but his usage of the term constitutes a distinct application (3) in a psychological sense, emotional relief followed by refinement of the emotions. See the passages cited in the 'Note on Κάθαρσις' p. 641 ff.

24 αὐτῷ is αὐλῷ. "Besides, it happens to tell against the educational use of the flute, that playing upon it hinders singing." Here λόγος approximates to the meaning of φωνή, cp. n. (26).

26 Probably ἐκ implies that they not only 'disallowed its use' but excluded it or withdrew it from the hands of the young. So 1336 b 7, 1321 a 25.

§ 11 28 σχολαστικώτεροι] More fitted for leisure, qualified to use it intelligently: cp. VIII(V). II. 5 συλλόγους σχολαστικούς. 'Better fitted by their increased resources for leisure, fired with loftier aspirations after excellence, even earlier as well as in the full flush of their achievements after the Persian wars they began to lay hold on every form of learning without distinction, pushing their research onward.' "To this stirring generation, active in striking out new paths, belonged Hippodamus" (Newman).

τῷ χορῷ] This was undoubtedly a lyric chorus. For dramas proper do not appear to have been performed at Sparta. SUSEM. (1075)

34 ἐπεχωρίασεν] As in 1335 a 16 η. The flute was more at home in Boeotia, where it is recorded of Epaminondas, as something exceptional, that he had learnt to accompany him singing on the lyre.

35 δῆλον δὲ ἐκ τοῦ πίνακος] There can be no question this appeal to the 'tablet' resembles that in Αθ. πολ. c. 7 § 4 to the statue of Diphilus.

36 πίνακος ὃν ἀνέθηκε κτλ.] The most ancient Attic comic poets of note were Chionides and Magnes, Poet. 3 § 5, 1448 a 34 (cp. 5. 2, 1449 b 3), the next in order Ekphantides and Cratinus, of whose poetry fragments were extant, the oldest of them being from the pen of Ekphantides, who on this account is erroneously described by the anonymous commentator upon Book IV of the Nic. Eth. (IV. 2. 20, 1123 a 23 f.) as the earliest poet of the Old Comedy. We only possess a few insignificant fragments of his, principally quoted by this scholiast; but we know the title of one of his works 'the Satyrs' (Athen. I. 96 c). See Meineke Fragm. com. Gr. I. p. 35 ff., II. p. 12 ff. At the time when Thrasippus was his choregus, Ekphantides won the first prize. The word πίναξ refers to the custom which compelled the victorious choregus to dedicate in honour of himself and his tribe a brazen tripod, with an inscription upon the pedestal, either at the temple of Apollo near the theatre or at one of the temples situated in the street leading to the theatre, which from this fact received the name of (τρίποδες) the street of tripods. The tripod was then as a rule erected upon the temple, but sometimes placed inside it. See Paus. I. 20. 1 f., cp. Plut. Them. 5, Demosth. XXI. 6. We possess a considerable number of inscriptions of this kind, which for the most part relate to dithyrambic (cyclic) choruses, and in these the names of the flute-player, the poet or chorus master, the archon, and sometimes the principal actor are mentioned, as well as the name of the tribe to which the choregus belonged and the species of drama represented. SUSEM. (1076)

See however Haigh Attic Theatre p. 52 f. "The memorials of victory erected by the choregi to the dramatic choruses appear to have taken the form of tablets (πίνακες). For instance, Themistocles after his victory with a tragic chorus erected a 'tablet' in honour of the event. It is a trait in the character of the mean man in Theophrastus, that when he has been successful with a tragic chorus, he erects merely a wooden scroll (Char. 22 ταινία ξυλίνη) in commemoration of his victory."

37 ὕστερον δὲ ἀπεδοκιμάσθη] Plutarch, Vita Alcib. c. 2, tells the story that Alcibiades threw away the flute in disgust, with the words αὐλείτωσαν οὖν Θηβαίων παῖδες· οὐ γὰρ ἴσασι διαλέγεσθαι. He adds that both by jest and earnest Alcibiades tried to stop the practice of learning the flute: ὅθεν ἐξέπεσε κομῶδῃ τῶν ἐλευθέρων διατριβῶν καὶ προσηλακίσθη παντάπασιν ὁ αὐλός. The connexion of cause and effect can hardly be accepted. Still, no doubt the famous αὐληταί who were applauded at Athens were as a rule strangers, and two of the greatest, Antigénidas and Timotheus, were Boeotians.

εὐροῦσαν ἀποβαλεῖν] The Satyr Mar-syas is said to have picked up the flute which Athene threw away, and to have played upon it: and for this the goddess punished him. The earliest extant allusion to this legend is in a dithyramb
 'Marsyas' by Melanippides Frag. 2. ἃ

 616 e, f. (J. G. Schneider). In other legends the Phrygian Marsyas is himself the inventor of the flute; an enthusiastic singer and flute-player in the service of Cybele, he is, like all Satyrs and Sileni in Asiatic myths, one of the deities of rivers and fountains in the train of the Phrygian Dionysus. In this character he encounters Apollo, the representative of the music of the κιθάρα, by whom he is defeated and punished. In Lydian legend Pan replaces Marsyas as the rival of Apollo and the teacher of Olympus. See Preller Griech. Mythol. I. p. 176 f., 508, 510, 576 ff., 585. Hyagnis also, a Phrygian, or Mysian, the supposed father of Mar-syas, was sometimes called the inventor of the flute: and Olympus himself, who was believed to be the pupil of Marsyas, is at one time called a Phrygian and at another a Mysian, pointing to the origin of this kind of music in Asia Minor, whether in Phrygia, Mysia, or Lydia (see

Bonitz suggests b 20 the excision of καὶ πρὸς παιδείαν, (1) because no satisfactory sense can be given to καὶ, (2) because two questions are distinguished, and it is the second one, beginning at ἐπειτα, which has to do with Education. Further he is inclined to extend the period as far as b 32 περὶ αὐτῶν, reading ἐπεὶ δὴ at 23, and making νομίσαντες μὲν οὖν begin the apodosis to this (secondary) protasis b 23 ἐπεὶ δὴ...26 ἐδρῦθμον, on the ground that it is impossible for ἐπειδὴ to introduce a second protasis referring to the preceding apodosis σκεπτέον...ἕτερον.

 SUSEM.

25 καὶ πότερον κτλ] In the Introd.
 p. 49 (cp. n. 2) it is pointed out that the discussion of this question is no longer extant in our present treatise. SUSEM. (1081)

The whole passage may be rendered:
 We have still to consider the question of musical modes and rhythms: whether all the modes and all the rhythms should be employed or a distinction made between them: secondly, whether the same distinction will serve for those whose work is teaching, or whether we shall make a new one: thirdly, as we find Music to consist of melody and rhythm, and the influence which each of them has upon education ought not to be overlooked, [also] whether the preference must be given to goodness of melody or of rhythm.

§ 2 27 Vahlen rightly calls attention to the close similarity of phrase between this passage and IV(VII). I. 2, 1323 a 22.

 SUSEM.

The passage from the Metaphysics runs thus: ἔπειτα μετὰ ταῦτα χωρὶς περὶ τῶν ἰδεῶν αὐτῶν ἀπλῶς καὶ ὅσον νόμου χάριν.
 Here ἀπλῶς seems to mean 'in general terms,' much as καθόλου (so Eudemos συντόμως in the parallel passage E. E. I. 8, 1217 b 19), and not with Bonitz=simply (a sense nearly akin to χωρὶς: quaestionem de numeris et de principiis cum hac de ideis quaestione nondum vult coniungi). The precise reference in νόμος too is disputed. Bonitz refers it to Aristotle's own practice of criticizing his predecessors: Bernays rendered νόμου χάριν by dicis causa: Diels disapproving of this remarks that νόμιμον is not ὅσιον, nor does the phrase=ὁσίας χάριν, and prefers to render it "to comply with the prevailing custom, the fashion." It seems best to modify Bernays' interpretation a little.
 The original meaning is "only so far as to avoid a conflict with the law," i.e.
 'under compulsion and reluctantly.' Other authors use the phrase thus, of what is

§ 3 μόνον εἰπόντες περὶ αὐτῶν. ἐπεὶ δὲ τὴν διαίρεσιν ἀποδεχόμεθα τῶν μελῶν ὡς διαιροῦσί τινες τῶν ἐν φιλοσοφίᾳ, done grudgingly, only because it is expected of one, and so may be hastily despatched: e.g. Diphilus Ζωγράφου Fr. 2 l. 13 apud Athen. vii. 292 A: οὐθὲν ἡδέως ποιεῖ γὰρ οὗτος, ἀλλ' ὅσον νόμον χάριν, said of a stingy shipowner who has vowed a sacrifice in a storm, is reluctant to pay his vow, and certain to behave shabbily about it. See Bernays Die Dialoge p. 150, Forchhammer Aristoteles und die exoterischen Reden p. 51 f., Diels Monatsber. der Berl. Akad. 1883, p. 488, Susemihl in Neue Jahrb. f. Philol. CXXIX. 1884, p. 273.

τοὺς τύπους] With the plural comp. Nic. Eth. x. 9. 1, 1179 a 34, ἱκανῶς εἴρηται τοῖς τύποις instead of the more usual τύπω, 1276 b 19 n. "Contenting ourselves with a formal discussion in outline only."

§ 3 The construction is ἐπεὶ δὲ... ἀποδεχόμεθα ... ὡς διαιροῦσι ... καὶ ... τιθέσι, φαμέν δ' οὐ μᾶς ... χάριν (καὶ γὰρ... ἀνάπανσιν) all of which is the protasis, the apodosis beginning with φανερόν. Translate: "We accept the classification of melodies made by certain philosophers into ethical, scenic, ecstatic [literally, according as they represent (1) character, (2) action, and (3) ecstasy], as well as their statement that each class of melodies has a musical mode which is naturally appropriate to it. But we hold that there is more than one advantage in the use of music, its object being both educational and purgative—what we mean by purgation will here be stated in general terms, a clearer explanation to be given hereafter in our treatise on Poetry:—while, thirdly, it is a means to aesthetic enjoyment, to relaxation and recreation after exertion. This makes it evident that all the musical modes must be employed, though not all in the same manner. For educational purposes, only those with the most character; but those significant of action, and the ecstatic modes as well, when we listen to the performances of others."

33 τινες τῶν ἐν φιλοσοφίᾳ] Bergk Rhein. Mus. xix. p. 603 plausibly suggests that the reference is to Aristotle's own pupil Aristoxenus. Cp. also § 8 n. (1104). SUSEM. (1083)

34 τὰ μὲν ἠθικὰ κτλ.] This division is based upon the threefold nature of the subject-matter of all imitative art, viz. ἦθος, πράξις, πάθος: characters, actions, emotions (c. 5 §§ 18—22, IV[VII]. 17. 10, cp. n. (963), Poet. c. i § 5, 1447 a 27 f.). For ecstatic modes and melodies do not merely give expression to enthusiasm pure and simple, but also to other painful emotions, see §§ 4—6, § 8 with nn. (1089, 1096, 1101), cp. nn. (1047, 1054). It may be questionable, to say the least of it, whether music can represent actions as such, as well as the feelings which produce and accompany action (e.g. the martial spirit), still the Greeks have, as a matter of fact, made attempts to represent the process of an action by the sequence of feelings excited by purely instrumental music, as in the case of the famous Pythian νόμος (see Hiller 'Sakadas the flute-player' Rhein. Mus. XXXI. 1876, p. 79 ff., Guhrauer Der pythische νόμος Jahrb. für Philol. Suppl. N. S. VIII. p. 309 ff.). This, one of the earliest instances of 'programme music,' depicted the sequence of incidents in the conflict between Apollo and the Python. In any case no doubt we must hold that the πρακτικὰ ἁρμονίαι express emotions, but they are of an energetic character, stimulating to vigorous action, and not of an enervating character such as those produced by the ecstatic Modes. Nor must we forget that πράξις includes the idea of 'scene' as well as 'action,' and at times, e.g. IV(VII). 17. 10, 1336 b 16 is most correctly rendered by the former expression. SUSEM. (1084)

The second of the three classes (πρακτικὰ μέλη, πρακτικὰ ἁρμονίαι) has no direct English equivalent: we must be content to designate them 'modes and melodies of action.' Clearly the first is like ecclesiastical music now, calm and serious: the third the wild excited airs, at once significant of, and fitted to stimulate the orgies of Dionysus or Cybele. But the second depicted some stirring action, as in the Pythian νόμος, or arming for the fray, as in a lost tragedy: Probl. xix. 48, ἦθος δὲ ἔχει ἢ μὲν ὑποφρυνιστὶ πρακτικόν, διὸ καὶ ἐν τῷ Γηρυνῶν [cp. Nauck Frag. 2 p. 762] ἢ ἐξοδος καὶ ἢ ἐξόπλισις ἐν ταύτῃ πεποιήται.

40 τρίτον δὲ πρὸς διαγωγὴν] At first sight there is a difficulty, if κάθαρσις and διαγωγὴ constitute separate ends. What else than διαγωγὴ, as described above, see n. (1000), could express the aim of the concerts and musical exhibitions which are productive of κάθαρσις more than μάθησις (c. 6 § 9)? Not to mention that it is strange to find, in the received text, διαγωγὴ apparently explained by ἀνάπausis with which it is so often contrasted. Nor is it possible to reconcile the three advantages attendant on the use of music here with the three ends of musical education enumerated c. 5 §§ 2—4 and easily recognisable c. 8 § 9. Comp.
 Bernays Rhein. Mus. XIV. 1889 p. 371 f.,
Ueber die tragische Katharsis (ed. 2) p.
 125 f. See however Exc. v. p. 638. If the two passages in c. 5 refer exclusively to music as a means of education, all the three ends there given (διαγωγὴ, παιδεία = ἀρετή, ἀνεσις = ἀνάπausis) are summed up under the single phrase παιδείας ἔνεκα of our context. That is, though preparatory to διαγωγὴ (since those who have not learnt when young can never fully enjoy music),

 the educational use must be conceived as distinct. Then there is further the emotional or pathological use (κάθαρσις)
 now introduced for the first time. Plainly, that does not attend on the music employed in education. It should be noted that Zeller (op. c. p. 771 n. 1) insists on a fourfold use here: he would separate from
 (3) πρὸς διαγωγὴν, the following clause
 (4) πρὸς ἀνεσὶν τε καὶ...ἀνάπausιν.

1342 a 3 ταῖς ἡθικωτάταις] In this class the Dorian Mode stands first, as Aristotle says himself § 8. But from Excurs. IV n. (1054) it seems strange he should speak of more than one ἡθικωτάτη ἁρμονία, since only the Aeolian and perhaps the antiquated Locrian and Boeotian can go with the Dorian; indeed even the Aeolian forms a transition to the ἁρμο-νίαί πρακτικαί: cp. n. (1103). From Excurs. IV it would appear that Lydian, Hypo-phrygian (Ionian), and possibly Hypo-lydian constitute the next group of πρακτικαί: while the ecstatic are the Phrygian, Mixolydian, high-pitched Lydian and high-pitched Ionian (unless this was identical with the Mixolydian):

under which κάθαρσις and διαγωγή can be included.

4 καὶ ταῖς πρακτικαῖς] Here καὶ = 'as well as.' For Aristotle would not separate from πρακτικά and ἐνθουσιαστικά ἄρμ. such others as, though ἠθικά, do not possess that character in the highest degree and so form the transition to one of the other two species. From Exc. IV these would seem to be the low-pitched Ionian and low-pitched Lydian. Since every painful emotion, though not of course every trace of emotion, is foreign to them, the ἠθικώταται would be exceptions: yet this is not expressly stated: much less is there any express statement that only 'ecstatic modes,' as Döring thinks, exert a cathartic influence, see n. (1101) p. 638 ff. (That this is my view and was maintained by me in Jahrb. f. Phil. LXXXV. 1862, p. 416 is admitted by Döring Philologus XXVII. p. 724, though I regret that in Kunstlehre des Arist. p. 283 he reprints unaltered an incorrect statement about it which appeared Philol. XXI. p. 501.) Not to mention others, the Dorian melodies, apparently the most numerous of all, do not exert any cathartic influence. Further, the plural form in the mention of πρακτικά ἄρμονιαι should be noticed. Comp. Exc. IV. n. (1054), and § 5, τὰ μέλη with n. (1096). SUSEM. (1087, 1088)

The important point to seize is that the ecstatic music had no direct ethical, but only a pathological, effect. In fact, the absence of a direct ethical effect prevents it from being used in education. Zeller, p. 774, n. (2).

§§ 4, 5 The link of connexion with the preceding seems to be that the public performance of music in the ecstatic 'modes' calls for justification. Döring differently (p. 256): "Every species of music has its special province, the 'ethical' music in παιδεία, the 'ecstatic' in κάθαρσις [see however n. 1007], the πρακτικά perhaps as military music. Besides this, every species of music may be used for enjoyment. This last proposition needs no further proof, so far as the first two species ἠθικά and πρακτικά are concerned: in respect of ecstatic music it sounds a little startling. In order therefore to explain it, and the term κάθαρσις as well, Aristotle proceeds with §§ 4, 5. This enables him to give the explanation of κάθαρσις in general terms (ἀπλῶς) as the effect of certain melodies upon a form of religious frenzy, κορυβαντισμός." The fact last stated is partially corroborated by a passage from Aristides Quintilianus II. p. 157 Meib.; Döring p. 332. Translate: "For the emotion which violently affects some souls is present in all though in a greater or less degree. This is true of pity and terror, true also of ecstasy. Some persons are liable to seizure by this form of morbid excitement. Now as the effect of the sacred melodies we see that such persons, under the treatment of the melodies which excite frenzy in the soul, fall back into the normal state, as if they had undergone a medical cure or purgation." It is also possible to take ἐκ τῶν ἱερῶν μελῶν with ὀρώμεν: 'we see from the sacred melodies etc.' Cp. Hagfors p. 13 f.

7 οἷον ἔλεος καὶ φόβος] From the whole context it is more than probable that fear and pity are here adduced not with reference to their influence in Tragedy (see my Introd. to the Poetics pp. 36—67), but like ecstasy, with reference merely to the cathartic effect of music, so that the beneficial excitement of fear and pity by music expressing these emotions is here given by way of illustration. See c. 5 § 18 n. (1047), 7 § 3 (1084), § 5 (1096), § 8 (1101). SUSEM. (1089)

With this view Mr Newman appears to concur: Introd. p. 366 "for though it might be thought that harmonies which arouse feelings of enthusiasm or fear or pity, and purge these emotions, are useful only to a few over-fraught spirits, this is not really so: all are more or less in need of music of this kind and relieved by it. The melodies also which purge emotion are similarly productive of innocent pleasure."

Bernays in his usual manner completes the sentence thus: 'e.g. pity and terror

8 κατακώχιμοι] 'Liable to be possessed, attacked.' So also with ecstasy. Any one may be seized by slight frenzy, but in some it amounts to a disease, κορυβαντισμός. Plato uses κατοκωχή for inspiration, Phaedr. 245 A, Ion 536 C. Cp. Zeller p. 777 n. 1. (Note that all the MSS. agree here and 1269 b 30 in an irrational form. But in Nic. Eth. x. 9. 3, 1179 b 9 K^b gives κατοκωχίμοι.)

ἐκ τῶν δ' ἱερῶν μελῶν] Join with καθισταμένους, not with ὀρώμεν. See Bursian's Jahresber. LVII. p. 174 [and Bonitz Ind. Ar. 356 a 41]. These are assumed to be the same as the melodies of Olympus, mentioned c. 5 § 16. See Exc. II. p. 621. SUSEM. (1090)

9 ὅταν χρήσωνται] "When they have used the melodies" in the same sense in which we speak of using remedies. Cp. n. (1095), and p. 641 f. SUSEM. (1091)

Like κίνησις, καθίστασθαι, κουφίσεσθαι, this is a medical term. Cp. Hippocr. III. 712 K. τῆσι φαρμακίῃσι χρέεσθαι, III. 859 κλυσμοῖσι χρέεσθαι, I. 82 τὴν αὐτὴν χρῆσιν (remedy, treatment) αἰεὶ προσδέχεσθαι (Döring). And this, notwithstanding the more general sense of τῇ μουσικῇ χρῆσθαι above, 1341 b 37. It might seem doubtful, from the context alone, whether the patient only listened to, or sang, the maddening strains. Aristides Quintil. implies that both were practised; l.c. κατασταλτέαν (sc. τὴν ψυχὴν) φασὶν εἶναι τῇ μελωδίᾳ, ἥτοι καὶ αὐτοὺς μιμῆσει τινὲ τὸ τῆς φύσεως ἄλογον ἀπομειλιττομένους, ... ἥ καὶ δι' ἀκοῆς [ὅψεως] φόβον τὸν τοῖνδε ἀποτρεπομένους, "the soul must, they say, be soothed by melody, either the patients themselves must appease its irrational state by a certain (musical) imitation (of the frenzy), or they must divert such terror from themselves by listening."

ἐξοργιάζουσι] See ὀργιαστικόν, 1341 a 22, n. (1072), and ὀργιαστικά, 1342 b 3, n. (1107). SUSEM. (1092)

10 καθισταμένους] The expression properly means 'are cured,' 'recover'=return to themselves, as Döring has shown [see Steph. s. v. L. and S. quote only ἐς ἔησιν καθ. Hippocr. 97, add I. 206, 208]. These terms however are not used of temporary, or palliative, restoration (such as is referred to here), but only of a permanent cure. In other passages of Aristotle καθίστασθαι simply means 'to calm oneself,' to settle down after excitement, with no suggestion of a medical sense: e.g. De Memor. c. 2 § 29, 453 a 271, διὸ καὶ ὄργαι καὶ φόβοι, ὅταν τι κινήσωσιν, ἀντικινούντων πάλιν τούτων οὐ καθίστανται, De Somn. c. 3 § 25, 461 a 25, ἡ δὲ τρόφιμος καὶ μὴ νοσώδης (ἀναθυμίασις) καταφέρεται συνισταμένη. Even here this sense would be very appropriate. Cp. κατάστασις Rhet. I. II. 1, 1369 b 34. See also n. (1095), p. 640. SUSEM. (1093) ὥσπερ ἱατρείας τυχόντας καὶ καθάρσεως] The ὥσπερ marks the introduction of a metaphor: both ἱατρεία and κάθαρσις then are metaphorical, the latter the more specific term (Bernays).

This does not hold in the case of those who are sound in mind and possess exactly the right measure of emotional excitability, nor of those who are naturally too little disposed to emotion. As regards the former the medical analogy is only applicable in a precautionary sense, as when for instance a man of sound body must take bodily exercise to prevent illness, and in any case is refreshed and invigorated by a walk and finds pleasure and recreation in it. The latter are less susceptible to the power of music, and in so far as they are susceptible, it will be the excitable and not the purgative side of this homoeopathy of the feelings which will be most prominent, that is to say the really homoeopathic element will be least represented. general, and with the rest of men in such measure as they are susceptible of this or that emotion; they have a like experience; they all undergo a purgation of some sort and feel a pleasurable relief." Under the former case (Corybantism) come only morbid patients: here the world at large are included. However slight the degree in which they are subject to pity and fear, still, so far as these passions have a hold upon them, they participate, in every-day life, in the same beneficial effect which frees the 'o'er fraught heart' from its accumulation of emotion in critical moments. This is the normal effect of music and upon it attends the constant concomitant of normal activity, pleasure (μεθ' ἡδονῆς).

13 καθ' ὅσον ἐπιβάλλει In proportion to their susceptibility to such emotions. See 1260 a 19, 1261 b 35 n. Bernays p. 88 (188) shows that the principle of the cure of Bacchic delirium (Corybantism) was observed by Plato (Lysis vii. 790 f.), though he never applied it to anything but the nursing of infants. "Aristotle," observes Butcher, "with his generalising faculty and his love of discovering unity in different domains of life, extended the principle to tragedy and hints at even a wider application." However, on the whole the two are violently opposed as to the treatment of emotion, Bernays p. 46 (164) ff.

14 τινα κάθαρσιν This implies that the catharsis is not in all cases precisely of the same kind. The catharsis of pity and fear in tragedy is analogous to, but not identical with, that of 'enthusiasm' or morbid ecstasy. See the note on κάθαρσις p. 641. SUSEM. (1095) κουφίζεσθαι For the medical sense see Probl. iii. 17, 873 b 22 (of the disease): II. 22, 868 a 36, b 6; IV. 30, 880 a 33 (of the patient). Cp. Hippocr. I. 177, III. 715 K. (Döring).

the authorities. Sauppe's emendation τὰ πραδικὰ was adopted in Susem.^{2,3}. See Excursus v. p. 638 f. especially p. 640 n. 1, and generally n. (1088). SUSEM. (1096)

In handling a locus classicus like this, excessive caution is no sin. Yet it must be allowed that the reading of the MSS. leaves the sentence enigmatical. (1) Does it merely emphasize τὰ μέλη as opposed to ἁρμονίαι, a 4? This can hardly be, though apparently Mr Newman thus takes the passage (see the quotation given above after n. 1089). For μέλη are mentioned a 9 f., not to urge with Thurot Études p. 103 that Aristotle as little distinguishes between ἁρμονίαι and μέλη as a modern critic between the keys in which music is written and the compositions themselves, passing naturally from the one to the other, and contrasting them indifferently with ῥυθμοί; see e.g. 6 § 5, 1341 a 1, 7 § 10, 1342 b 5 f. (2) Does it introduce a new species of airs? But surely, those treated in a 4—15 must be καθαδικά. The new species should be πραδικά—of which nothing has been said. Unless indeed any one maintains, as against n. (1089), that the effect of tragedy is alluded to § 5, a 11—15, and this apparently meaningless clause returns to the consideration of music. (3) Or does it introduce a new effect (χαρὰ ἀβλαβῆς) of the music whose cathartic effect has been described in 4—15? If so, the 'harmless delight' would be contrasted with the cathartic effect in which pleasure is blended with, and follows, painful emotions. Zeller p. 774 n. (2) says that music purges the παθητικός, and affords enjoyment to all. Döring p. 260 finds a contrast between (1) the extraordinary, curative effect, κάθαρσις ἀπλῶς, of morbid patients (whether suffering from the malady of Bacchic frenzy, or hypochondriacs through excessive pity and terror), and (2) the normal cathartic effect of ecstatic music heard at concerts under ordinary circumstances. Bernays translated (from Bekker's text): "now in the same manner as other means of catharsis the cathartic melodies procure for men innocent delight. Therefore it must be laid down by law that those who perform the music for the theatre" which is intended to provide innocent delight "should come forward with such modes and melodies." The objection to this is the forced meaning of ὁμοίως. The means of catharsis just mentioned are melodies: where is there a distinct suggestion of any other? Certainly not in ταὐτὸ τοῦτο πάσχειν. Busse moreover op. c. p. 49 accepts the correction πρακτικά.

§ 6 "Hence it is such modes and such melodies that we must prescribe for the virtuosos, who take up music professionally, to employ in their performances. But as there are two types of audience, the one of birth and education, the other the vulgar audience of mechanics and day-labourers and the like, entertainments and competitions must be found to provide even these latter with recreation."

16 τοιαύταις] Namely, καθαριτικαῖς: see Quaest. crit. coll. p. 421 f.

17 θετέον] The construction with the dative would follow more smoothly if χρῆσθαι were supplied, or ἀγωνιζεσθαι in place of ἀγωνιστάς. Still the meaning is clear. In τοὺς...μεταχειριζομένους it is not hard to discover τοὺς αὐτὸ τοῦτο πεποιημένους ἔργον καὶ τέχνην of c. 5 § 6, 1339 a 37. The care shown for the amusements of the lower class of citizens is worthy of Plato and the Republic,

20 ἐκ βαναύσων...συγκείμενος] As an attribute of θεατῆς this is curious. Perhaps we may cite as parallel Cic. De Finibus II. 44, cum Epicuro autem hoc plus negotii est, quod e duplici genere voluptatis coniunctus est, or ad Att. IV. 15. 1, ut est ex me et ex te iunctus Dionysius M. Pomponius.

21 ἀγῶνας καὶ θεωρίας] These musical contests and competitions seem to have excited the keenest interest, and to have led to brilliant pieces of extraordinary difficulty being practised even at school; c. 6 § 7, § 16.

§ 7 "Just as their souls are distorted from their natural state, so too amongst the musical modes there are some perverse forms and amongst melodies the high-strung and falsely coloured, but as its own natural affinity gives every class pleasure, we must allow the artists who perform before such an audience to use the corresponding style of music."

22 ὥσπερ αὐτῶν...23 ἕξεως] Comp. n. (103), and above c. 6 §§ 15, 16, n. (1080). But on the other hand see the praise of the great public as a critic in art III. II. 2, n. (565 b). SUSEM. (1097)

23 καὶ τῶν ἀρμονιῶν παρεκβάσεις] It is not easy to determine with certainty which modes are meant. Perhaps he was thinking of the 'wailing and mournful' music of the mixo-Lydian and high-pitched Lydian principally: it may have been of the 'lax and effeminate' low-pitched Lydian and low-pitched Ionian. See c. 5 § 22, also Exc. IV. n. (1054). SUSEM. (1098)

We have now reached the end of the long digression, §§ 4—7, following on the mention of modes suitable for public performance πρὸς ἀκρόασιν ἐτέρων χειρουργούντων: we have in fact answered the first question of c. 7 § 1 πότερον πάσαις χρηστέον. The connexion of the whole passage, and the best way of meeting the difficulties presented by the text, is discussed Exc. V. p. 638 ff. SUSEM. (1101)

The previous statement (ὥστε ἔχειν μέσως καὶ καθεστηκότες μάλιστα πρὸς ἐτέραν, οἷον δοκεῖ ποιεῖν ἡ δ. μόνη ἁρμονιών) is not quite to the same effect. In one sense it includes more than is found here; cp. n. (1109). What has been pointed out n. (1086) agrees with this. SUSEM. (1102) δέχεσθαι δὲ δεῖ κτλ.] See n. (1086) for a conjecture as to the modes here intended. SUSEM. (1104)

Aristoxenos was at once a pupil of Aristotle's and an ardent musician, while on musical theory his Harmonics and the fragments of his ῥυθμικὰ στοιχεῖα are our highest authority. In Westphal's monumental works, the series Theorie der musischen Künste der Hellenen and the now completed edition Aristoxenos, Metrik und Rhythmik (Leipzig, 1883 and 1893) everything has been done for this author. English readers unacquainted with Westphal's writings may with advantage consult Mr C. F. Abdy Williams' article on 'Ancient Metre' in Classical Review VII. p. 295 ff.

§ 9 Socrates in the Republic is inconsistent: he rejects the flute, but tolerates the Phrygian Mode.

ὁ δ' ἐν τῇ πολιτείᾳ Σ.] This is the normal, explicit manner of referring to Socrates, the character in the dialogue 'The Republic,' and sufficiently accounts for the article in the abbreviated form ὁ Σωκράτης. Cp. n. on II. 1. 3, 1261 a 6.

The passage in Rep. III. 399 A runs thus: ἀλλὰ κινδυνεύει σοι δωριστὶ λείπεσθαι καὶ φρυγιστὶ.  We were told this before of the flute, c. 6 § 9, 1341 a 22 ff., οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ αὐλὸς ἡθικὸν ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον ὀργιαστικόν; it has an intoxicating effect, tending not to form, but to purge, character. The Phrygian Mode again was described as relatively the most maddening and ecstatic, c. 5 § 22.
 The addition of the more general term παθητικά = 'passionate' here is a fresh and striking proof that the ecstatic modes, αἱ ἐνθουσιαστικά ἁρμονίαι, are not restricted to the expression or impression upon others of Ecstasy pure and simple. On the contrary, like the flute amongst musical instruments, they are adapted generally to portray and call up all emotions, or at least all painful emotions:—in the words of the text, 'all Bacchic frenzy and similar mental excitement.' Comp. Exc.

n. (1096) p. 643. SUSEM. (1107)

§ 10 Poetry shows this. When the subject is wild and delirious, as in a dithyramb, the music is set for the flute and the airs are in the Phrygian Mode.
 The cogency of this illustration depends on the fact, which must always be borne in mind, that the Greek poet set his own words to music (precisely as in the Wagnerian opera): he also chose his own dance measures.

9 Φιλόξενος] Of Cythera, born 459
 B.C., one of the most famous of the dithyrambic poets. He lived for some time at the court of the elder Dionysius, who imprisoned him in the stone quarries of Syracuse, where (according to one account) he wrote his most noted dithyramb Κύκλωψ. When brought out to listen to Dionysius' own compositions, he is said to have addressed the attendants in the words Εἰς λατομίας, "Take me back to the quarries." See further respecting

14 ἔτι δὲ ἐπεὶ τὸ μέσον κτλ.] See VI (IV). 11. 4, 1295 b 3 f., ὁμολογεῖται τὸ μέτριον ἄριστον καὶ τὸ μέσον, n. (1290 b). SUSEM. (1110)

15 ἡ δὲ δωριστὶ κτλ.] I.e. the Dorian melodies are principally of a middle compass. In contrast to this, melodies composed in the 'high-strung' (σύντονοι) and low-pitched (ἀνεμέναι, χαλαραὶ) modes diverged from the middle compass to the higher and lower parts of the register respectively. This is explained in Excursus III. n. (1054) p. 625. SUSEM. (1111)

§ 13 18 σκοποί] πρὸς οὓς ποιοῦνται τὸ τέλος, 1341 b 15. That the choice of melodies must be regulated by what is practicable and what is becoming (sc. for the age and voice of the performers) is a truism, whoever enunciates it, see c. 6 § 3, n.

20 ἔστι δὲ καὶ ταῦτα κτλ.] "But these conditions (viz. what is practicable and what is becoming) are defined by the age of the performers. For instance, it is not easy for those who are old and feeble to sing in the high-strung modes: nature suggests the low-pitched modes at their age."

21 διὰ χρόνου] Διὰ c. gen. means (1) "after the lapse of some time" as in III. I. 6, 1275 a 25, and VI(IV). 15. 1, 1299 a 6, οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἐξαμήνους, οἱ δὲ δι' ἐκάττους ποιοῦσι τὰς ἀρχάς. So in Rhet. I. 11. 20, 1371 a 29 f., σπάνιον τὸ διὰ χρόνου, a thing seen after an interval, an occasional enjoyment. Hence the distributive sense of διὰ τρίτου ἔτους 546 b 10, διὰ τρίτης (ἡμέρας) 594 b 21. (2) In διὰ βίου (4 times, cp. διὰ τινος χρ. 1272 b 13) it implies duration. With the accusative (as P⁵⁻⁶ Π³ see Crit. n.) the sense is causal: those who fail by reason of age. This reading avoids the hiatus, which is in its favour. But the causal sense with gen. is admitted by Eucken p. 38, Hagfors p. 46: cp. 1337 a 36 (?), 1316 b 14 (αἰτιῶν δι' ὧν).

§§ 13—15 17 εἰσὶ δὲ... 34 πρέπον]
 That this close of the chapter is a foreign addition is indicated by the square brackets, and must be admitted unless we choose to believe that Aristotle would again partially introduce by a side-wind the musical modes which he has already openly banished from education. Aristotle recommends Dorian melodies for the instruction of the young on account of their middle compass: all other modes,
 'the most ethical' alone excepted, are excluded: also, he expressly warns us against any education for amusement, c. 5 § 4. He distinctly forbids adults to sing or play, c. 6 § 4, and consequently restricts the introduction of 'practical' (πρακτικά) or 'ecstatic' Modes, as well as the less 'ethical' Modes, see n. (1087),

 to performances at which the citizens are auditors. The author of this addition, on the other hand, is anxious that the youth should also learn to sing in modes which, from the low compass of the melodies, are least suited to them and best adapted to be actually sung in riper age.
 Now it is no doubt true that these low-pitched modes do not belong either to the 'practical' (πρακτικά) or to the 'ecstatic' but to the 'ethical' class and appear to constitute the less ethical; see nn. (1054, 1087). It is further true that Aristotle allows the citizens of his ideal state an occasional banquet for relaxation and recreation, IV(VII). 17. 11, cp. n.
 (966), and at such times probably also permits them the exceptional privilege of singing (see c. 5 § 8 with nn. 1028, 1067).
 It is true that the description of the low-pitched keys here given (ἀπειρηκυίας) points, like Plato's Rep. 398 E, see n.
 (1112), to the appositeness of their employment on such occasions. Finally it cannot be denied that the idea of learning something in youth, which may afford amusement in later life, is not wrong in itself (c. 4 §§ 5—7), though in the present instance inadmissible, because for mere amusement it is not necessary to learn to sing and play yourself, when you can get others to perform to you, c. 5 § 8: cp. iii. (1024, 1025, 1036). However, this is quite enough to condemn the proposed instruction of boys in melodies to be hereafter sung at drinking parties. Aristotle would have been much more concerned to practise the young in the 'practical' (πρακτικά) and ecstatic melodies, in order to educate their taste for the end of the highest intellectual enjoyment. But he obviously thought: teach a boy to sing and play minor tunes, and amid the mirth and gaiety of a banquet he will surely, if so inclined, be able to sing melodies in the major modes, and appreciate them at musical performances intended for true aesthetic enjoyment.

And now let us consider for one moment the illogical sequence of the whole passage. The introduction: "but in musical instruction, as in all else, we should keep in view what is practicable and what is fitting" stands in no conceivable logical connexion with what precedes. Has the previous restriction of musical teaching to the Dorian and the related Modes any other object except to secure for the young what is practicable and fitting, because suited to their capacity? Even the casual remark at the close, 1342 b 14 ff., that just on account of its middle compass the Dorian Mode is specially adapted to induce moral virtue, which is a mean between two extremes (see n. 1111), is directed simply to what is fitting. This the interpolator has failed to recognize, for he brings in the Mean as a third aim, different from the possible and the fitting. He has not then perceived that the medium compass of the Dorian Mode is only a secondary reason and not the sole reason for preferring it. Starting from the strangely perverse notion that this was the only reason, he felt bound to assign some part to propriety and the possible, and so he goes on to remark that not only the possible but also the fitting is determined by gradations of age, a mere truism as regards the latter point, since the interpolator has expressly stated that by what is fitting for youth he understands (κόσμος ἅμα καὶ παιδεία) grace (decorum) and moral culture. But, first, a word as to possibility or capacity. It might have been thought that according to this standard boys should be taught to sing in the modes best adapted to their age from the compass of the melodies. Instead of this exactly the opposite inference is drawn, that they require further instruction in those modes which are better adapted, or only adapted, to older people. Secondly, from the point of view of what is becoming for boys the Lydian Mode is especially recommended:—just as though Aristotle had not himself prescribed the Dorian Mode from the same point of view as almost the only one permissible. Had he intended to assign to the Lydian Mode a special place beside or next to the Dorian, he would have found an opportunity in § 8, 1342 a 30, instead of merely referring to the decision of professional musicians, who are at the same time philosophers, the question what modes, other than the Dorian, may be employed in the education of the young. As we shall see in Exc. IV, Aristotle himself probably did not reckon the Lydian among the ethical modes at all, but among the πρακτικά. The distinction made by the interpolator between outward decorum and inner moral culture, κόσμον ἔχειν καὶ παιδεύειν, cannot appear genuinely Aristotelian to any reader of the Ethics, for in Aristotle's view the man of moral virtue and he alone behaves with outward propriety, and the habit of behaving thus even counts among the moral virtues: see Nic. Eth. IV. cc. 6—8 (12—14 Bekker). And is not decorum just as fitting for adults as for children? Or has κόσμος a different meaning from decorum? A further error of the writer is apparent from a lacuna in the text where even the sense cannot be supplied. The ἡ preserved in two MSS. would seem to indicate (a) that he had discovered something else besides propriety and moral culture, which is more suitable to children than to adults, and had smuggled in a new mode to serve this purpose: or else (b) this η marks the transition from the possible and fitting to the Mean, τὸ μέσον, which, as well as τὸ δυνατόν and τὸ πρέπον, is the subject of the last sentence with its mutilated commencement. In short, though in this book Aristotle has often been inconsistent and obscure, has fallen into apparent or perhaps actual contradictions, as may be seen from notes (993, 1000, 1003, 1015, 1024, 1027, 1038, 1041, 1042, 1043, 1045, 1059, 1062, 1067, 1079, 1094, 1096, 1098, 1101, 1102, 1104, 1105, 1109), yet all this goes beyond anything we can attribute to Aristotle himself. Indeed it would be paying the writer too high a compliment to look for him in the ranks of Aristotle's immediate pupils. He would seem to have been a Peripatetic of a later date. SUSEM. (1113)

EXCURSUS I.

ARISTOTLE'S SCHEME OF EDUCATION.

ὅτι μὲν οὖν χρηστέον τῇ γυμναστικῇ, καὶ πῶς χρηστέον, ὁμολογούμενόν ἐστιν (μέχρι μὲν γὰρ ἥβης κουφότερα γυμνάσια προσοιστέον)...ὅταν δ' ἀφ' ἥβης ἔτη τρία πρὸς τοῖς ἄλλοις μαθήμασι γένωνται, τότε ἀρμόττει καὶ τοῖς πόνοις καὶ ταῖς ἀναγ-κοφαγαῖς καταλαμβάνειν τὴν ἐχομένην ἡλικίαν. V(VIII). c. 4 §§ 7—9, 1338 b 39—41, 1339 a 4—7.

This passage furnishes most of the scanty information we gain respecting the education of the citizens as a whole. Aristotle distinctly states that gymnastic training must come first, c. 3 § 13, 1338 b 5 f. u. (1003). He makes the first easy course of gymnastics to extend from the seventh year, IV(VII). 17. 15, to the age of puberty; gives the next three years, from 14 to 17, to the remaining subjects of education, and then appoints a stricter course of military drill lasting to the twenty-first year, to fit the youth for service in the army. This arrangement differs materially from that of Plato, u. (970), in the longer period assigned to gymnastics as compared with the other subjects to be learnt. On the other hand, it has been shown in the Introd. p. 51, from a comparison of c. 3 § 10, 1338 a 31—34, with c. 5 § 4, 1339 a 29 f., u. (1024) that a higher scientific training was intended to follow, as in Plato's scheme, after the twenty-first year, especially in the principal subjects, most probably in pure and applied mathematics and finally in philosophy (παιδεία ἐλευθέριος καὶ καλῇ). These are the higher sciences (τὰ περιττά) mentioned c. 2 § 2, 1337 a 42, u. (979), of which it is not true, as it is of other studies (or at any rate, most other studies, including even proficiency in gymnastics and music; see c. 2 § 5, u. 982) that, while not in themselves derogatory to a free man, they cannot be carried beyond a certain point without risk of βαναυσία.

Aristotle's ideal state is not therefore, like Plato's Republic, in the last resort a preparation for another world, for he ignores individual immortality. It is quite as much a school of intellectual study as of morality: it is in the former aspect that its highest end is attained, cp. Introd. p. 48 f. But in the sequel wherever the word παιδεία is employed, c. 5 § 9, 1339 b 12, c. 6 § 7, 1341 a 13, § 9, 1341 a 18, 20, c. 7 § 1 ff., 1341 b 25, 29, 38, 1342 a 3, 28, 32 etc., it almost always denotes the early training, in the narrower sense of the term, before the twenty-first year (even μάθησις is so used c. 6 § 9, 1341 a 23), and hence that development of character of which the young are susceptible as they grow up, viz. the acquisition of moral habits, rather than that development of reason and the understanding which is only attainable at a ripe age by instruction, experience, or personal reflection and inquiry. Nevertheless a certain tendency in this direction is clearly inseparable from the formation of character in the young, since without it even moral habits could not be acquired: see n. (1045). But Aristotle distinctly regards the speculative enjoyment, the aesthetic contemplation of the beautiful creations of imitative art as one factor in that highest intellectual gratification which in his judgment constitutes the true end of life and the height of human happiness. The question arises then: Would he have prohibited the citizens of his ideal state from engaging in the creation of such works of art? That instrumental performers and solo-singers living by the practice of their art, indeed all professional musicians, would have been classed with τεχνῖται or paid professionals would be quite certain even if we had not his repeated assurances to this effect, c. 5 § 8, c. 6 §§ 4—8, 15, 16. Actors he would doubtless have treated in the same way, especially as in Greece they were all trained to dance and sing on the stage in solo parts. Nor would he have been likely to show more consideration to the rhapsodists. Even for the purposes of singing and dancing in the dramatic, as in most of the lyric choruses, some sort of professional training was required; while the leader of the chorus was certainly obliged to be a skilful solo singer. The prohibition to practise music in later life c. 6 § 4, 1340 b 37 ff., n. (1067) sounds so uncompromising that even the equally precise statement, “no well-bred gentleman ever sings or plays, unless it be over his wine or for a jest” (καὶ τὸ πράττειν οὐκ ἀνδρὸς μὴ μεθύοντος ἢ παίζοντος, c. 5 § 8, 1339 b 9, n. 1029), barely justifies the inference that on exceptional festive occasions this prohibition ceases to apply. Of any further concession, permitting the citizens to sing in the lighter lyric choruses, no trace can be found. For all these arts, then, only strangers, aliens, and freedmen are available in the ideal state. Even creative artists, who live by their art, and similarly, no doubt, writers of comedies, farces, and the like, cannot be conceived as occupying a different position. But we need not hence infer that Aristotle would have objected to see amongst his citizens such masters of sculpture and painting as Polygnotus (c. 5 § 7), Pheidias and Polycletus (Nic. Eth. vi. 7. 1, 1141 a 10 ff.); or such tragic poets as Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, and Theodectes. Very possibly he may have hoped that his educational course would prove exactly fitted to produce just such men in his state, men who like the rest of his citizens are of course in easy circumstances, obliged, and at the same time competent, to renounce all thought of a return for their art in money or money's worth. “It is inconceivable,” remarks Bradley, Hellenica p. 214 n., “that Aristotle, with his high view of art, should have considered his account of βαναυσία applicable to Phidias; but probably the following typically antique passage would not have sounded so strange to him as it does to modern ears: ‘If a man applies himself to servile or mechanical employments his industry in these things is a proof of his inattention to nobler studies’: καὶ οὐδεὶς εὐφρῆς νέος ἢ τὸν ἐν Πίσῃ θεασάμενος Δία γενέσθαι Φειδίας ἐπεθύμησεν ἢ τὴν Ἥραν τὴν ἐν Ἀργεὶ Πολύκλειτος, οὐδ’ Ἀνακρέων ἢ Φιλῆτας ἢ Ἀρχίλοχος ἢ σθεῖς αὐτῶν τοῖς ποιήμασιν: Plutarch, Vita Periclis c. 2, p. 153 A.” SUSEM. THE COMPOSITIONS OF OLYMPUS.

τῶν Ὀλύμπου μελῶν ταῦτα γὰρ ὁμολογουμένως ποιεῖ τὰς ψυχὰς ἐνθουσιαστικὰς, V(VIII). c. 5 § 16, 1340 a 9 f. Cp. ἐκ τῶν δ' ἱερῶν μελῶν ὀρώμεν τούτους, ὅταν χρῆσωνται τοῖς ἐξοργιάζουσι τὴν ψυχὴν μέλεσι, καθισταμένους ὥσπερ ἱατρείας τυχόντας καὶ καθάρσεως, c. 7 § 4, 1342 a 8—11.

Olympus, like Musaeus n. (1034), is not an historical character, but personifies in legend the earliest development amongst the Greeks, principally under Phrygian influence, of instrumental music for the flute: see Exc. IV. n. (1078). For apparently all the pieces ascribed to him which were preserved until Aristotle's times and later were purely instrumental compositions for the flute (see Bergk *Poet. Lyr.*⁴ p. 809 f.) or nothing but αὐλητικοὶ νόμοι, as they were called; cp. n. (17) to my edition of the Politics. Some of them were older than any other pieces of music, instrumental or vocal, then extant (Glaucus apud Plutarch. De Musica 5, 1132 E, F)¹, and on this account Olympus was regarded among the Greeks as the originator of artistic music: Plut. op. c. 29, 1141 B, Aristox. apud Plutarch. op. c. 11, 1135 B: cp. Glauc. l. c. But others were of later date than Terpander, and even than Thaletas², see nn. (419, 788). Musical connoisseurs in antiquity, such as the tragic poet Pratinas, who easily recognized the difference, made an attempt to distinguish an older from a younger Olympus, the latter a descendant of the former, and to ascribe to the younger those νόμοι of Olympus which exhibited a more advanced artistic development, for example, a νόμος πολυκέφαλος, so called from the number of its preludes. Others went further and invented a pupil of this younger Olympus, Crates by name, to whom they assigned the authorship of the πολυκέφαλος. Another of these airs (νόμοι), called ἀρμάτιος, of far older date, was admitted by all the critics to be the work of the earlier Olympus: see Plut. l. c. 7, 1133 D ff. Besides these we know of an air composed in the Phrygian Mode (see Exc. IV) in honour of Athene, called ὄρθιος, the prelude to which was in different time from the body of the air (Dio Chrys. I. ad init., Aristox. apud Plutarch. op. c. 33, 1143 B; cp. Plat. Crat. 417 E), another in honour of Ares (Plut. op. c. 29, 1141 B), a dirge upon Python, the earliest composition in the Lydian Mode (Aristox. apud Plutarch. 15, 1136 C), also compositions in honour of Cybele called μητρῷοι (Plut. l. c. 29, 1141 B, Aristox. apud Plutarch. op. c. 19, 1137 D).

¹ The reference to the oldest flute-players can only apply to Olympus and his school. There can be no doubt that, as Bergk and Westphal agree, αὐλητικὴν and αὐλητικῶν should be read in this passage, instead of αὐλωδίαν and αὐλωδικῶν.

² For the introduction of the paeonian or cretic rhythm into artistic music is rightly ascribed to Thaletas, and in the prelude to the air in honour of Athene ascribed to Olympus this rhythm occurs.

As to the strange effect of these musical compositions, Plato says much the same thing, that they possessed a specially overpowering and extravagantly exciting character, and discovered such as feel a longing desire for the gods and their worship¹. Undoubtedly such airs and, in particular, those of them composed in the ecstatic Phrygian Mode (see Exc. IV. p. 628 and n. 1107), are the 'sacred melodies' from which Aristotle c. 7 § 4, n. (1090), demonstrates the purifying effect of music in its most original form, since through the ecstasy which these airs awaken morbid ecstasy is expelled. This homoeopathic purgation from excitement is present to Aristotle's mind here, though all he alludes to is the arousing of the ecstasy by which it is effected. All the more noteworthy, then, is the inference here from this well known purgative (cathartic) effect of music to the possibility of a moral effect. However carefully they are distinguished (c. 6 § 9, 1341 a 21 f., c. 7 § 3 ff.), these two kinds of influence must have much in common. SUSEM. (1042)

EXCURSUS III.

ETHOS OR CHARACTER.

ὁ δ' ἐνθουσιασμός τοῦ περὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ἥθους πάθος ἐστίν, V(VIII). c. 5 § 16, 1340 a 11 f.

Döring Kunstlehre des Aristoteles p. 335 ff. (Philologus xxvii. p. 705 ff.) has proved that in this passage, as well as in c. 2 § 1, 1337 a 39, n. (977), and elsewhere, the expression 'character of the soul,' τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς (or τὸ περὶ τὴν ψυχὴν) ἥθος, or 'character' only, must be taken to mean not the more or less fixed special state of a man in regard to moral virtue and vice generally, or to this or that virtue and vice in particular, and hence in regard to his relation to the emotions, but the moral nature² itself, the seat of desire and mental emotion, as the subject of the particular state in question: cp. nn. (40, 641, 786, 935, 790). But two things make it impossible to accept this explanation without modification. In the first place, if we look more closely, n. (1022), it appears that this 'orectic' soul is also that within us by which we feel every kind of pain or pleasure, so that the influence of music upon the character in this sense might equally be said to consist in the recreative pleasure with which music tickles the ear. In the second place, the inference that "because music undoubtedly calls forth the primary emotion of ecstasy, it must therefore affect that part of the soul which is the seat of the emotions as well as of the moral virtues and vices" is quite sound, but does not in the least prove what Aristotle is anxious here to prove, namely, that music can

αντος. τὰ οὖν ἐκείνου ἑάν τε ἀγαθὸς αὐλητὴς αὐλῇ ἑάν τε φαῦλη αὐλητὴς, μόνῃ κατέχεσθαι ποιεῖ καὶ δηλοῖ τοὺς τῶν θεῶν τε καὶ τελετῶν δεομένους διὰ τὸ θεῖα εἶναι.

² τὸ δρεκτικόν, the 'orectic' soul.

be employed in the acquisition of the aptitudes or formed states (ἔξεις) called moral virtues. 'Influence upon the character' means here nothing more than the process of acquiring—or more correctly, assistance in the process of acquiring—those formed states, as is plain from the whole context, while it is also expressly laid down in the explanation that this influence makes us 'attain this or that distinctive state in respect of character'¹ through the intervention of music (cp. Poet. 6 § 12 f., 1450 a 19 f.)². Thus the phrase 'character,' or 'character of the soul,' cannot mean that part of the soul in itself but only (1) in so far as it already possesses those excellences or their opposites in the form of natural aptitudes, or favourable dispositions towards this or that virtue, or emotion, or their opposites,—φυσικαὶ ἔξεις, φυσικαὶ ἀρεταὶ (καὶ κακίαι) as Aristotle calls them, N.E. VI. 13. 1 f., 1144 a 1—14 (cp. above Pol. IV[VII]. 13. 11, n. 888), and (2) in so far as it already is gradually acquiring this or that moral virtue or its opposite, as they are concerned not simply with actions, πράξεις, but with emotional excitements or feelings (πάθη, N.E. II. 6. 10, 1106 b 16 ff.). From this it is apparent that the growth of moral 'habit' may be fostered by excitement of the feelings, and hence that the real inference to draw is this: "because music can undoubtedly call forth feelings, at least in the case of ecstasy, it must probably, if not necessarily, be capable of being employed to foster moral habits." Thus, according to Aristotle, emotion as a passive excitement belongs to the irrational soul just so far as the soul is capable of receiving, and does receive, a character, and can itself be called 'character' precisely as a man of bad, or strong, or brave, or just, or temperate character is said to be himself such a character. Even love and hatred are but emotions, and yet, as Aristotle immediately says, cp. nn. (1022, 1044), all moral action is based upon love of good and hatred of evil. Take such a passage as Döring quotes from Rhet. II. 9. 1, 1386 b 12 ff., § 5, b 33 ff., to the effect that certain emotions belong only to a good, and others only to a bad character³: the simple consideration that courage is an emotion of the brave man and fear of the coward shows most plainly that Döring's explanation requires to be modified. It is only in this way that we can understand why Aristotle c. 5 § 18, cp. n. (1047), ranks the emotions, e.g. anger, among peculiarities of character (ἡθικά) side by side with the moral virtues, e.g. meekness, courage, temperance, and even proceeds to call these peculiarities of character §§ 20—22, cp. n. (1048) themselves characters (ἡθῆ), whilst in other places, such as c. 7 §§ 3—11, Poet. I. 6, 1447 a 27 f., cp. n. (1084), he holds fast by the difference so commonly recognized among the Greeks between emotion (πάθος),

² εἰσι δὲ κατὰ μὲν τὰ ἡθῆ ποιοὶ τινες, κατὰ δὲ τὰς πράξεις εὐδαίμονες ἢ τοῦναντίον οὐκ οὖν ὅπως τὰ ἡθῆ μιμῶσονται πράττουσιν, ἀλλὰ τὰ ἡθῆ συμπαραλαμβάνουσι διὰ τὰς πράξεις.

³ καὶ ἀμφω τὰ πάθη (sc. ἐλαεῖν καὶ νεμεσᾶν) ἡθους χρηστοῦ. [Döring argues thus: πάθη are in this and other passages ascribed to ἡθος, but Nic. Eth. II.

5. 1, 1105 b 20, πάθη are said to be ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ, while from Rhet. II. 12. 1, 1388 b 30, we gather that ἡθος (like ψυχή) includes more under it than πάθη only. Hence he considers himself justified in equating ἡθος with ψυχή ὀρεκτική, and would explain Pol. V(VIII). 5. 16, 1340 a 6, as a case where the more special term ἡθος is combined with the more general term ψυχή.]

in the sense of a passing burst of feeling, and character (ἦθος) in the sense of a permanent moral state, which is the fixed and standing temperament of each man, composed of the various moral virtues and vices specially belonging to that particular individual. Döring p. 156 f. from his own line of thought finds this strange and cannot refrain from attempting to whittle away the meaning by forced ingenuity. Even at the end of § 21, cp. n. (1052), an artist 'full of character' (ἡθικός) does not mean a sculptor or painter who depicts emotions, but one who depicts characters in this narrower sense, who indeed, to speak still more accurately, represents noble characters, no matter whether in a state of emotion or free from emotion. Even the separate moral virtues are called 'characters' Nic. Eth. VI. 13. 1, 1144 b 4, or as we should say 'qualities of character.' The expression τοῦ περὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ἦθους πάθος 'an emotion of the character of the soul' = ὁ πάσχει τὸ περὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ἦθος, suggests the radical meaning of πάθος 'suffering.' SUSEM. (1043)

ἐν δὲ τοῖς μέλεσιν αὐτοῖς ἔστι μιμήματα τῶν ἡθῶν (καὶ τοῦτ' ἐστὶ φανερόν· εὐθὺς γὰρ ᾧ τῶν ἀρμονιῶν διέστηκε φύσις, ὥστε ἀκούοντας ἄλλως διατίθεσθαι καὶ μὴ τὸν αὐτὸν ἔχειν τρόπον πρὸς ἐκάστην αὐτῶν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς μὲν ἐνίας ὀδυρτικωτέρως καὶ συνεστηκώτως μᾶλλον, οἷον πρὸς τὴν μιξολυδιστὶ καλουμένην, πρὸς δὲ τὰς μαλακωτέρως τὴν διάνοιαν, οἷον πρὸς τὰς ἀνειμένας, μέσως δὲ καὶ καθεστηκώτως μάλιστα πρὸς ἑτέραν, οἷον δοκεῖ ποιεῖν ἡ δωριστὶ μόνη τῶν ἀρμονιῶν, ἐνθουσιαστικούς δ' ἡ φρυγιστὶ.....) c. 5 §§ 21, 22, 1340 a 38—b 5.

"Melodies, on the other hand, give us substantive imitations of character. This is manifest. The temper of the several musical modes is so essentially distinct that the hearers are affected with a corresponding variety of mood. Some, such as the semi-Lydian, tend to wrap the spirit in grief and gloom; others, the luxurious relaxed modes, touch it to a softer ease; the Dorian seems alone in producing a sober and sedate frame of mind; the Phrygian kindles enthusiasm."¹

We feel a similar difference in the impression made upon us by the major and minor keys, the only two species of keys we possess, which differ from each other in having a major and minor third respectively. In the scale without signature we take as key-notes only A (la) and C (ut)², and so obtain A minor and C major scales. But the Greeks must have taken every other note of the octave in turn for key-note; so that they obtained seven Modes, i.e. 'Harmonies' (ἁρμονίαι), or 'Species of Octaves' (εἶδη τῶν τοῦ διὰ πασῶν)¹, as they were called by the school of Aristoxenus and by Ptolemy:—

[² Do is often used instead of ut.]

- (1) BC D EF G a b², Mixolydian;
- (2) C D EF G a bc³, Lydian;
- (3) D EF G a bc d , Phrygian;
- (4) EF G a bc d e , Dorian;
- (5) F G a bc d ef , Hypolydian;
- (6) G a bc d ef g , Ionian;
- (7) A BC D EF G a, Aeolian.

The Aeolian Mode was by later writers on the theory of music called Hypodorian (Heracleid. apud Ath. XIV. 624 E), and what they called Hypophrygian was to all appearance the same as Ionian. In this way there only remain three distinct names of Modes, Dorian, Lydian, Phrygian, and the Modes similarly designated Hypodorian, Hypolydian, Hypophrygian stand in exactly the same relation to the former three; the Hypodorian and the Dorian, the Hypolydian and the Lydian, the Hypophrygian and the Phrygian Modes are respectively the same, only with this difference that in each case a melody in the first named mode ends on the key-note (tonic) whilst in the last named it ends on the fifth (dominant). The first way of ending is usual with us, the latter an unusual exception, but among the Greeks on the contrary the latter was the normal ending, the former being considered subsidiary as is shown by the "hypo-," and it is therefore clear that the Lydian Mode, though it closely resembles our Major, yet by no means coincides with it. Lastly, the Mixolydian Mode according to Westphal⁴ and Gevaert⁵ was a Phrygian or Ionian ending on the third, and corresponding to it there was also a 'high-strung' Lydian, a second mode in A besides the Aeolian. We are not told whether the Dorian or Aeolian Mode was also modified in this way, which would have given rise to a second mode in C; Westphal thinks it possible that a Boeotian Mode mentioned in the scholia on Aristoph. Eg. 985 may be the one in question. Compositions of this kind must at any rate have been produced very seldom. The terms high-strung (σύντρονοι) and low-pitched (ἀνειμέναι) are only applied to the Lydian and Ionian, and if this is all correct, neither Hypolydian nor Mixolydian can have been the original designations for the modes of those names,

¹ Also called τόνοι, but improperly so, because that is the word used for transposition-scales. [The word species itself is used in Dict. of Antiquities, Art. 'MUSIC,' for ἁρμονία or εἶδος τῶν τοῦ διὰ πασῶν: for τόνος the writer uses 'key.' As to 'key-note' see n. p. 637 f.]

for an interval of a semitone they are closer together.

but the first must have been called low-pitched Lydian, the second high-pitched Ionian, and as contrasted with the latter that which is known as the Ionic Mode would be low-pitched Ionian, although according to the analogy of the Lydian the names high Phrygian and low Phrygian would be expected to be applied to these two modes. The number of modes will thus be raised from seven to eight at least, and a further one must be added, a third mode in A, the Locrian (Pseudo-Eucl. Harm. p. 18, Bacch. p. 19, Gaudent. p. 20 Meib.), which was invented by Xenocritus of Locri (Callim. in Schol. Pind. Ol. XI. 117) about the time of Thaletas (see n. 419), commonly employed in the time of Simonides and Pindar, but afterwards fell out of use (Heracleid. in Ath. XIV. 625 E). As Gaudentius expressly states that the seventh species of octave admitted of a twofold division, according as either the fifth (as is the case with the Aeolian or Hypodorian Mode) or the fourth is to be taken for the closing note, no doubt this second case represents the Locrian Mode. To the question, why the Mixolydian received that name, though it is a species of the Phrygian, Gevaert replies p. 188 ff., that, as the ancients observed (Plut. De Mus. 16, 1136 E), it was the counterpart of the low-pitched Lydian, since the sequence of intervals in the one is exactly contrary to that in the other, the Mixolydian scale having a sequence of a half tone, two whole tones, a half tone and three whole tones descending, the Hypolydian the same sequence in ascending :

BC	D	EF	G	A	b,	Mixolydian (ascending)
b	A	G	FE	D	CB,	Mixolydian (descending)
F	G	a	bc	d	ef,	Hypolydian (ascending), and moreover, because in these two modes alone only a single division into the fourth and fifth is possible in the ascending scale, viz., in the Mixolydian into the fourth and fifth, in the Hypolydian reversely into the fifth and fourth, because in the former the first fifth, ascending B to F, is diminished, and in the latter the first fourth, F to b, is augmented :

		Fourth		Fifth
	BC	D	EF	G	A	b, Mixolydian ;
diminished			Fifth
		Fifth		Fourth
	F	G	a	bc	d	ef, Hypolydian ;
augmented			Fourth

To this must be added the fact that the Mixolydian Mode ends the melody with the third, in common (not indeed with the low-pitched Lydian, but) with the 'highly strung' Lydian, and this, says Gevaert, appears to have been the really decisive analogy in the eyes of the ancients, for Plato (Rep. III. 398 E) says both these keys convey an impression of wailing and lamentation. Lastly in regard to the terms σύντροποι 'highly strung' and ἀνειμέναι 'relaxed,' which in strictness can only mean raised and lowered in pitch (since the tightening of the string produces a higher note), Gevaert (p. 175) proposes to explain them by saying that the high-pitched Lydian and the high-pitched Ionian or Mixolydian melodies seem to have principally employed the higher part of their compass and to have gone in this direction beyond their proper octave. In the case of the low-pitched modes, the Hypolydian and Ionian, the opposite would have to be proved, and Gevaert might have supported his theory by the statement made in c. 7 § 13 f., though not by Aristotle (see n. 1113), that men advanced in life could not manage the high-strung keys, but found the low-pitched ones naturally more suitable to them. But putting aside the Locrian Mode and the points in this explanation most liable to be disputed, viz.—whether the Hypolydian and low-pitched Lydian Modes, the Hypophrygian or Ionian and the low-pitched Ionian¹, the Mixolydian and the high-pitched Ionian are in each case one and the same, and whether the last together with the high-pitched Lydian Mode really differed

¹ That this cannot have been the case will be seen below. Still less can I agree in the views of another expert who has investigated this subject, C. v. Jan Die Tonarten bei Platon im dritten Buch der Republik, Jahrb. für Philol. xc. v. 1867, p. 815 sqq. According to him the high-strung and low-pitched Lydian are considered to be the two subdivisions of the Lydian as distinguished from the Hypolydian, just as the high-strung and low-pitched Ionian are subdivisions of the Ionian. Jan thinks that to obtain an Aeolian octave from the fundamental Dorian octave, ef g a bc d e, all that was necessary was to tune the second string (παρὰπύρην) half a tone higher (f♯); to obtain a Phrygian it would be necessary also to tune the sixth half a tone higher (c♯); for a Lydian you might either raise four strings (f♯, g♯, c♯, d♯) or lower three (e♭, a♭, b♭); and for an Ionian

there was a similar choice between raising three (f♯, g♯, c♯) or lowering four strings (e♭, a♭, b♭, d♭). A double method was similarly possible for obtaining a Mixolydian scale, either by raising six notes (e♯, f♯, g♯, a♯, c♯, d♯) or lowering b (παρὰπύρην) to b♭, but only the first was called Mixolydian, and it cannot be decided how this came about. The Hypolydian, he thinks, could be derived in both ways, but had originally no special name, because it was not readily capable of practical employment owing to the augmented fourth f b. (In this assertion Jan has omitted to consider the fact that this mode occurs frequently in the ecclesiastical music of the middle ages, also in a Swedish national air still current at the present day, indeed Beethoven has composed a Canzonetta in this mode; see Gevaert, pp. 137 f., 172, 175.)

The reason why I have not been convinced by this explanation, which has been carefully thought out, may be gathered from my exposition generally and the more detailed account of Gevaert, the main outlines of which I have reproduced, with the necessary reservations where I could not concur. Still in view of the difficulty of the subject I did not wish to withhold Jan's opinion from the reader. [See further Jan's article 'Musik' in Baumeister's Denkmäler II. 974—983.]

from the rest by ending on the third¹, this much is certain that there are only three main distinctive names, applied in the nomenclature of the Greek Modes, Dorian, Phrygian and Lydian, and that we must consequently assume only three fundamental Modes corresponding to them, the difference between them and the Hypodorian, Hypophrygian, and Hypolydian respectively being no doubt that discovered by Westphal and stated above. With this explanation best agrees the fact that originally Hypodorian was called 'Aeolian' and Hypophrygian 'Ionian.' For we must credit Plato's statement (Lach. 188 D), that the Dorian Mode was the only original and national one, if we include under this name the Aeolian Mode, which Plato Repub. l.c. omits to enumerate among the modes, because no doubt he regards it as forming one and the same mode with the Dorian. It is very characteristic that, on this supposition, the original key of the Greeks was a sort of Minor differing from our Minor in not having the sixth and seventh sharpened in the ascending scale :

A B C D E F G a=Aeolian;

A B C D E F# G#a=our A minor;

whilst in the descending scale the modern Minor agrees entirely with the Aeolian. This is in accordance with the description given by the ancients of the simple, calm, and manly character (ἡθως) of the Dorian Mode which, ending as it does on the fifth, would be least suitable for modern polyphonus music though it really furnishes the clearest and most distinctive harmonic relations, whilst the Aeolian as a Minor and the Lydian as a Major approach most closely to the spirit of modern music. This is also shown in the attempts of the ancients to describe the different impressions conveyed by the Aeolian and the Dorian. The Locrian too was of course a Minor. In addition to the original Dorian and Aeolian Modes of the Greeks two new ones were introduced from Asia Minor, the Phrygian or Ionian and the Lydian, in company with the wind instruments which had their origin there (see iii. 1042, 1078)². It can be easily understood that the Phrygian was also called the Ionian after the Ionians of Asia Minor who first adopted it, and that then the two names were used to distinguish the principal Mode and the subordinate Mode. These two new ἀρμονίαι, the Phrygian and Lydian, were of the nature of our Major Keys, the latter an augmented Major, so to speak, the former an undeveloped Major: the latter had a flat too few or a sharp too many, the former exactly the opposite; the Lydian had an augmented or tritone fourth, the Phrygian a diminished seventh :

F G a bc d ef =Hypolydian;

F G ab^b c d ef =F Major;

G a bc d ef g=Ionian (Hypophrygian);

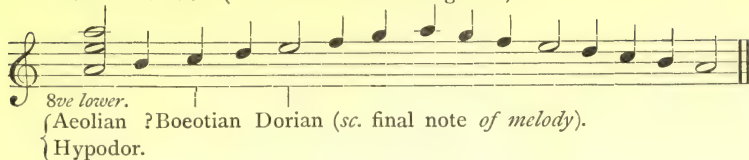

G a bc d e f#g =G Major.

² We hear even of a Phrygian tetrachord, d ef g, and a Lydian tetrachord, c d ef, side by side with the Dorian tetrachord ef g a. See Helmholtz Lehre der Tonempfindungen p. 405 [Eng. tr. by A. J. Ellis].

DORIAN GROUP (minor with no leading-note).

Modern A minor.

PHRYGIAN GROUP (major with diminished seventh).

Modern G major.

LYDIAN GROUP (major with tritone fourth).

Modern F major.

There is a great contrast between the impressions which these groups convey. Moreover the Lydian melodies conform to the natural or authentic order, in which the final note is the lowest, the Phrygian to the so-called oblique or plagal order, in which the melody rises about as high above its final note as it descends below it, so that the final note is about in the middle of its compass. This explains the ecstatic and rapturous feeling (for which πάθος is a more correct expression than ἡθος) which the Phrygian melodies inspired in the ancients. Our 'major mode' is a development out of these two ancient modes as the proper mean between them. The Mixolydian Mode was first invented by Sappho, about 600 B.C. (Aristox. in Plut. De Musica 16, 1136 C sq.) and was theoretically developed much later by Pythocleides of Ceos, a musician living at Athens (Aristox. ibid.), or according to another more detailed account (Lysis ibid.) by another musician of somewhat later date Lamproclus of Athens, who like Pindar was a pupil of Agathocles (Schol. Plat. Alcib. I. 118 C). The invention of the low-pitched Lydian was ascribed to the Athenian Damon, a contemporary of Pericles and Socrates, see n. (1055) (Plut. ibid. 1136 E). Aristotle designates the low-pitched modes as relaxed and effeminate, similarly Plato Rep. I. c. speaks of them as effeminate and intoxicating, which no doubt is rightly explained c. 7 § 11 (see n. 1113) to refer, not to the exciting, but to the soothing and weakening effects of intoxication. In c. 7 § 4 Aristotle mentions with approval a division of all the musical Modes into ἠθικαί, ethical, πρακτικά (Modes of action = scenic?) and ἐνθουσιαστικά, ecstatic; and allows the young for educational purposes to be instructed in those only of the first class. Here Gevaert has made a great mistake in assigning all those which end on the dominant, i.e. Dorian, Phrygian, Lydian, to the first class 'ethical'; all those which end on the tonic, i.e. Hypodorian (Aeolian), Hypolydian (low-pitched Lydian) and Hypophrygian (Ionian or low-pitched Ionian), to the second class (πρακτικά); and all those ending on the third, i.e. the two mournful and high-pitched modes, Mixolydian (highly strung Ionian) and highly strung Lydian, to the third class 'ecstatic.' He is only right as regards the third class. But if the Boeotian was a Dorian Mode ending on a third, they might belong to the same class, and the same would hold good of the Locrian. Gevaert has been misled by the fact that Plato assigns a prominent place to the Phrygian only along with the Dorian, and yet according to his description of the Phrygian (Rep. 399 A ff.) as impetuous and warlike, it ought to be reckoned among the second class. But Gevaert strangely forgets that Aristotle c. 7 § 9 f. (see n. 1107) strongly disputes Plato's assertion, and designates the Phrygian Mode as ecstatic above all others, putting it at the head of the third class. There would then be joined to it the two other 'high-strung' modes of a mournful character, inasmuch as all painful emotions imply something ecstatic, something carrying men out of themselves (cp. nn. 1047, 1072, 1084, 1089, 1095, 1096, 1101). In Problems XIX. 48 no doubt the Hypophrygian has the same adjective πρακτικός applied to it which is used of the second class of Modes here, but not so the Hypodorian; on the contrary it is called majestic and calm (ἡθους ἔχει μεγαλοπρεπὲς καὶ στάσιμον). It is simply an afterthought to class both together as πρακτικά, but even then only in opposition to the Phrygian Mode which is there also said to be ecstatic and full of Bacchic frenzy as the expression of passive emotions¹. The Hypodorian or Aeolian Mode must undoubtedly be assigned to the first class, although it forms a sort of transition to the second, and the Hypophrygian ought certainly to be put

ἡ ἑξολυδιστί (from Gaza) before κατὰ μὲν οὖν, as recommended by Gevaert, appears to me quite a mistake. Cp. p. 607.

with the second, were it not for the statement both of Aristotle and Plato that the low-pitched keys are relaxed, effeminate and drowsy. There are only two possible solutions of this difficulty: either the author of this problem had a different idea of the character of the Hypophrygian from that of Plato and Aristotle, or else the Hypophrygian and low-pitched Ionian are not the same Mode. It is quite evident that drowsy and effeminate modes cannot be classed with those which inspire a bacchic frenzy. They can only come among those representative of character, ἡθικαί, not in the position of the highest of those modes such as the Dorian and Aeolian, but as constituting a transition to the ecstatic. In this way the Lydian only would remain in the second class, but c. 7 § 15 it is curiously distinguished from all other modes, and would appear from the description given to belong to the first class. Still this passage, which cannot have proceeded from Aristotle's pen, is so strange in other respects that it need not be taken into account, see n. (1113). Much more weight attaches to the circumstance that Aristotle evidently (see nn. 1088, 1096) assumes more than one mode of the second class, and this compels us to decide that the Hypophrygian or Ionian must really be a different mode from the low-pitched Ionian, and consequently that the low-pitched Lydian is unlikely to have been the same as the Hypolydian, so that this point remains quite obscure¹. Of course the Lydian Mode was also employed for mournful instrumental pieces upon the flute (see n. 1042), and in Tragedy was frequently adopted in the κομμοί, dialogues of lamentation between the leader of the chorus and actors (Cratin. in Ath. xiv. 638 f.); for the latter purpose however the Dorian Mode was used in older times (Plut. De Musica 17, 1136 f), and it is very characteristic that Pindar in his odes appears to have employed only the Lydian Mode besides the Dorian and Aeolian. It is very interesting to notice the fact shown by VI(IV). 3. 4 (cp. n. 1159) that even among the ancients some theoretical musicians rightly perceived that the three fundamental modes might be reduced to two, which we call Major and Minor. For those who, as is stated in that passage, only recognized the Dorian and Phrygian as fundamental ἀρμονίαι, like the moderns, put all other differences into the background, and rested the main distinction entirely upon the minor or major third. In this way they might just as well have put Lydian for Phrygian, or better might have combined the words into Lydo-Phrygian. It is well known that the Greek modes passed to the Romans, and to the ecclesiastical and secular music of all European nations until after the Reformation: they are still well represented in the older protestant hymn tunes and survive in Celtic, Swedish, Slavonic, and Flemish national airs. Even in the older periods of modern music we continue to find an excess of the Minor over the Major, followed later on by a balance between them. SUSEM. (1054)

MUSICAL RHYTHMS.

τὸν αὐτὸν δὲ τρόπον ἔχει τὰ περὶ τοὺς ῥυθμούς, οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἔχουσιν ἥθος στασιμώτερον οἱ δὲ κινητικόν, καὶ τούτων οἱ μὲν φορτικωτέρας ἔχουσι τὰς κινήσεις οἱ δὲ ἐλευθεριωτέρας. V(VIII) c. 5 § 23, 1340 b 7—10.

The Greeks had three kinds of time or metre: (1) even or dactylic time, in which the two parts of the metre are of even length, (2) double or iambic time, in which the prominent beat, arsis, is twice as long as the secondary, thesis, and (3) one-and-a-half or paeonian time, in which the arsis as compared with the thesis is in the proportion of $1\frac{1}{2} : 1$. The dactylic time, corresponding to our common time, conveys a quiet settled feeling; the iambic corresponding to our triple time, and still more the paeonian, a time of five beats which seldom occurs in our modern music, give an impression of unrest. The Ionic measure $\sim\sim\sim$, $\sim\sim\sim$ was considered specially wanting in nobility, loose and effeminate (Arist. Quint. p. 37 Meib., Demetr. De cloc. § 189, Metr. Ambros. p. 9 Keil, p. 262 Nauck, Mar. Vict. II. 8. 7, p. 122 Gaisf. p. 90, 19 sq. Keil, Schol. A Heph. p. 190 Westph., Dionys. Halic. De Demosth. vi admirabili p. 1093). The Ionic monopody, dipody, and tripody correspond to our $\frac{3}{4}$, $\frac{6}{4}$, $\frac{9}{4}$ time. Cp. Westphal Metrik 2 ed. I. p. 534 ff. SUSEM. (1056) See now the third edition of Westphal's work, Griechische Rhythmik (1885), p. 99 ff. esp. p. 156, Aristoxenus I. p. 35 ff. An example of (3) is the Delphian hymn to Apollo in $\frac{5}{8}$ time.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS: HARPS, ETC.

οἶον πηκτίδες καὶ βάρβιτοι καὶ τὰ πρὸς ἡδονὴν συντείνοντα τοῖς ἀκούουσι τῶν χρωμένων, ἐπτάγωνα καὶ τρίγωνα καὶ σαμβύκαι. V(VIII). c. 6 § 13, 1341 a 40—b 1.

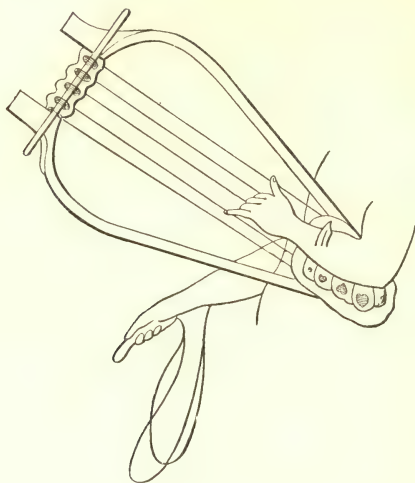

None of these stringed instruments were of Greek origin, and Aristoxenus (in Athen. IV. 182 F) speaks of the φοίνικες, πηκτίδες, μαγάδιδες, σαμβύκαι, τρίγωνα, κλεψιάμβοι, σκινδαψοί, and ἐννεάχορδαι as uncommon (ἐκφυλα). The πηκτίς was a Lydian harp (Hdt. I. 17, Pind. Fr. 102 in Athen. XIV. 635 D, Soph. Fr. 375, ibid. 635 C and IV. 183 E, Telestes Fr. 5, ibid. XIV. 625 F) of high register (Telest. l. c., cp. Pind. l. c.). The first notice of it occurs in Sappho Fr. 122; then it is mentioned by Anacreon Fr. 17, 22, by Plato Repub. III. 399 C as being many-stringed, but apparently by Sopater, the composer of parodies, in Ath. IV. 183 B as a two-stringed instrument. Like the magadis, it was played with the fingers without a plectrum (Aristox. in Athen. XIV. 635 B). Menaechmus asserts in Ath. 635 B, E that Sappho was the first to use¹ the instrument, stating that he follows Aristoxenus in regarding it as the same as the magadis, whilst others rightly make a distinction between the μάγαδης and the πηκτίς (Ath. 636 A ff.). In all probability the explanation of this inconsistency must be sought with Jan in the fact that the μάγαδης seems to have been a modification of the πηκτίς. At any rate the μάγαδης also is termed Lydian by Didymus in Ath. 634 F and perhaps before him by Anacreon (ibid. Fr. 18), and the latter calls the πηκτίς (Fr. 17) and the μάγαδης (Fr. 18 in Ath. 634 C, 635 C) his instrument, assigning to it twenty strings, a round number, as Posidonius thinks (ibid. 634 C, D), instead of twenty-one. But from the account of Aristoxenus (ibid. 635 B), who quotes Pindar l.c. in his favour, it appears that one-half of the strings gave the same notes as the other half, but in a higher octave, and that the instrument was used in accompanying antiphonal singing of men and boys, requiring therefore that it should be played with both hands, the one striking the higher, the other the deeper notes. When Telestes (Fr. 4 in Ath. 637 A) apparently describes the μάγαδης as five-stringed, we must probably assume with Jan that he really means five tetrachords, that is to say twenty strings, and in the same way in the case of Sopater l.c. we must suppose that the πηκτίς had, not two strings, but two separate tetrachords, and therefore eight strings or a full octave. Phillis however (ibid. 636 F) says the πηκτίς and μάγαδης (which he distinguishes from one another), the σαμβύκη, λαμβύκη, τρίγωνον and κλεψίλαμβος, had all of them nine strings. According to Euphorion (in Ath. IV. 182 F, XIV. 435 A) the μάγαδης—or rather the σαμβύκη, a modification of it (see below),—was most frequently used in Mitylene; and on the assumption of its development from the πηκτίς this fact entirely coincides with the mention of the latter and its employment by Sappho, the poetess of Lesbos. Yet the Spartan poet and composer Alcman, himself a Lydian by birth, had at a somewhat earlier date sung of putting aside the μάγαδης (Fr. 91 in Ath. 636 F) and must no doubt have used the instrument.

Similarly the βάρβιτον (neuter), also βάρβιτος (masc. or fem.), was of foreign or rather Lydian origin. For Strabo x. 471 says that all the names σαμβύκη, βάρβιτος, πηκτίς, are foreign, and Pindar l.c. designates the βάρβιτον as an adaptation of the Lydian πηκτίς. Like this, it was a leading instrument in Lesbos much used by the lyric poets there. Pindar l.c. ascribes its invention, or more correctly its introduction, to Terpander. Horace (Carm. I. 1. 34) calls it 'Lesbian' and assigns its use to Alcaeus (Carm. I. 34. 5 ff.). Sappho also mentions it and must have used it in her songs; so too afterwards the Ionian Anacreon, a follower of Alcaeus and Sappho (Euphorion in Athen. 182 F=Sapph. Fr. 154, Anacr. Fr. 143). Critias calls the βάρβιτον Sappho's favourite instrument (in Ath. XIII. 600 C); Neanthes (Fr. 5 in ¹ So also Suidas s.v. Σαπφώ, where the mention of the plectrum in the received text is due to corruption.

Athen. 175 C) erroneously ascribes its invention to Anacreon¹. Jan (p. 15 f.) is then no doubt right in recognizing the instrument, with which Alcaeus and Sappho are represented, as the Barbiton :

The only particular difference between this instrument and the λύρα consists in the greater length of the strings and of its entire structure. This is in agreement with the fact that it was an octave lower than the πηκτίς, as appears from Pindar l.c. Thus it continued down to about the time of Dionysius of Halicarnassus (R. A. vii. 72) to be comparatively the commonest stringed instrument in Greece after the κιθάρα and λύρα, as may be gathered from the mention of them together Athen. 182 E and Pollux iv. 8. 59, from the fact that Aristoxenus (see p. 632) does not place it among the uncommon instruments, and also from the numerous representations of it. It would seem to have been played by means of the plectrum, if we are to rely upon No. 59 of the so-called Anacreontea. Anaxilas apud Ath. 183 B mentions only three strings, Plutarch De Monarch. 4. 827 A, and Theocritus xvi. 45, speak of many strings, and Teuffel correctly observes (Pauly's Realencycl. iv. p. 1289 n.) that the number of strings may have varied very much, since we find on vases figures of βάρβιτοι with three, four, and six strings. The contrast which Aristotle here makes between βάρβιτοι and πηκτίδες on the one hand, and the other instruments mentioned by him on the other, shows that the latter were less in fashion than the βάρβιτος and even than the πηκτίς and μάγαδισ. In vase paintings there often occurs the annexed triangular instrument, which represents no doubt either a triangle or a σαμβύκη :—

¹ Cp. Pseudo-Simonides Fr. 184, Anacreontea 2, 14, 23, 40, 41, 59.

The τρίγωνον or triangle is called by Juba (Fr. 73 in Ath. 175 D) an invention of the Syrians, that is probably of the Assyrians¹; by Ptolemy Harm. III. 7, p. 248 an invention of the Egyptians. Sophocles l.c. gives it the epithet Phrygian, and according to another tragic poet, Diogenes (in Ath. 636 A, see Nauck Trag. Gr. Fragm. p. 602 sq. ed. 2), it was common among the Lydians, and in Suidas (s.v. Σίβυλλα) its origin was traced to the Sibyl. It was triangular in form, as its name implies, and had a number of strings of unequal length, the shorter ones at the elbow, the longer at the base (Aelian apud Porphy. on Ptolem. p. 216 sq.), and it was therefore of some considerable size (Diog. l.c., Arist. Probl. XIX. 23). The σαμβύκη was likewise triangular (Athen. 634 A, Suidas s.v. Ἰβυκος) and, the strings being short, had a very high register (Aristid. Quintil. p. 101, Athen. 633 F). Euphorion represents the instrument as being an adaptation of the μάγαδης (in Ath. 635 A); the same writer (in Ath. 633 F on the authority of a work of Pythagoras upon the Red Sea) states that it had four strings among the Parthians and Troglodytes, whilst among the Greeks it was many-stringed, according to Plato l.c. The statement of Skamon in Athen. 637 B that it was invented by Sambyx and first used by the Sibyl does not help us. Neanthes l.c. says either of the τρίγωνον or more probably (agreeing with Suidas l.c. and Schol. in Aristoph. Thesm. 168) of the σαμβύκη—which instrument is meant, is not clear—that it was invented by Ibykus, who probably was in fact the first to introduce it into Greek music; but Juba (l.c.) attributed the (?) λυροφοίνιξ *σαμβύκη*², as well as the triangle, to the Syrians. Practically all the ancients, agreeing with Aristotle, were of opinion that the τρίγωνον, and more especially the *σαμβύκη*³, were only suitable for loose songs and melodies and persons of light character, and this would be in accord with the first adoption of the σαμβύκη by Ibykus. Compare the comic verses in Athen. 638 E⁴ and the phrases “ballet girl and player on the triangle,” τὴν ποδοκτύπην τε καὶ

¹ Heliodorus Acth. IV. 17 speaks of Phoenicians, who after playing the πηκτίς indulge in wild Assyrian dances.

² In Kaibel's edition of Athenaeus an hiatus is assumed at this place, 175 D, between λυροφοίνικα and σαμβύκην.

³ Both were introduced into Rome, τριγωνίστριαν (Lucian Lexiph. 8), χαμαιτύπαις καὶ σαμβυκιστρίαις (Plut. Anton. 9), ἄγοντα σαμβυκιστρίας καὶ κιναιδούς (Plut. Cleom. 35), κιναιδούς ἄγειν καὶ σαμβύκας (Polyb. v. 37. 10) and others (Tib. Gracch. in Macrobian Sat. II, 10, Arnob. II. 42). This explains what Eupolis meant by mentioning triangle-playing (Fr. I in Ath. 183 C, F) in his comedy of the βάπται, directed against Alcibiades and his companions, who are represented in the play as celebrating indecent orgies in honour of the Thracian goddess Cotytto. Presumably such instruments were introduced simultaneously with the wild rites of foreign deities. The right reading is therefore undoubtedly *σαμβύκαι*¹ and not ιαμβύκαι, which I had adopted in my larger edition from the indications of the better family of manuscripts. The ιαμβύκη was the instrument used by Archilochus and other older iambic poets in declaiming their verses when sung, the κλεψίαμβος being used when they were melodramatically² recited (Phillis l.c., cp. Hesych. and Suidas s.v. ιαμβύκη). Aristoxenus, as has been mentioned, gives the κλεψίαμβος among the unusual instruments. Upon the whole question consult Böckh *De metr. SCALES.

τῶν μελῶν τὰ σύντονα καὶ παρακεχρωσμένα, c. 7 § 7, 1342 a 24 f.

The "colour" of notes (χρῶμα) denotes the distinction between the three varieties of scale, or 'genera' of octaves, one of which is itself called the chromatic, the two others being the diatonic and enharmonic, and their subdivisions. The most simple form of the diatonic scale embraced all the notes of the octave in their usual order ef g a bc d e. Terpander omitted c, whilst the oldest instrumental composers for the flute included under the name of Olympus (see Exc. II.) omitted d and probably g (Aristot. Probl. XIX. 32, Aristox. apud Plut. De Mus. 11, 33). The latter arrangement would give the following succession of intervals:

e f a bc e

semitone, major third, tone, semitone, major third; and this was the older form of the enharmonic scale. Later on the interval of a semitone was split up into two quarter tones (δίεσις):

e f* g* a bc*d* e

so that the intervals became: quarter-tone, quarter-tone, major third, whole tone, quarter-tone, quarter-tone, major third; and this was the second kind of enharmonic scale. The diatonic scale on the other hand even in its irregular forms had no intervals either so large or so small. Its two regular varieties correspond to our so-called natural scale and scale of even temperament.

¹ The suggestion, which D. Volkmann De Suidae biogr. p. 14 makes à propos of this passage, that Aristotle was the first (perhaps in the Dialogue On Poets) to attribute the original employment of the πηκτὺς, τρίγωνον, and σαμβύκη to Sappho, Ibycus, and the Sibyl, is based upon very slight evidence, as he himself in part admits.

² See n. 10 on the Poetics (ed. Susem.).

In the case of the former there is between f and g rather more than a whole tone ($\frac{8}{9}$), and between g and a rather less than a whole tone ($\frac{9}{10}$), whilst in the case of the latter, as on our tempered pianoforte, the intervals of a whole tone are all equal. Besides these the Greeks also had two irregular forms, (3) one with an excessive whole tone ($\frac{7}{4}$) and a diminished whole tone ($\frac{2}{3}\frac{7}{4}$), a tone being inserted in the minor third B D in the place of the C omitted by Terpander, which was separated from D by the first, and from B by the latter interval, whilst at the same time in the other minor third E G the intermediate tone F was likewise exchanged for a corresponding inserted tone; the other (4) with an excessive and a diminished whole tone, the latter being inserted in the major third in the place of the notes G and D, omitted in the older Enharmonic, that is to say an excessive F# and C#. Finally the chromatic scale shares with the irregular forms of the diatonic the omission of C, and with the enharmonic the omission of G, and with both the compensation for these tones by an insertion, but differs from both in making the greatest interval always more than an excessive whole tone, and the two other intervals more than a quarter of a tone. The regular form of this class, which is also employed in our present chromatic and was older than the enharmonic (Plut. De Mus. II, 1134 F, 20, 1137 E), has only the usual whole tones and semitones :

e f g \flat a b \flat b d e

semitone, semitone, minor third, semitone, semitone, minor third, whole tone. The irregular forms have quarter tones and excessive minor thirds or excessive quarter tones and half tones or diminished minor thirds etc. These subdivisions of the three scales were called their shades or nuances (χρῶαι) of sound. It appears therefore from what has been said that what we call chromatic and enharmonic in our music is something quite different from the chromatic and enharmonic scales of the Greeks. The quarter tones are something quite strange to us, but the augmented whole tones we can reproduce, and even the occasional attempts to work with them in composition have, since Beethoven, succeeded. The later enharmonic scale had gone out of use even as early as the time of Aristoxenus, but he defends it with great spirit (Plut. De Musica §§ 37—39). On the other hand the chromatic and the irregular diatonic were in Ptolemy's time still extensively used by soloists in vocal and instrumental music. But for chorus-singing even among the ancients only the regular diatonic scale was employed. The scales may be defined generally to be the different methods of arranging the intervals between the four tones of a tetrachord or the eight of an octave. See Westphal *Metr.*² I. p. 412 ff., Gevaert p. 269 ff., also Helmholtz p. 403 ff. By unnatural 'colouring' Aristotle probably means all the kinds of irregular diatonic and chromatic scales and also, differing in this respect from Aristoxenus, the later enharmonic scale. SUSEM. (1099)

NOTE.—The assumption of Modes in which the melody ended on the third, i.e. the third above the key-note, is beset with peculiar difficulties, p. 628 n. 1. For if only the melody ended on the third, while the accompaniment ended on the key-note, how can we account for the fact that the chord of the third was held by the ancients to be semi-dissonant, παράφωνον, like the tritone? While if Gevaert is right in supposing accompaniment and melody alike to end on the third, then the assumed key-note is not the final note: what data then are left for determining the key-note of an ancient composition? On p. 625 this is taken to be the ὑπάτη; compare now Th. Reinach in Bulletin de correspondance hellénique xvii. 1893, p. 597 ff. In the article MUSIC in the Dict. of Antiquities (ed. 3) Mr D. B. Monro pertinently remarks, "the chief difficulty is the want of any direct statement regarding the tonality of the ancient modes, or the note in which the melody ended." The hypothesis, that the μέση of each mode was its key-note (Grundton, Tonica), based upon Ar. Probl. xix. 20 (cp. Dio Chrys. 68, 7) and doubtfully accepted by Helmholtz, Lehre der Tonempfindungen p. 367 ff. (cp. p. 412), is only true, as explained above p. 625, of the Dorian, Phrygian, and Lydian Modes.

A protest against Westphal's assumption of 'Modes ending on the third' appeared in Allg. Musik. Ztg for 1878 p. 737. Ultimately Westphal withdrew his assumption in the preface, dated 1890, of the posthumously issued second volume of his Aristoxenos' Melik und Rhythmik (Leipzig 1893). C. v. Jan, to whom the concession is due, treats it in his review (Berliner philolog. Wochenschrift xiii. 1893. 1285) as terminating a controversy which has lasted since 1863.

EXCURSUS V.

SUGGESTIONS ON THE TEXT AND INTERPRETATION OF V(VIII). C. 7

§§ 3—8, 1341 b 32—1342 a 29.

With a view to answering the question, whether all the musical modes are to be used, Aristotle first (§ 3, b 32) gives the threefold division of them into the ethical (ἠθικαί), those relating to action (πρακτικαί), and the ecstatic (ἐνθουσιαστικαί). Next, in so far as the answer must vary with the various ends of Music, he goes on to enumerate these various ends. At this point recurs the distinction between the end of catharsis and that of the moral training of the young, a distinction already mentioned c. 6 § 9, 1341 a 23 f. (ἐν οἷς ἡ θεωρία κάθαρσιν δύναται μᾶλλον ἢ μάθησιν). But now the question there left unsettled (see n. 1073) has to be considered: the relation, namely, of catharsis to the two other ends previously recognised, recreation (ἀνάπαυσις) and the highest rational enjoyment (διαγωγή). According to the textus receptus both are distinct from the end of purgation, and are combined together to form a third end¹. But it is a conclusion reached independently by Liepert and Sussemihl that this last cannot be the case, for several reasons. (1) In the preceding chapters διαγωγή and ἀνάπαυσις have always been opposed to each other; and (2) they really have nothing in common, except the element of enjoyment: but this they undoubtedly share with the other ends of 'moral training' (παιδεία) and 'purgation' (κάθαρσις): consequently this does not justify their being combined together in contradistinction to these other ends¹, even if an attempt be made to keep them apart as two opposed members within the same combination by the insertion of the necessary disjunctive particle (b 40, πρὸς διαγωγὴν <ἢ> πρὸς ἄνεσιν τε κτλ.). But (3) in addition to this, it is just as impossible, as Liepert has seen, to exclude from purgation (κάθαρσις) the elements of διαγωγὴ and ἀνάπαυσις: and (4) grammatically the change from ἔνεκα with the two first ends to πρὸς with this alleged third (τρίτον δὲ πρὸς) throws suspicion upon τρίτον δὲ also. For in reality, whether it has a moral or a cathartic effect, music can only influence either the character or the emotions: and further how is it conceivable that the cathartic enjoyment could possibly be anything else but either that of pure amusement and sensuous delight or the genuine higher aesthetic enjoyment which is a part of the highest intellectual culture and rational satisfaction? In any case then we require in the original text a statement that, regarded as an end of music, catharsis is only a means to one or other of these two ends; to διαγωγή, or to ἀνάπαυσις. Such a statement is furnished by my conjectural restoration ταύτης δ' ἢ πρὸς διαγωγῇ ἢ πρὸς ἄνεσιν τε καὶ πρὸς τὴν τῆς συντονίας ἀνάπαυσιν.

This is plainly confirmed by the subsequent course of the exposition. The next step is the division of the three classes of Modes (again according to the textus receptus) between the moral training of the young and the other ends of music, the most ethical being assigned to the former, those relating to action (πρακτικαί) and the ecstatic (together with the less ethical) to the latter. But the explanation of κάθαρσις (§ 4 f.), which had been previously promised (§ 3, b 38 τί δὲ λέγομεν κτλ) and is now added in the form of a reason (ὁ γὰρ περὶ ἐνίας κτλ a 4 ff.), proves by the very form in which it is cast that catharsis is to take the place of the other ends, or at least that by 'listening to the performances of others' (ἀκρόασιν ἑτέρων χειρουργούντων) merely this is meant². It is the ecstatic modes and those of action which are said to be specially appropriate for catharsis, and it is to the ecstatic melodies that the explanation as given applies: the otherwise meaningless final remark ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ τὰ μέλη τὰ καθαρτικὰ παρέχει χαρὰν ἀβλαβῆ, a 15, can

² Even this suggested solution, which leaves the main question unaffected, appears untenable. For even if we understand ἀκρόασιν ἑτέρων χειρουργούντων to mean κάθαρσις, yet the very term ἀκρόασιν implies the absurdity that the Greeks heard only melodies of action and ecstatic melodies (together with the less ethical) played and sung by others: that they never listened in this way to the most ethical, i.e. to the Dorian. Were this implied, it would seem necessary to admit the correction κάθαρσιν for ἀκρόασιν. But then arises the question whether 1342 a 4 καὶ ταῖς πρακτικαῖς καὶ ταῖς ἐνθουσιαστικαῖς should not simply be translated 'both those of action and the ecstatic,' especially as, when afterwards κάθαρσις comes to be discussed and explained, these two classes of musical modes and melodies are alone taken into account.

only be set straight by substituting, with Sauppe, the word πρακτικά 'melodies of action' for καθαρτικά 'melodies of purgation'.¹ In passing, there is the further suggestion to record that § 4, 1342 a 8 ff., the words ὅταν χρήσωνται τοῖς ἐξοργιάζουσι τὴν ψυχὴν μέλεσι may be a gloss upon ἐκ τῶν δ' ἱερῶν μελῶν which precedes².

From this investigation into the nature of catharsis it is inferred that the proposition³ it was adduced to prove is really correct (διὸ ταῖς μὲν τοιαύταις κτλ §§ 6—8, a 16—29). The previous directions for the moral training of the young are simply repeated § 8 (see n. 1100), in a less strict form, τοῖς ἠθικοῖς τῶν μελῶν καὶ ταῖς ἁρμονίαις ταῖς τοιαύταις a 28 f., i.e. ethical modes replacing the 'most ethical,' ταῖς ἠθικωτάταις, of § 3, a 3. The further instructions relative to ἀκρόασις ἐτέρων χειρουργούντων, i.e. to catharsis, are developed into a more precise statement that all the remaining Modes together are only appropriate and necessary for the recreation of the populace (the great mass of artisans, day-labourers, &c., who are not citizens in the best state), because this populace with its depraved taste takes most pleasure in artificial and complicated musical modes and "chromatic" scales. The more refined and cultivated public, consisting of the citizens in the ideal state, is distinguished from this populace, and obviously only the nobler musical modes are selected to afford this public the highest intellectual gratification. It is quite certain Aristotle cannot mean that this public is never to listen to ethical, and more especially to Dorian melodies. Such melodies, if they no longer serve for moral education, must surely contribute to that moral enjoyment which in this case is the basis for the intellectual element in the highest mental satisfaction (διαγωγῇ). And on the other hand, are we to suppose that Aristotle meant wholly to exclude adults from the moral enjoyment of melodies of action and ecstatic melodies? Yet in c. 5 §§ 17, 18, 1340 a 12—23, he speaks (cp. n. 1046) not only of the pleasure awakened by the noble characters which music represents, but also of the worthy actions for which it finds expression. SUSEM. (1101)

¹ With this change the words will mean: "so also the melodies that impel to action afford an innocent delight." It is much to be regretted that Aristotle has not more fully explained how this is. For the 'ecstatic' (ἐνθουσιαστικά) modes and melodies include such as produce and express not only ecstasy, but painful emotions of all kinds, as was remarked n. (1084), with which notes (1054, 1089) should be compared: hence it is not immediately clear how a similar cathartic i.e. homoeopathic effect is to remain over for modes and compositions "of action." Manifestly, it is the more joyous and energetic emotions, love and courage, to which these latter correspond. Yet no doubt the expression of some painful emotions, e.g. anger, cannot be excluded.

SUSEM. (1096) Cp. Rhet. II. 5. 21, 1383 b 7, θαρραλέον γὰρ ἡ ὀργή. If Heracleides is rightly reported Athen. XIV. 625 E, δεῖ δὲ τὴν ἁρμονίαν εἶδος ἔχειν ἡθους ἢ πάθους, he confined music to the expression of character and emotion. He may have found the difficulties presented by πρακτικά μέλη insuperable. Cp. however n. (1084).

² See Bursian's Jahresbr. LVII. p. 174. Both expressions ἱερὰ μέλη and τὰ ἐξοργιάζοντα τὴν ψυχὴν must refer to the melodies of Olympus: cp. Pl. Symph. 215 C quoted p. 622 n. 1.

Underlying this whole argument is the analogy of the homœopathic treatment for bodily ailments in vogue amongst Greek physicians of the time and usually called by them κάθαρσις: in regard to this it is sufficient to refer to the Introduction of Susemihl's edition of the Poetics p. 44 f. and to the fuller investigations of Döring¹. Two points have been properly emphasized by Döring: in the first place he has brought out the strong medical colouring which a number of Aristotle's expressions bear²; and secondly, that with the single exception of sufferers from the malady known as κορυβαντισμός, Corybantian or Bacchic frenzy, who are really insane with fanatical excitement (§ 4), Aristotle is not thinking of the cases where excess of emotion has actually reached the pitch of madness, but only of emotional subjects with a strong tendency to ecstasy, fear, pity, etc. while on the other hand the subject of treatment by the musical catharsis is not compared to a patient with a strong tendency to bodily disease but to one who is actually suffering from it. Even the term κατακώχιοι (§ 4, a 8), though it reminds us of 'possession' and kindred ideas, does not mean anything more, as Döring points out, than 'liable to be attacked' by a certain form of excitement. So too the phrase ὁ γὰρ περὶ ἐνίας συμβαίνει πάθος ψυχᾶς ἰσχυρῶς, a 4, "the emotion which occurs with especial violence in some minds," in itself ambiguous, denotes in this context the tendency to, but not the actual seizure by, a morbid excess of emotion. And this is natural enough: for Aristotle's chief concern is not with the insane and the means of their recovery, but with convalescents who in time attain to perfect mental health (cp. n. 1094), and with their æsthetic enjoyment; and what he has chiefly to deal with here is not emotion already actually excited but the matter of emotion lying dormant in their minds. The cure of morbid insanity is only of importance to him as a starting-point, as the foundation for his theory of the æsthetic catharsis, though it also gives him the right to make a new application of the medical technical term to this species of æsthetic effect.

This affords a further indication, as against Döring and others, within what narrow limits the medical, or pathological, analogy is confined. But at all events the term πάθος itself recalls τὸ πάσχειν, suffering or ailment¹, a suggestion quite lost in the usual rendering "emotion"; see Excursus III. n. (1043), p. 624. Aristotle no doubt distinguishes pleasurable and painful "emotions," but if the form of his remarks would oblige us to assume that all "emotions" without exception are included, this is, as Döring rightly saw, only an inaccuracy of expression. In the case of the pleasurable πάθη (e.g. φιλία Rhet. II. 4. 1, 1380 b 33 ff., θάρος, II. 5. 16, 1383 a 12 ff.) what analogy can there possibly be with bodily healing? And consequently how can there be cathartic, i.e. æsthetic, enjoyment, which is plainly described as a pleasure springing from pain? Pleasurable states (πάθη), on the contrary, are taken up with the moral feeling of pleasure at the successful musical imitations of noble characters and their emotions. To be quite accurate, Aristotle should have restricted his remarks here to painful emotions. Even the 'violent occurrence' (συμβαίνει ἰσχυρῶς) of the emotion reminds us, what has been said notwithstanding, of bodily disease: the 'employment' of melodies by those suffering from corybantism (§ 4) recalls the employment of remedies for bodily disorders, as was pointed out in n. (1093): it is to patients suffering from such disorders that the medical terms καθίστασθαι = recover (but see n. 1093) and ἰατρεία = regular course of treatment, are applied. Lastly, the mental relief (κουφίζεσθαι 1342 a 14) in the one case has its counterpart in the bodily 'relief' which is spoken of by the Greek physicians. With this exception however the medical terms are mainly used with exclusive reference to patients really delirious or insane. To render κάθαρσις by 'homœopathic purgation of emotions' (and thereby preserve the ambiguity of κάθαρσις παθημάτων Poetics 6. 2, 1449 b 27) does not imply that the emotions are purged, but that they are purged away: the emotion which music æsthetically awakens expels the every-day emotion of kindred name. The reader is referred to the Introduction to my edition of the Poetics p. 54 for further explanation why this view must be taken, and why of the two terms I prefer "cleansing" to "purgation." There also, p. 44, I have argued that in all probability long before Aristotle's time the treatment here described, whereby the priests employed the so-called melodies of Olympus to exert a soothing influence upon the minds of patients suffering from Corybantian frenzy, received the name of κάθαρσις "cleansing" in a religious (or lustral) as well as in a medical sense, because from a religious point of view such patients were considered to be defiled. SUSEM. (1095).

¹ Bonitz Aris. Stud. v. p. 44: mental emotion has the term πάθος applied to it as being the counterpart of bodily ailment or disorder (πάθος = νόσημα).

Κάθαρσις as simple cleansing.

The etymology of the term, its literal meaning and the connexion of its manifold applications, cannot be better explained than is done by Plato in the Sophist 226 D—231 E. The Eleate stranger starts with the every-day operations of sifting, straining, winnowing as contrasted with such other processes as carding, spinning, weaving, and he infers that their object is to separate, not like from like, but better from worse. Cleansing (καθαρός) is the general name for any such process¹. Having thus determined the genus he goes on to divide it into its several species. When applied to animate bodies, such cleansing includes not only (a) the internal purge effected by gymnastic or medicine—here we approach the well established medical usage of the term, see below—but also (b) the merely external washing effected by the aid of sponge or bath; while inanimate objects undergo a similar treatment at the hands of the fuller or ‘dress-reviver’². With these literal corporeal cleansings the Eleate is less concerned than with the intellectual process, (c) the riddance of false opinions, whereby he is ultimately enabled to define the Sophist as καθαρός, and the elenchus as a purge:—an application of the term to which we shall recur later on (p. 647).

The liturgical or religious sense: lustration.

It is generally admitted that as a technical term καθαρός was earlier and more widely used in this than in its medical application³. Amongst the Greeks the conception of impurity and ceremonial purification was elaborated from very simple and humble beginnings, as we see in Homer, where prayer and sacrifice are preceded by corporeal ablution and Achilles rinses carefully a goblet that is to be used for libations. At all times indeed the cultus of Greek religion laid special stress upon external, ceremonial purity: there must be running water near a temple and περιρραντήρια for worshippers. The opening scene of Euripides’ Ion, 101 ff., reminds us of the importance attached to keeping the temple itself pure and clean. All the contingencies of individual life—birth, marriage, death—were attended by casual impurity which lustrations were needed to remove. The Ecclesia was cleansed before a debate: upon one occasion, when news arrived of a horrible massacre, it was cleansed afresh. A whole community might become defiled and require the intervention of some prophet, like Epimenides, to prescribe by what ceremonies the taint could be removed or absorbed.

² τὰ περὶ τὰ σώματα πολλὰ εἶδη καθάρ-

σεων...τὰ τε τῶν ζώων (a) ὅσα ἐντὸς σωμάτων ὑπὸ γυμναστικῆς λατρικῆς τε ὁρθῶς διακρινόμενα καθαίρεται, καὶ (b) περὶ τὰ κτὸς, εἰπεῖν μὲν φαῖλα, ὅσα βαλανευτικῇ παρέχεται· καὶ τῶν ἀψύχων σωμάτων, ὧν γναφεντικῇ καὶ ξύμπασα κοσμητικῇ τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν παρεχομένη...πολλὰ ὀνόματα ἔσχε, Sophist 226 E f.

³ Döring Kunstlehre p. 251.

The crude materialism at the basis of these usages is shown by the very nature of the rites; the detergents (περιψήματα) used to 'suck up' the pollution¹, the care taken to bury or cast into the sea, or a river, all these καθάρματα (καθάρσια), i.e. objects loaded with the taint. Gradually however higher conceptions were introduced. The need of moral purity was emphasized in the words graven in the court of at least one temple². In nothing is the elevation of idea more striking than in the treatment of homicide. It is well known that in the Homeric age the taint of blood-guiltiness was unknown: Theoclymenus, a homicide, is even present at a sacrifice, Odys. xv. 222 ff., 256 ff. The notion of guilt being wholly absent, the only atonement for murder is the price paid to the kin of the murdered man. Traces of a new order of thought can be discerned in the later epics. In the Aethiopis of Arctinus, Achilles, having slain Thersites, goes to Lesbos, and there, after sacrifice, is cleansed by Odysseus. This earliest instance presents all the essential features of the remarkable beliefs so familiar to us in the story of Orestes and his trial on the Areopagus: the temporary exile, because the land is defiled by bloodshed, the ceremony of purification, the return when the angry gods and the manes of the dead are presumed to have been appeased. Precisely similar ideas and ceremonies are attributed to the Lydian king Croesus when he purifies the Phrygian Adrastus, Herod. I. 35.

Lustration as a cure for madness.

But along with instances in abundance of lustration for the removal of casual impurity and the taint of blood, there is some not inconsiderable evidence that κάθαρσις, in this ceremonial sense, was extended to the healing of disease, more especially of mental disorders, an application which serves as a transition to the well-defined medical use of the term. We need not dwell on the perfect congruity of this application with the beliefs of a time when the 'medicine man' is also a soothsayer, and cures are wrought by charms and spells³. The complete parallelism between the mental and the bodily treatment, which is involved in the application of the terms κάθαρσις and καθαρός indifferently to both, is asserted in the strongest terms in Plato's

Cratylus. There Socrates, speaking of the attributes of Apollo, whose name he connects with ἀπολύν, ἀπολύων, says: "the purgations and purifications which doctors and diviners use, and their fumigations with drugs magical or medicinal, as well as their washings and lustral sprinklings, have all one and the same object, which is to make a man pure both in body and soul¹." The strange nature of primitive remedies is what we might expect; 'the hair of the dog that bit you' is but one instance of crude homœopathy, which might be indefinitely illustrated. The fact that to cure madness the Greeks resorted to noisy excitement is beyond all doubt. In Plato, madness itself is said to suggest this remedy to the clairvoyant patient, the 'lustrations and religious rites' which for his malady are alone of avail². In the legends we naturally find this method of treatment (ἡ διὰ φαρμάκων καὶ καθαρμῶν θεραπεία) referred to an individual inventor: Melampus, a well known seer, is represented as healing the madness of the daughters of Proetus by such lustral rites³. Dionysus himself was the subject of another legendary cure⁴. The case of Orestes, Paus. II. 31. 4, is less clear seeing that he was 'cleansed' of matricide as well as madness⁵. On the other hand, in a picture of real life from the Wasps of Aristophanes, Bdelycleon in all seriousness endeavours to cure his father's madness by initiating him in the Corybantian rites⁶. Not less sober is the statement of the phenomenon as an acknowledged fact—the frenzy that music is supposed to excite and to cure—in the questions put by Porphyry and answered, in the person of Abammon, by Iamblichus⁷.

The main features of this celebrated form of worship, at once a revel and a mystery, are vividly presented by the authorities whom Lobeck has collected with all his learning and acumen in Aglaophamus, p. 1150 ff. To the Platonic dialogues we are indebted for some of the most graphic touches, portraying various accompaniments of the weird scene of music and dance which was apparently far better adapted to produce madness than to take it away. First and foremost, the incessant piercing melody of the pipe¹, which haunted the patient until he had ears for no other sounds²; then the wild frenzied dances³, the music meanwhile drowning the cries of the patient⁴, causing palpitation of the heart, while the tears started from his eyes⁵. To other writers we are indebted for hints and allusions which fill in some details⁶, but the philosophic reflexions in which Plato himself sums up the total effect, Laws 790 C—791 B, leave little more to be said: "this is the lesson which we may gather from the experience of nurses, and likewise from the use of the remedy of motion in the rites of the Corybantes; for when mothers want their restless children to go to sleep they do not employ rest, but, on the contrary, motion—rocking them in their arms; nor do they give them silence, but they sing to them and lap them in sweet strains; and the Bacchic women are cured of their frenzy in the same manner by the use of the dance and of music. The reason is obvious. The affection both of the Bacchantes and of the children is an emotion of fear which springs out of an evil habit of the soul. And when some one applies external agitation to affections of this sort, the motion coming from without gets the better of the terrible and violent internal one, and produces a peace and calm in the soul, and quiets the restless palpitation of the heart, which is a thing much to be desired, sending the children to sleep, and making the Bacchantes, although they remain awake, to dance to the pipe with the help of the gods to whom they offer acceptable sacrifices, and producing in them a sound mind, which takes the place of their frenzy¹." Corroborative testimony is borne by Aristides Quintilianus, in the passage cited above p. 609, f.²

Quite the contrary: in the same context 790 C we find αἱ τὰ τῶν Κορυβάντων ἰάματα τελοῦσαι; τελεταὶ are joined to καθαρμοὶ in Phaedr. 244 E (cited above, p. 645 n. 2); and Dionysus in the legend is not only 'cleansed' but instructed in the Bacchic rites (καθαρθεὶς ὑπὸ Ῥέας καὶ τὰς τελετὰς ἐκμαθὼν p. 645 n. 4). The common belief attributed Bacchic frenzy to the fact that the god had himself been driven mad by his step-mother: Laws 672, ἄλογος τις ἅμα καὶ φήμη ὑπορρεῖ πως, ὥς ὁ θεὸς οὗτος ὑπὸ τῆς μητρὸς Ἑρας διεφορήθη τῆς ψυχῆς τὴν γνώμην, διὰ τὰς τε βακχείας καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν μακίαν ἐμβάλλει χορεῖαν τιμωροῦμενος, i.e. in retribution.

Κάθαρσις as purification or purging of impurity.

In the applications of the term hitherto considered the object has been the person (or occasionally the thing) cleansed. In some of the metaphorical uses, however, and in the technical medical sense, the object of καθαίρειν is not the person but the impurity removed. With this construction the verb means not merely to purge [the system] but to purge away [what is noxious]; accordingly κάθαρσις denotes riddance and removal of impurity. The term has a wide range of metaphorical applications: e.g. 'separation' Plato Phaedo 67 C³, and moral 'purification,' which is a sense frequent in the *Phaedo*⁴. In the Sophist the elenchus is termed a purge. Socratic education, aped by the younger Sophists, was directed to ridding the pupil of that "false conceit of knowledge," which is the primary hindrance to the acquisition of true wisdom⁵. Other usages, e.g. λύσεις τε καὶ καθαρμοὶ ἀδικημάτων (Rep. 364 E, cp. Phaedo 82 D), support this meaning of riddance or removal. From Plato it passed to the Neo-Platonists: in Stobaeus Ecl. Phys. I c. 49 § 65 there is an extract, probably from Iamblichus περὶ ψυχῆς, which fully explains in what sense κάθαρσις was a technical term¹. It denoted in fact practical virtue, moral activity generally, regarded as one stage in the ascent of the soul, which must be purged from everything corporeal in order to attain to the divine likeness. Between this ethical and ascetic application, on the one hand, and Aristotle's pathological application, on the other, there is nothing in common: they are totally opposed, a fact which gives peculiar value to the evidence of Iamblichus and Proclus to be hereafter considered.

¹ Laus 790 C—791 B, Jowett's translation. Ed. Müller Gesch. der Theorie der Kunst I. 121, II. 70 (cp. Jahrb. f. Kl. Phil. CI. 1870, p. 405 f.) called attention to this passage in connexion with κάθαρσις. Especially noteworthy is 790 E f. ὅταν οὖν ἐξωθέν τις προσφέρῃ τοῖς τοιοῦτοις πάθεσι σεισμόν, ἢ τῶν ἐξωθεν κρατεῖ κίνησις προσφερομένη τὴν ἐντὸς φοβεράν οὖσαν καὶ μανικὴν κίνησιν, κρατήσασα δὲ γαλήνην ἡσυχίαν τε ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ φαίνεται ἀπεργασμένη τῆς περὶ τὰ τῆς καρδίας χαλεπῆς γενομένης ἐκάστων πηδύσεως, παντάπασιν ἀγαπητόν τι τοὺς μὲν ὑπνου λαγχάνειν ποιεῖ, τοὺς δ' ἐργηγορίας ὀρχομένους τε καὶ αὐλουμένους μετὰ θεῶν, οἷς ἂν καλλιερῶντες ἕκαστοι θύωσι, κατειργάσαστο ἀντὶ μανικῶν ἡμῖν διαθέσεων ἕξεις ἐμφορας ἔχειν. An objection made by Döring p. 252 to the whole idea of a 'lustration' of Bacchic enthusiasts as involving a contradiction, since the votary of the god, full of his enthusiasm, cannot possibly be unclean, or stand in need of consecration, is fully answered by this and similar passages.

The usage of the medical writers : purgation, discharge.

It remains to consider the most important extension of the meaning riddance or removal. In Hippocrates and Galen κάθαρσις as a technical term denotes 'purgation,' i.e. expulsion of diseased humours from the system. Foesius has well defined it: κάθαρσις purgatio absolute dicitur Hippocrati, cum humores prava qualitate affecti et noxii vacuantur, sive id natura molitur, sive sponte fiat, aut medicamento. To understand this definition fully, a slight acquaintance is required with the pathological theory of the father of medicine. The school of Hippocrates base their treatment upon the assumption of the four 'humours,' blood, phlegm, black bile, yellow bile². Health depends upon the due proportion of these vital fluids: disease is caused by their undue excess or defect, especially by their morbid accumulation in the frame³. If they are disordered, the more they accumulate the worse the disease becomes. In such a case the task of the physician is to aid nature to discharge from the system the accumulation of peccant humour, lest it become corrupt: preparatory to a discharge it must however be

W. He goes on to distinguish κρίσις, δίκη, κάθαρσις, and on the authority of οἱ ἀρχαιότεροι assigns as the end of the last ἀφαίρεσις τῶν ἀλλοτριῶν, ἀπόδοσις τῆς οἰκείας οὐσίας, τελειότης, ἀποπλήρωσις, αὐτάρκεια, ἄνοδος ἐπὶ τὴν γεννησαμένην αἰτίαν: whereas others confine it to the humbler functions of λύσις ἀπὸ σώματος καὶ ἀπαλλαγὴ τῶν καταδέσμων καὶ φθορᾶς ἐλευθέρωσις καὶ γενέσεις ἀφροίσι. Plotinus discusses the relation of κάθαρσις to the virtues in Enn. I. 2 περὶ ἀρετῶν, and decides (I. 6. 6) that κάθαρσις is not a means to virtue, but identical with virtue. Porphyry, Iamblichus, Proclus, Hierocles, and Ammonius agree in placing the cathartic virtues above the civic (πολιτικά) and below the intellectual (θεωρητικά καὶ ἀρετά): see Zeller Phil. d. Gr. III. ii.

661, 711, 757, 819 n. 4. It is only in this neoplatonic sense that the word admits of the rendering "purification," so common hitherto and so unhappily ambiguous.

² τὸ δὲ σῶμα τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἔχει ἐν ἑαυτῷ αἷμα καὶ φλέγμα καὶ χολὴν ξανθὴν τε καὶ μέλαιναν, καὶ ταῦτά ἐστι αὐτῷ ἡ φύσις τοῦ σώματος, καὶ διὰ ταῦτα ἀλγέει καὶ ὑγιάinei, Hipp. De natura hominis II. 3 p. 83 (I. p. 352 K.).

³ I.e. ὑγιάinei μὲν οὖν μάλιστα, ὁκόταν μετρίως ἔχη ταῦτα τῆς πρὸς ἄλλα κρήσιος τε καὶ δυνάμειος καὶ τοῦ πλήθους, καὶ μάλιστα μεμιγμένα ἦ· ἀλγέει δέ, ὁκόταν τι τούτων ἐλασσον ἢ πλέον ἢ ἡ χωρισθῇ ἐν τῷ σώματι καὶ μὴ κεκραμένον ἢ τοῖσι ζύμπασι. Plato has a similar theory in his Timaeus cc. 39, 40, 82 A ff. except that he has transferred the 'unnatural excess and defect' and the 'displacement' in the last resort to his four elements (air, earth, fire, water) rather than to their secondary formations, the four humours. Still he follows the Hippocrateans in referring fevers to the bile and catarrhs to phlegm (Tim. 85 B).

reduced and softened. Three stages may therefore be distinguished: (1) presence of crude humours, τὰ μὴ καθαρὰ τῶν σωμάτων, (2) their reduction, πέψις, itself a species of transformation, or μεταβολή, (3) their expulsion, κρίσις. Of these stages, (2) and (3) are promoted by artificial means, as explained by Plutarch in the case of hellebore: an insufficient dose, he says, excites disturbance (ταράττει) without however effecting a purge¹. The inducement of excitement (ταραχή) is somewhat of a parallel to homœopathic remedies in modern medicine, while the stimulated ἐνθουσιασμός in the Corybantian worship corresponds to it in so far as in both cases the remedy adds fuel to the flame². The medical process (ταραχή) goes on until the reduction (πέψις) is complete. Thereupon it remains to rid the body of the disturbing alien matters.

Here it is important to insist upon the distinction which Galen emphasizes between the sense of καθαρσις and of κένωσις in the Hippocratean corpus: the latter a depletion or total evacuation of humours,—it may be of healthy but surplus humours—the former the partial removal of morbid elements, whose presence causes active annoyance: κένωσιν ἀπλῶς εἴωθε λέγειν ὁ Ἱπποκράτης ὅταν ἅπαντες οἱ χυμοὶ³ ὁμοτίμως κενῶνται, καθαρσιν δὲ ὅταν οἱ μοχθηροὶ κατὰ ποιότητα. This distinction is rendered prominent in such phases as καθαρσις χολῆς, κ. αἵματος, where the result is not merely the loss of blood, etc. but, as what is removed is bad, what remains is absolutely clarified and refined; it is purged but not altogether purged away.

From the medical writers this usage found its way into the language of every-day life. Thucydides treats it as a technical term in his description of the plague⁴: Demosthenes allows a singularly naive and unsophisticated client to employ the word⁵. Aristotle appears to have generally adopted the medical terminology as well as the theory of humours from the Hippocrateans⁶: but in the biological works he has specialized this word in a slightly different sense⁷. Nor can it be said that the distinction enforced by Κάθαρσις as an æsthetic term.

The foregoing survey will serve as an introduction to the usage of κάθαρσις in reference to Music in the Politics, and in the famous definition of Tragedy in the *Poetics*². All are agreed that Aristotle is employing the term in a metaphorical sense of his own, at once novel and calling for elucidation³. Whether this æsthetic sense was derived from the liturgical or the medical usage of the term is not absolutely demonstrated⁴: whichever it was, we may acquiesce in Zeller's opinion⁵ that the new application is a wide departure from the original intention. On the one hand there is no doubt that the theory which Aristotle puts forward rests upon the facts to which he himself appeals—facts which, however remote from our experience, were less uncommon in Greece and in the East—the cure of the Corybantian frenzy in the manner above described⁶. On the other hand the occurrence of medical terms in the context⁷, certain points in the process of relief⁸, and the consideration urged by Bernays⁹ that a pathological effect on the mind would be more naturally elucidated by reference to the effect of medicine on the body, all make in favour of regarding the medical metaphor as prominent.

"Are we to imagine," it has been asked, "that when writing upon art, Aristotle was primarily thinking not of Plato's 'psychiatry' in the Laws, but

⁴ Very few authorities now support the former view. Ed. Müller argues for it Jahrb. f. Phil. ci. 1870, p. 404 ff. The view taken in the text follows Susemihl Intr. to Poetics p. 44.

⁵ Phil. d. Griech. II³. ii. 775.

⁶ P. 642. Ed. Müller loc. cit. p. 406 n. (190) insists that the similarity in means employed, subjects treated, effects produced in the cases mentioned by Plato Laws 790 d ff., and Aristotle Pol. v(viii). is so great as to be unmistakeable (τῶν ἐκφρόνων βακχείων ἰάσεις in Plato, ὥσπερ ἰατρίας τυχεῖν καὶ καθάρσεως in Aristotle; ἔξεις ἔμφρονας ἔχειν in the former, καθίστασθαι in the latter). That the priestly cure was actually called κάθαρσις is, however, an inference resting on slender evidence (see above p. 644 f.) and only eked out by general considerations of the primitive identity between drugs and charms, cleansing from ceremonial impurity and healing of mental disorders, which, as Susemihl remarks Jahrb. f. Phil. xcv. 1867, p. 234, attached a taint to the patient.

of Hippocrates' emetics and purges?" The incongruity is only apparent: it is just the assimilation of the mental effect to the bodily cure, the attempt to explain the 'psychiatry' on the analogy of the purge, that constitutes Aristotle's original contribution to Aesthetics.

The treatment to which the priest subjected those suffering from Corymbantian frenzy may be loosely said to have been of a homœopathic nature¹: that is, under the stimulus of the music, with all its exciting accompaniments (p. 646), the frenzy was accelerated and heightened until it had worked itself off. It is this excess or outburst of quasi-religious fervour, and the subsequent exhaustion, of which Catullus presents so astonishing a picture in the Attis. A fragment of Theophrastus practically endorses this view of the power of music². Plutarch too describes the effect of the flute, the instrument on which the melodies of Olympus were played, in language which shows a striking agreement with the cathartic method of the *Politics*³. Lastly, there is the passage from Aristides Quintilianus already cited (p. 610).

Not quite so clear is the operation of tragedy: "an imitation of an action that is serious, complete, and of a certain magnitude, by means of language embellished with each of the different kinds of embellishment, which are separately employed in the several parts; in the form of action not of narrative; effecting through pity and fear the proper purgation of these emotions⁴." If we are to choose between Lessing and Bernays, between "the conversion of the passions into virtuous aptitudes" and "the relief of disburdening the emotional tendencies"—there can be no question that the former is an erroneous view and the latter, in principle, right. The whole hypothesis is pathological; tragedy has, directly at least, no moral effect. In the Poetics we are told in so many words that tragedy creates a specific aesthetic enjoyment, a pleasure peculiar to itself⁵: about its moral or educa-

The assertion that homœopathic treatment is intended by Aristotle was made, as Bernays points out p. 95 (193), by Milton in the preface to his Samson Agonistes: "(Tragedy) said by Aristotle to be of power, by raising pity and fear, or terrour, to purge the mind of these and such-like passions; that is, to temper or reduce them to just measure with a kind of delight stirred up by reading or seeing those passages well imitated. Nor is Nature herself wanting in her own efforts to make good his assertion, for so, in physick, things of melancholic hue and quality are used against melancholy, sour against sour, salt to remove salt humours."

tional influence we learn nothing. Such good effect as the drama exerts must, on the Aristotelian theory, be indirect. But so soon as the attempt is made to define more precisely the nature of this purgation, of the emotions that are purged, and the pity and fear through which their purgation is effected, there arise difficulties which have not yet been wholly surmounted. For there may be a total or a partial removal, a 'purging away' i.e. expulsion, or 'purging' i.e. refinement (by release of painful elements)¹: further, it is possible to ask whether the emotions purged are those already existing in the spectator, or such as are excited in him by the action of the piece. Nor is it inconceivable that Aristotle has unduly pressed the medical analogy. How can the emotions correspond to the materia peccans? They are never expelled, and to speak of them as 'secreted' is an outrage on language. We more properly regard them as either suppressed or indulged, and in the latter case as running their course, culminating in the thrill of pity, the shudder of horror, the transports of enthusiasm, until sated with over indulgence they at length subside. While fully sensible then that every one of the following positions has been a matter of protracted controversy, we incline (1) to interpret the purgation of the emotions to mean their gratification, their relief by indulgence² (though perhaps the outlet thus afforded for emotional excess necessarily involves a qualitative change, viz. the loss of an impure element, what is painful and oppressive either in the emotion itself or in its manifestation in actual experience): (2) to discriminate³ between the emotions relieved, i.e. the pity and fear of real life, and the emotions which effect this relief, viz. those artificially excited by the action of the drama⁴: (3) to ² Comp. Plut. De inim. util. 10, 91 F: τῶν παθῶν τούτων ποιούμενος εἰς τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ἀποκαθάρσεις "indulging [lit. venting] these feelings upon his enemies." Bernays thought he could distinguish πάθημα, the disposition or permanent tendency (παθητικὴ ποιότης), from the πάθος its transient manifestation. It is impossible to follow him here, for Bonitz, Arist. Studien v, has shown that the two terms are absolutely convertible in Aristotelian usage. While if we say that the 'painful emotion' of fear and pity is removed, we are reminded that the definitions in the Rhetoric (II. c. 5, c. 8) make each of these—fear itself and pity itself—'a sort of pain' (λύπη τις), although the emotions generally are defined as οἷς ἔπειται λύπη καὶ ἡδονή Rhet. II. 1. 8, 1378 a 21, Nic. Eth. II. 5. 2, 1105 b 23.

⁴ The best proof that they are distinct (which has often been denied) is that in real life fear of imminent ill is incompatible with pity, i.e. sympathy with others: Rhet. II. 8. 6, 1385 b 33, οὐ γὰρ

associate the cure of the o'erburdened heart with that universalising element of the drama in virtue of which Aristotle regards it as an idealisation of experience¹.

These are the general outlines of the pathological interpretation of κάθαρσις. The erudition of Bernays discovered some slight confirmation for it in subsequent writers. Iamblichus (or whoever was the author of De Mysteriis), defending the least decorous of ancient rites, after adducing the now familiar argument that "suppression of the passions serves only to strengthen them, whereas judicious gratification quiets them" proceeds as follows: "hence it is that in comedy and tragedy by the spectacle of others' emotions we still and moderate and purge our own: and similarly by seeing and hearing things unseemly in the temples we are freed from the harm which actual contact with them would bring²." If this is too vague, we learn a little more from Proclus, who in his dissertation on the tenth book of the Republic—presumably expounding the Peripatetic view as the opposite of Plato's—speaks of Tragedy and Comedy as enabling us to compound with the emotions (συντελούσας πρὸς ἀφοσίωσιν τῶν παθῶν) which need to be excited just so much as will secure us from future annoyance. Again he says "it is possible to afford the passions a moderate satisfaction, and when they are thus treated to find in them effective aids towards education, when once the inconvenience they cause has been remedied³." From the Platonic standpoint Proclus then proceeds to refute the defence of poetry he has sketched⁴, and in a final sentence contrasts his own neoplatonic asceticism with the compromise proffered by Aristotle⁵. But while the dim outlines of the theory can be recognised, and here and there an obviously genuine phrase or two (ἀπέρασσις, ἀφοσίωσις, ἐμμέτρως ἀποπιμπλάναι τὰ πάθη), the rest is so coloured in passing through this unsympathetic medium that there is considerable uncertainty whether it does not reflect the neoplatonic, rather than the Peripatetic, meaning of κάθαρσις.

This distinction affords the best possible explanation of τῶν τοιούτων in the definition (Reinkens op. c. p. 161): τούτων would have postulated the complete identity of the two. Compare Ed. Müller Gesch. d. Kunsttheorie II. p. 63 ff.

It remains to pass under review another possible source of information: the utterances and indications of Plato's own æsthetic views in his dialogues¹. Plato, too, held pity and fear to be the effect of tragedy². His reason for banishing the drama is that, like poetry in general, it feeds that emotional nature which ought rather to be starved³. In a celebrated passage the indulgence of sentimental pity in the theatre is thus condemned as mischievous: "If you consider that when in misfortune we feel a natural hunger and desire to relieve our sorrow by weeping and lamentation, and that this feeling which is kept under control in our own calamities is satisfied and delighted by the poets;—the better nature in each of us, not having been sufficiently trained by reason or habit, allows the sympathetic element to break loose because the sorrow is another's... Few persons ever reflect that from the evil of other men something of evil is communicated to themselves. And so the feeling of sorrow which has gained strength at the misfortunes of others is with difficulty repressed in our own⁴." Here unquestionably is the view from which that of Aristotle is a reaction. That the passions are sources of possible danger, both philosophers agree: but granting this, Aristotle provides, while Plato sternly refuses, the means for their relief. Even Proclus is sensible of the antagonism of principle which has deduced from common bases of ethical belief so divergent a practical treatment. It would be a rash, but not exactly inadmissible proposal, to equate 'the feeling kept under control in our own calamities' with the pity of real life, and that which is 'satisfied and delighted by the poets' with the pity which (in Aristotle's definition) is the means of its purgation.

To Poetry and Art generally Plato allowed two and only two functions:

τὰς ποιήσεις... πολλοῦ δὲν εἰς ἀφοσίωσιν εἶναι χρησίμους· αἱ γὰρ ἀφοσίωσις οὐκ ἐν ὑπερβολαῖς εἰσιν, ἀλλ' ἐν συνεσταλμένας ἐνεργείαις [the neoplatonic view], συγκρὰν ὁμοιότητα πρὸς ἐκείνα ἔχουσαι ὧν εἰσιν ἀφοσίωσις (ibid.). In this and the previous citations from Proclus the corrections of Bernays (op. c. pp. 46—50) are given.

(1) to convey truth 'in a glass darkly,' as he himself does in his myths, and (2) to conduce to moral edification by presenting fair models and inculcating by force of sympathy proper sentiments. The latter is Aristotle's παιδεία: habituation to feel pleasure and pain at the proper objects. Now the Aristotelian κάθαρσις is something wholly distinct from this. It might be defended as producing a harmonizing and elevating effect on feeling and so transporting the audience into a state where they are more susceptible to sympathy with men as men, and to admiration for virtue. But this is only an indirect result. Or again we may regard it as a preventive: it might be urged that we are thus inoculated against the temptation which Plato has specially in view and regards as so formidable, the abuse of emotion and maudlin sentimentality. In any case this is one more hint which Aristotle has borrowed from his master. He has developed in a special direction the principle of 'that indispensable minimum' of gratification which even Plato does not refuse to the lower nature of man. The temperate sage of the Republic, who would fain stimulate and quicken the activity of the reason before he betakes himself to rest, is well aware that if he is to pursue, without let or hindrance, his aspirations after higher knowledge, his passions must be allayed and his appetitive nature indulged neither too much nor too little but just enough to send it to sleep¹.

In an Eudemian book of the Ethics an even more advanced position is taken up: the pursuit of pleasure to excess is exonerated from blame; where the pleasures pursued are harmless (cp. 1342 a 16 χαρὰν ἀβλαβῆ), even artificial means of stimulating them to excess are not condemned, such 'intense' pleasures being natural remedies for pains². But that Aristotle was not blind to the danger of excessive sentimentality is shewn e.g. by his care for the education of the feelings in youth³.

Besides this insight into the main motive and genesis of the pathological theory which Aristotle put forward in defence of the drama we gain from the Platonic writings many indications which serve to clear up particular points in the exposition. In the Philebus (47 E ff.) there is an interesting and valuable analysis of the mixed states, partly pleasurable and partly painful, which attend the spectators of comedy. From this analysis Aristotle would seem to have borrowed not a little where he traces the pleasurable concomitants of various phases of emotion⁴. We have every reason then to working of the rational soul. Of course the two philosophers differ wholly as to the application of this principle.

But they are not even entitled to such authority as they would have possessed in the case assumed, for though the Latin translation gives those citations in full, the manuscript from which in the year 1724 J. P. 18, n. 3. Cicero's acquaintance with the Politics has come up for discussion in several recent works, especially Schmekel's Die mittlere Stoa (Berlin 1892) pp. 47—85. The investigations of Schmekel enable us to dispense with the assumption that Tyrannion provided Cicero with extracts from Aristotle: for a comparison of Cicero

De Republica with Polybius vi. cc. 3—10 shows that both used a common authority, doubtless a political work by Panaetius. The suggestion was first made in a thesis appended to the dissertation published by P. Voight Sorani Ephesii lib. (Greifswald 1882). See Susemihl's edition of Aris. Oeconomica p. ix n. 16, Griechische Litteraturgesch. in der Alexandrinerzeit (Leipzig 1892) Vol. II. p. 75 n. (57), p. 180 n. (184). Direct acquaintance with the Politics is thus established for Panaetius whose life (circa 185—110) nearly covers the century between Hermippus and Apellicon of Teos: a result confirming the line of argument adopted on p. 18.

As for Polybius, see also v. Scala Die Studien des Polybios 1. (Stuttgart 1890) p. 102 ff., 222 ff. who endeavours (pp. 128—151) to prove that Polybius had himself read Aristotle's Politics. This hypothesis is combated by Susemihl Litteraturgesch. II. p. 81 n. (4), p. 106 n. (97 b), p. 127 n. (147).

P. 18, n. 7. The definite quotations contained in this list require to be distinguished from the more numerous traces of acquaintance with Peripatetic political doctrine which may or may not imply actual use of the treatise. The former may be slightly extended as regards the commentators on the Ethics: see now the academic edition Michael Ephesius ed. Heylbut 504, 8 ff., 520, 31 ff., 521, 5 ff., 610, 7 ff., 16 ff., 611, 10 ff., 615, 20 ff., 616, 6 f., 619, 14 ff., 18 ff., 620, 10 ff., Anon. p. 190, 4 f., p. 214, 36 ff.

The latter must commence with the Eudemean Ethics and Magna Moralia, the parallels being fully given in the footnotes to Susemihl's editions (Leipzig, 1883, 1884). Similarly with the Oeconomica: see again Susemihl's ed. (ib. 1887) p. v n. (1) for Book I and p. x n. (25) on the expansion in Book II of the idea suggested, and partly worked out, in the Politics I. II §§ 7—13, 1259 a 3—36. The beginning of this passage is clearly referred to at 1346 a 27—29: but this again has a bearing on the genuineness of Politics I. c. 11. See below.

Mr Newman has compiled in Vol. II. p. x—xix, a list of similar parallels from Rhetorica ad Alex. 3, 1424 a 12 ff., b 3 ff., De animal. motu 7, 701 b 24 ff., [Plato] Erastae 135 c, 138 c, Aristoxenus Fr. 19, 20, Philodemus De Musica (ed. Kemke) besides B. 3, Fr. 24, 52, 53, 54, 65, 66 noticed by Kemke and Gomperz, B. 1, Fr. 16, 17: B. 3, Fr. 45, 55: B. 4, col. 3, 23 ff.; 15, 5 f.; 16, 17 ff. Plutarch Vita Crassi c. 2, p. 544 A (esp. the words τὴν γὰρ οἰκονομικὴν ἐν ἀψύχοις χρηματιστικὴν οὖσαν ἐν ἀνθρώποις πολιτικὴν γιγνομένην ὁρῶμεν, though this is nowhere said by Aristotle), Moralia 9 C, 527 A, 787 C—D, 812 B, D ff., 825 A—C: Dio Chrysostom, 3. 115, 7. 267, 14. 439, 36. 83 R. All of these include the possibility of indirect use of the treatise. Prof. Susemihl holds that Plutarch was certainly acquainted with the Politics, but hardly with the Politics. Even his direct acquaintance with the Ἀθ. Πολ. is denied by some: e.g. v. Wilamowitz Aristoteles u. Athen (Berlin 1893) I. pp. 299—303.

P. 20, n. 1. Add references to Blass De Antiphonte sophista (Kiel 1889), Dümmler Prolegomena zu Platons Staat (Basel 1891), Wilamowitz op. c. I. 161 ff., esp. 169—185.

P. 35, n. 3. Gilbert's hypothesis, that Ephorus used the Politics of Aristotle, is rendered untenable by the discovery of the Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία, which contains very precise indications of having been compiled between 329 and 325 B.C. The same treatise slightly strengthens the probability that Aristotle may have made use of Ephorus (or his authorities) in part of his works. At any rate he is in the Ἀθ. Πολ. under considerable obligations to another of Isocrates' pupils, Androtion. See A. Bauer Forschungen zu Arist. Ἀθ. Πολ. (Munich 1891) p. 155. v. Wilamowitz is again sceptical op. c. I. p. 306.

P. 37, n. 1. The opinion here expressed, that the first part of B. II. c. 12 is genuine, the latter part a spurious addition, seems to have been strengthened rather than weakened by the discovery of the 'Αθηναίων Πολιτεία. See Diels in Archiv f. d. Gesch. d. Philos. IV. 1891, p. 485. P. Meyer has indeed argued in Des Aris. Politik u. d. 'Αθ. Πολ. (Bonn 1891) p. 13 ff. that the athetesis should be confined to 1274 b 9—15, with perhaps the addition of 1274 a 32—b 5 ἦν...κλήρων, and 1274 b 23—26 ἐγένετο...ἄν. Against this view see Susemihl Quaest. crit. et exeg. I. p. xvi f.

P. 66, ix. The date of the Politics has recently been discussed with much vivacity. Since the publication of the Constitution of Athens, the appearance of general agreement combined with occasional discrepancy which the two works present, has not unnaturally stimulated inquiry into its cause. The first suggestion made, on the assumption that Aristotle wrote both works, was that the Constitution, which can confidently be dated circa 329—325, is separated by an interval of years from the Politics. Thus Mr Newman notes (in Class. Rev. v. 162) that in the first part of the Constitution of Athens "we are sometimes inclined to ask whether the Politics is not already in existence and known to the writer. Has not the writer" of 'Αθ. Πολ. c. 41 § 2 "Pol. 4. 4, 1292 a 4—37 before him?" Similarly Bruno Keil in Die Solonische Verfassung (Berlin 1892) confidently assigns the Politics to the period 350—335 B.C. long before the completion, at any rate, of the Constitution. Tempting as such conjectures are, in the absence of positive evidence it is still necessary soberly to restate the grounds before us for dating the larger treatise; and this is what Prof. Susemihl has done Quaest. Ar. crit. et exeg. II. p. x—xii, III. p. iii ff. His conclusion is that the Ethics and Politics were undoubtedly written later than the Physica, De Caelo, Meteorologica: that though they may conceivably have preceded the psychological, physiological and zoological works (and would then fall, say, about 332—330), it is far more likely that they were the latest sections of the Encyclopaedia with the exception of the Poetics, Rhetoric and Metaphysics. If this latter alternative be accepted, we may suppose the Ethics to have been finished before 327 B.C. About the Politics we cannot be so certain: for unquestionably the treatise consists of different component parts, written at different times with different aims, though ultimately incorporated in a single scheme. Of the portions anterior to the Constitution of Athens, i.e. say, to 327 B.C., we can point with confidence to Books IV (VII), V (VIII): possibly also to Books I, III. The rest of the treatise, B. II, no less than Books IV—VI of the old order, may with a balance of probability be assigned to the years 325, 324, 323, when Aristotle was also at work upon the Poetics, Rhetoric, Metaphysics, while under his editorship the Peripatetic school was issuing the remaining Politics (other than that of Athens), the Νόμιμα βαρβαρικά, the διδασκαλία, and other similar works.

v. Wilamowitz assumes that from the earliest times when he lectured at all, Aristotle repeatedly gave courses of lectures on Politics. While admitting that the present condition of the treatise does not permit a sharp separation of the different layers, or a general application of the indications which certain passages afford as to the date, he finds it hard to believe that Books HΘ were composed after "the comprehensive historical studies on which ΔΕΖ are based." I.e. he thinks that ΔΕΖ are later, or at least not earlier, than the Politics, which according to him they presume: Aristoteles u. Athen I. 355 ff.

P. 68, n. 3. Add a reference to Newman II. p. xxxi: Aristotle "had evidently cast aside the programme which we find at the close of the Nicomachean Ethics, and yet he framed no fresh one to take its place:" a most important admission. Comp. also Birt op. c. p. 459 f. If the transition from B. I is an editor's addition, and δὲ an insertion of the family II² in 1260 b 27, the place of B. II itself becomes doubtful, as Susemihl remarks Prolegomena II to the revised impression of the Teubner text: "nisi tamen admodum fallor, Aristoteles totum opus si ita, ut voluit, perfecisset, etiam libros II. III. VII sic retractasset, ut II^{us} locum magis idoneum inter III^{um} et novi ordinis IV^{um} (veteris VII^{um}) invenisset." (This view is further developed in Quaest. Ar. crit. et exeg. III. p. iii ff., as explained above.) v. Wilamowitz op. c. I. 360 n. defends the genuineness of 1181 b 12—15, παραλιπόντων...τελειωθῆ as quite indispensable, and is not disinclined to accept the rest.

P. 96, n. 2. Inexplicable as the subsequent delay may appear, the printing had proceeded thus far (indeed pp. 1—448 had been struck off) before the appearance of Mr Newman's volumes I. and II.

COMMENTARY.

P. 139. 1252 a 8. Add after note (2): The identity of βασιλική with πολιτική is asserted Pl. Euthyd. 291 c and Politicus 259 d. The question, What is the object of this science, which in Euthyd. is left open, is answered in Politicus. That στρατηγική is subordinated to it, is asserted Polit. 305 A as in Euthyd. 290 c, d (Bonitz).

P. 140. 1252 a 17 τὴν ὑφηγημένην μέθοδον. Mr Newman is inclined to take this participle against Bonitz here and c. 8 § 1, 1256 a 2, in a middle sense: 'the method which has led the way.' Mr Wyse has independently proposed this same sense.

Ib. 1252 a 18. This method implies the examination of the ultimate species separately, cp. De part. anim. I. 4 § 4, 644 a 29, ἥ μὲν γὰρ οὐσία τὸ τῷ εἶδει ἄτομον, κράτιστον, εἰ τις δύναιτο περὶ τῶν καθ' ἕκαστον καὶ ἀτόμων τῷ εἶδει θεωρεῖν χωρὶς, ὥσπερ περὶ ἀνθρώπου, οὕτω καὶ περὶ θνητοῦ (Newman).

P. 141 f. 1252 b 2. Mr Newman suggests that the Delphic knife may well have served "not only for killing the victim (σφαγίς Eur. El. 811) but also for flaying it and cutting it up (κοπὴ ibid. 837)."

P. 143. 1252 b 8. Add after note (12): Eur. Hel. 246 τὰ βαρβάρων γὰρ δοῦλα πάντα πλὴν ἐνός.

P. 143 f. 1252 b 15. Add after note (17): Mr Newman, like Dittenberger, defends ὁμοκῆπους, meeting the objection respecting the quantity with the suggestion that the term may have occurred in a prose treatise. But the letter of Epimenides to Solon on the Cretan constitution, Diog. Laert. I. 112, was undoubtedly a forgery later than Aristotle's time: see Hiller in Rhein. Mus. XXXIII. p. 527 f.

P. 144. 1252 b 16. See again Quaest. crit. coll. p. 332. As in b 10, so here πρώτη must be predicative, = as the first, primarily: συνεστηκῦα being understood from b 13. "From these two relationships the family is first formed.... From a number of families the society first formed with a view to something beyond the needs of every day is the village." Both passages should be omitted from the examples given by Bonitz Ind. Ar. 652 b 53 ff.

P. 145. 1252 b 18. The literature bearing upon ὁμογάλακτες and ὀργεῶνες is continually increasing: see the authorities cited in Busolt Gr. Gesch. I¹. p. 390 ff. esp. pp. 394—398 with notes, K. F. Hermann Lehrbuch d. gr. Alt. Vol. I. Staatsaltertümer ed. V. Thumser § 58 [98] pp. 313—324, Töpffer Attische Genealogie p. 20 ff. For the later organization consult C.I.A. II. 596, 597, 605, 'Εφ. ἀρχ. 1883. 83.

Mr W. R. Paton, Class. Rev. v. p. 222, thinks that ὁμογάλακτες = those whom it was possible for two generations to suckle, i.e. two generations.

Many years ago Mr Wyse asked "What of the present tense (οὓς καλοῦσι τινες ὁμογάλακτας)? For from Philochorus Fr. 94 (Suid. s.v. ὀργεῶνες)... τοὺς ὁμ. οὓς γεννήτας καλοῦμεν we see the older term was extinct in his time. Was it current in Aristotle's time? I have my doubts. It seems at any rate possible that, if the passage cited by Suidas occurred in the account of the διαψήφισις ἐπὶ Ἀρχίῳ ἀρχοντος 346/5 B.C., Philochorus cited and explained in this context the ancient laws which as we know from Lysias needed interpretation even early in the fourth century. May Aristotle refer then either to the authors of ancient Athenian statutes or to lawyers? I do not think the word occurs in the Orators, having been expelled by γεννήται. It manifestly assists Aristotle's argument if the word is a relic from old times, not in use among the Athenians of his day (and Pollux vi. 156 remarks ἰδίον τῶν Ἀττικῶν).... As to the remark," p. 145 Comm. left col., l. 25, "that no place in the development is found for 'associations for common sacrifices and religious festivals,' was not this just the aspect under which the γένος presented itself to an Athenian of the fourth century? The γένος implied κοινωνία ἱερῶν."

P. 145, right col. To the note on διδ add: Aristotle follows Plato in arguing that the primitive form of government must have been monarchy, because the primitive family, supposed independent anterior to the rise of any government, is accustomed to the rule of its senior member. The Cyclopes are adduced as evidence of this earlier state of society (σποράδες) without any king, patriarchal or other, not of course 'to justify a general statement respecting the household of all times,' but rather to justify the particular statement made 1252 b 19 (ἐκ βασιλευμένων).

P. 146. 1252 b 28. The place of τέλειος illustrates Dr Jackson's remark that by normal Aristotelian usage part of a complex epithet may be placed after article and substantive (hyperbaton).

P. 150. 1253 a 22. Add to note (28) a reference to the note on p. 212, and to Quaest. crit. coll. pp. 334—336, 449 f.

1b. 1253 a 26. Add to note on χωρισθῆς: Possibly Aristotle has in mind Soph. Phil. 1018 ἄφιλον ἔρημον ἄπολων ἐν ζῶσιν νεκρὸν (Newman).

P. 151. 1253 a 34. This note has suffered from undue compression. A fuller discussion appears in Quaest. crit. coll. p. 336 f. The main points are: (1) the weapons are not prudence and [virtue], or else they would have been expressed by the accusative, φρόνησιν καὶ ἀρετήν. (2) Prudence and [virtue] are the qualities at whose disposal the weapons are placed. (3) The weapons are the various safeguards and aids necessary if any action, whether just or unjust, is to be performed with safety: prudence and perseverance (on Susemihl's conjecture), prudence and skill (on Freudenthal's)¹.

Against those who, with Jowett, by φρονήσει understand δευότης (N. E. 1144 a 23 ff.) and by ἀρετῇ φυσικῇ ἀρετῇ or ἐξῆς (N. E. 1144 b 1 ff.), it is urged l. l. that (1) such a use of ἀρετῇ is unexampled and (2) that the natural germ of virtue is not peculiar to man but is found in the lower animals: N. E. 1144 b 8, Hist. an. I. i § 32 ff. 488 b 12 ff., VIII. 1, IX. 1.

Spengel, who understands by ἀρετῇ intellectual virtue, is met not only by the invariable usage of the phrase φρόνησις καὶ ἀρετή, but also by the fact that φρόνησις is probably the only intellectual virtue which has to do with conduct. There is also the improbability that the term ἀρετῇ would be used of a quality liable to abuse when ἀρετῇ latet non ipsa arma sed res sint, quibus arma offerantur, armis autem praesidia illa varii generis atque adiumenta significantur unicuique necessaria, quotienscunque opus vel iustum vel iniustum tute perpetrare velit? Qu. cr. coll. p. 337.

Aristotle himself says Rhet. I. I. 12, 1355 b 4: τοῦτό γε (i.e. abuse) κοινόν ἐστι κατὰ πάντων τῶν ἀγαθῶν πλὴν ἀρετῆς.

Bernays again Zwei Abhh. iib. d. aristot. Theorie (Berlin 1880) p. 113 f. who adopts Montecatino's explanation (arma homini data sunt ad prudentiam et virtutem), quotes Seneca De ira I. 17: Aristoteles ait adfectus quosdam, si quis illis bene utatur, pro armis esse, quod verum foret, si, velut bellica instrumenta, sumi deponique possent induentis arbitrio. haec arma, quae Aristoteles virtuti dat, ipsa per se pugnant, non expectant manum, et habent, non habentur. But the passions are not peculiar to man: and surely they are not more dangerous in man because, as Bernays interprets the words, they are 'arms for insight and virtue.' Not to mention the objection, stated on p. 151, that ἀδικία ἔχονσα ὅπλα shows the arms must be used by φρόνησις and ἀρετή, not in order to procure them.

[Mr Newman suggests 'language' as one of these weapons, and admits that if 'certain emotions, anger especially' are included, Aristotle must then have regarded these emotions as peculiar to man.]

P. 151. 1253 a 37. Add after note (28 c): Perhaps Aristotle had a saying of Pindar in mind: cp. Plut. Praec. reip. ger. c. 13, p. 807 c: ὁ δὲ πολιτικός, ἀριστοτέχνης τις ὢν κατὰ Πίνδαρον, καὶ δημιουργὸς εὐνομίας καὶ δίκης (Newman).

P. 152. 1253 b 3. The laxity here noted may be particularized as the omission not only of ἐστὶ but of ἐκείνων the antecedent to ὅσα. But in Greek idiom the genitive case is appropriated to related terms, so that in the sentence 'The parts of Economic are of the constituents of the Household' the meaning of the words supplied are of is 'correspond to,' or 'relate to,' and not 'treat of.' Mr Newman compares 1258 b 27 (but this is doubtful), and refers to Bonitz Index Ar. 533 b 6—13, with Waitz on Anal. Pr. I. 46, 52 a 29 there quoted.

Ib. 1253 b 9. It would have been sufficient to say that the ordinary sense of γαμικός is 'nuptial' and not 'conjugal': cp. n. on 1334 b 32, p. 547.

P. 153. 1253 b 20. Lest the expression 'speech delivered' in note (31) should be misunderstood we add that the Μεσσηνιακός was a pamphlet cast in the form of a speech, like the 'Archidamus' of Isocrates, treating the same theme from the opposite side, and advising the Spartans to make peace with Messene (1397 a 11 ff.): cp. Blass Attische Beredsamkeit II.² pp. 350, 289.

Ib. 1253 b 21. Zeller Pre-Socratics Eng. tr. II. p. 477 n. (3) observes that νόμος γὰρ ὃς μὲν δοῦλος ὃς δ' ἐλεύθερος forms a trimeter, so that under τοῖς δέ, b 20, a poet may be included.

P. 153 f. 1253 b 23 ἐπεὶ οὖν...33 ὑπερέτης. The commentary may again be supplemented from Quaest. crit. coll. p. 339 f. Various critics have treated this whole passage as one loosely constructed sentence, but without agreeing how much of it is apodosis to the string of protases which they suppose to be introduced by ἐπεὶ. As οὕτω introduces the apodosis to ἐπεὶ in I. 10. 3, 1258 a 31—34, so in the present passage, according to Eucken De Aristotelis dicendi ratione I. p. 29 f. (Gotting. 1866), the apodosis begins at b 30 οὕτω καὶ τὸ κτήμα. Spengel Ar. Stud. III. p. 5 (57) f. and Thurot Études p. 5 ff. proposed that it should begin two lines lower down with b 32 καὶ ὁ δοῦλος (to which Spengel by his punctuation ὀργάνων· ἐστὶ καὶ ὁ δοῦλος would add the preceding word ἐστὶ). Eucken's punctuation is as follows: ἐπεὶ οὖν ἡ κτήσις μέρος τῆς οὐσίας ἐστὶ καὶ ἡ κτητικὴ μέρος τῆς οἰκονομίας (ἀνευ γὰρ τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἀδύνατον καὶ ζῆν καὶ εὖ ζῆν), ὥσπερ δὲ ταῖς ὠρτισμέναις τέχναις ἀναγκαῖον ἂν εἴη ὑπάρχειν τὰ οἰκεία ὄργανα, εἰ μελλεί ἀποτελεσθῆσθαι τὸ ἔργον, οὕτω καὶ τῷ οἰκονομικῷ¹, τῶν δ' ὀργάνων τὰ

There is another way of taking this sentence: ἀναγκαῖον = ἀναγκαῖον ἂν, "For otherwise exchange would have been necessarily confined to the satisfaction of the exchangers' own wants": and so Bernays and Jowett translate. Thus retail trade is proved not natural because, if it were, an absurdity would follow. The historical explanation of the imperfect given in the note appears the simpler and deserving of preference (1) because of the historical tendency throughout the context, and (2) because the direct proof is much more natural than the indirect and apagogic.

P. 197. 1260 a 3. Prof. Susemihl, defending the reading ὥσπερ καὶ τῶν φύσει ἀρχόντων καὶ ἀρχομένων which Mr Newman rejects as nothing more than a conjectural emendation, writes as follows: As the principal family of manuscripts of Vet. Transl. has quemadmodum et natura principantium et subiectorum (and so re. bl), this is what William of Moerbeke must have written. Whether he took the reading ἀρχόντων καὶ from the text or the margin of his Greek manuscript, we cannot know for certain: but the question is superfluous, for the reading is even in the latter case older, in fact considerably older, than all extant manuscripts. Those who, like Dittenberger and Newman, set down all that is of value in Vet. Transl. to mere conjecture, will attach no importance to this: but then they should not appeal to the Vatican Fragments or in consistency should pass the same judgment on the two correct readings which they present. Further they should remember that the seventy odd right readings of K^b in the Nicomachean Ethics might with just as good reason be entitled 'conjectures.' If the oldest authorities are thus impugned how are we to come to a decision as to the goodness of any old manuscript? And do the good readings of the Vet. Transl. look at all like Byzantine corrections of the eleventh or twelfth centuries? Had this been the procedure of Byzantine grammarians in those times we should have found more of their interpolations (say rather emendations) in the text. There seems therefore no reason for rejecting this reading, which best suits the sense, in favour of exegetical subtleties. Moreover, of what avail are these latter? If we do translate ὥσπερ by "corresponding," we obtain no real correspondence: for the differences between those who are naturally ruled do not correspond to the differences between the virtue of the rulers and the virtue of the ruled: it is at the most the differences between the virtues of the different persons ruled that correspond, in so far as the wife is nearer to the ruler, the slave in complete opposition to him and the child in an intermediate position. This would lead to the conjecture καὶ <τῆς> τῶν. Why not then follow the more suitable reading of the Vet. Transl.? Had he intended the other sense Aristotle would more naturally have written: τὸν αὐτὸν δὲ τρόπον ἔχει καὶ περὶ τῆς τῶν ἀρχομένων.

ἐπόμενον τῷ κοινῷ, Xen. Cyr. IV. 1. 8 τὸ ἡγούμενον τῆς στρατιᾶς φύλον=the leading corps of the whole army.

P. 202. 1260 b 4. Mr Newman opposes the insertion of τὸν: the concluding part of the sentence would, according to him, apparently run τελέαν ἔχοντα τὴν ἡθικὴν ἀρετὴν, ἀλλ' οὐ τὴν διδασκαλικὴν ἔχοντα τῶν ἔργων δεσποτικὴν, "it is from the master qua master, and not from the master as possessing the δεσποτικὴ ἐπιστήμη, that the slave must derive the kind of moral virtue which he ought to possess." But (1) if so, ἀλλ' οὐχ <ῆ> would be required. (2) It should be remembered that c. 7 § 2, 1252 b 22 ff., teaching slaves their duties (διδασκαλική) is called δουλικὴ ἐπιστήμη as opposed to issuing the requisite commands which is δεσποτικὴ s.c. διδασκαλική (ἐπίστασθαι ἐπιτάττειν). It is no part of a master's business to teach slaves their duties, but merely to educate them to the moral virtue indispensable if their duties are to be rightly performed.

Id. 1260 b 5. Against the view adopted by Mr Newman, following Bonitz, that λόγον here=reason, it would be superfluous to urge that (1) Plato does not propose to withhold reason from the slave, and that (2) while reason forms no proper antithesis to ἐπιτάττει 'rational conversation' does.

P. 209. Addenda to Exc. II. Mr Newman's view of c. 6 is given Vol. II. p. 150 f. (1) He distinguishes the objectors to slavery here mentioned (1255 a 8 πολλοὶ τῶν ἐν τοῖς νόμοις) from the Abolitionists of 1253 b 20, who hold all slavery to be conventional and contrary to nature, thinking that the former probably did not object to the enslavement of barbarians in war by Greeks. In fact he restricts the dispute to the validity of the law or convention actually in force at the time, by which captives of war become slaves of the victors. (2) At 1255 a 20 he (like Dr Jackson) explains ἄτεροι λόγοι as a true plural: "the other line of argument on which (A) and (B) must then fall back, supposing they gave up their common standing-ground"—the principle that 'Force is not without virtue.' "Those who connect the right to enslave with superior force and those who connect it with mutual good-will between master and slave, are regarded as having two lines of argument open to them: either they may derive the claims of force and good-will to be the justifying ground of slavery from the claims of virtue, and thus shelter themselves under the latter, or they may impugn the claims of virtue: but if they impugn them, their own contentions lose all weight and cease to produce any serious debate." (3) At 1255 a 21, Mr Newman takes ὅλως with δικαίαν. The connexion of 1255 a 21—b 3 with the foregoing he makes out as follows. "We shall arrive at exactly the same result"—that what is solid in the contending views is the principle, that superiority in virtue confers on the master the right to rule—"if we examine another view. We have hitherto had to do with those who discuss the law in question on its merits; but there are those who support slavery arising through war on the broad ground that it is authorized by a law and that that which is so authorized is ipso facto just."

Prof. R. Y. Tyrrell has published remarks of his own and of the late Dr Maguire on the Slavery passage in a review of Mr Newman's edition published in Hermathena Vol. VI., No. 14 pp. 342—345.

P. 212. The suggestion in the second paragraph of the note on 1253 a 20 ff., made independently several years ago, does not greatly differ from Mr Newman's explanation, except that he makes τοιαύτη=probably λιθίνη, not ὁμωνύμως λεχθεῖσα. He translates: 'for a hand when destroyed' (by being severed from the soul, which is its οὐσα) 'will be no better than a stone hand.'

P. 222. 1261 b 18. Mr Newman translates κατὰ τὸν λόγον in connexion with (or 'in') the expression i.e. τὸ λέγειν πάντας ἅμα τὸ ἐμὸν καὶ τὸ μῆ. Perhaps however it is more nearly parallel to § 4, b 32, τὸ λεγόμενον=the scheme in question. For plainly τὸ λεγόμενον, de quo sermo est, i.e. τὸ πάντας τὸ αὐτὸ λέγειν, is not 'the expression' itself but 'the general adoption of the same expression': and so too with κατὰ τὸν λόγον.

Ib. 1261 b 24. Complete the reference to Plato Rep. 462 E by adding the words ἐνὸς δὴ, οἶμαι, πάσχοντος τῶν πολιτῶν ὅτιοῦν ἢ ἀγαθὸν ἢ κακὸν ἢ τοιαύτη πόλις μάλιστα τε φήσει ἐντῆς εἶναι τὸ πάσχον, καὶ ἢ ξυνησθῆσεται ἢ ξυλλυπησεται.

He also prefers to derive the name of this famous mare from her special quality, comparing Xen. Cyrop. VIII. 3. 38.

P. 227. 1262 a 32. For obvious reasons, the last sentence but one of the note on λύσεις should run "are not mentioned by Homer."

P. 230. 1262 b 23. The connexion between the two meanings of ἀγαπητόν is given by Plato Euthyd. 304 B τὸ γὰρ σπάνιον, ὃ Εὐθύδημε, τίμιον.

P. 232. 1263 a 1. For the clause τὰ περὶ τὴν κτῆσιν see Quaest. crit. coll. p. 365 f. Mr Newman is quite right in taking πᾶσι with ἔχει in the next line.

P. 235. 1263 a 26—28. The subject of a 28 ἐπιδώσουσιν is not, as Bonitz and Mr Newman think, αἱ ἐπιμέλειαι, but as all other commentators and translators have seen οἱ ἀνθρώποι ὧν αἱ ἐπιμέλειαι εἰσι διηρημένοι: for the increased trouble and attention which private ownership brings with it (1261 b 33 ff.) have this compensating advantage that they are merely means to the owner's increased advantage. The reading ἐκάστω προσεδρεύοντες suits this construction alone, the other reading ἐκάστου προσεδρεύοντος (adopted in the reprint of Susem.³ 1894, see Corrigenda) would agree with either: but it may have arisen from erroneously taking αἱ ἐπιμέλειαι as the subject to ἐπιδώσουσι.

P. 249. 1265 a 13. πλήθος] Mr Newman has here an admirable observation. "In the criticisms on constitutions contained in the Second Book Aristotle commonly notices first, or at any rate before he has gone very far, their arrangements with respect to what he terms in the Fourth Book the ὑποθέσεις of the State—the number of citizens and the extent of the territory, cp. 1325 b 38." P. 253. 1265 b 7. Add to note (209): Aristotle's suggestion in b 7—10 much resembles that of Plato Rep. 460 A, τὸ δὲ πλήθος τῶν γάμων ἐπὶ τοῖς ἄρχουσι ποιήσομεν, ἢν' ὡς μάλιστα διασφύξωσι τὸν αὐτὸν ἀριθμὸν τῶν ἀνδρῶν, πρὸς πολέμου τε καὶ νόσους καὶ πάντα τὰ τοιαῦτα ἀποσκοποῦντες (Newman).

Πb. 1266 a 8. To the references at the end of n. (223) add: Laws 945 B. As is now clear from the Constitution of Athens, c. 8 § 1, Plato in the Laws is merely reviving an old feature of Solon's constitution. P. 268. 1267 b 2. Add to n. (245): As to the form, although διωβολία occurs in the papyrus of 'Αθ. πολ. c. 28, yet Meisterhans² p. 18 shows that the proper form is διωβελία. On Attic inscriptions ὀβελός itself occurs only once with ε (in an inscription of date before 444 B.C.): but the derived forms preserve the older ε, unless the ending (as -βολον) includes an ο. Hence ὀβελίσκος, ὀβελεία, διωβελία: on the other hand τριῶβολον, πεντῶβολον, δεκῶβολον.

As to the introduction of the θεωρικόν, cp. now the passage referred to above, 'Αθ. πολ. c. 28 § 3, where it is ascribed to Cleophon (ὁ λυροποιός, ὃς καὶ τὴν διωβελίαν ἐπόρισε πρῶτος), not (as Plut. V. Pericl. 9 might lead us to conjecture) to Pericles. The increase in the grants must be due to the increased number of shows, for Dem. De Corona § 28, ἐν τοῖν δυοῖν ὀβολοῖν, shows the price to have been only two obols in 330 B.C. First mentioned on an inscription of the year 410 (C. I. A. I. 188 where the Treasurer of Athens pays διωβελία from the funds in hand, ἐπέτεια), just about the time when Cleophon was a prominent politician. Cp. Xen. Hell. i. 7. 10 of Archedemos, 406 B.C., ὁ τοῦ δήμου τότε προεστῆκώς καὶ τῆς διωβελίας ἐπιμελούμενος.

P. 275. 1268 b 19 f. Mr Newman observes: "It is possible that Hippodamos had in view cases in which the issue put to the jury included more charges than one. The indictment of Socrates was of this nature... There is much force in Aristotle's plea that the fault lay in the question put to the jury, not in expecting the jury to give an absolute answer."

Prof. Sidgwick has observed that this discussion shows what difference there is between Aristotle's political ideas and ours. In the modern European view the Constitution fills the place which the Laws (νόμος, νόμοι) hold for him.

P. 284. 1269 b 38. The view of Bernays [and Newman] is quite possible. In fact it may be said that Aristotle would otherwise have written <καὶ> ἐν ἐτέραις. See 1094 b 13, 14 οὐχ ὁμοίως...ὥσπερ οὐδ'. But Mr Newman's reference to b 34 πρὸς οὐδὲν τῶν ἐγκυκλίων is by no means decisive. Here the question is of utility not πρὸς τὰ ἐγκύκλια, but πρὸς πόλεμον. It is true that the 110 baking-women were of service at Plataea, but Thucydides' judgment on the Spartans is implicitly contained in iii. 74, where he says of the Corcyraeans: τολμηρῶς ξυνεπελάβοντο...παρὰ φύσιν ὑπομένουσαι τὸν θόρυβον.

P. 285. 1270 a 8. Note that § 12 is strikingly like the language of 'Aθ. πολ. c. 9 s.f. οὐ γὰρ δίκαιον ἐκ τῶν νῦν γιγνομένων ἀλλ' ἐκ τῆς ἄλλης πολιτείας θεωρεῖν τὴν ἐκείνου βούλησιν.

P. 287. 1270 a 34. Add to note (300) a reference to C. v. Holzinger in Philologus lxx. p. 86.

P. 291. 1270 b 11. Add to note (317): Mr Newman suggests, with great plausibility, 'that the events of 333 B.C. are referred to, "In that year the Persian fleet under Pharnabazus and Autophradates advanced from Chios first to Andros and then to Siphnos (nearer to Laconia), with the object of bringing about a rising in Greece against Macedon. We have no record of any negotiations while the fleet was at Andros; but at Siphnos King Agis made his appearance in a single trireme, and commenced negotiations for a subsidy and for the despatch of a fleet and an army to his aid. The news of Issus, however, arrived in the midst of these communications and nipped the project in the bud. If, as is probable, the ephors sent Agis on this errand, Aristotle may well have thought that they came near to ruining their country. See A. Schäfer Demosthenes 3. i. 163 who refers to Arrian 2. 13. 409: Curt. 4. 1. 37." If this is correct, not only would this show that the passage was added to, if not written, subsequently to 333 (as Mr Newman points out) but also that its date is earlier than 330 B.C., when more complete ruin overtook the Spartans at the 'battle of mice' in Arcadia.

P. 307. 1272 b 30. Mr Newman keeps ἔχουσιν sc. τὴν πόλιν and for the ellipse appeals to 1266 b 1, 2, where however it presents no such intolerable harshness.

P. 308. 1272 b 37. The meaning of ἀριστίνδην here is clear from the antithesis to ἐκ τῶν τυχόντων: 'to this office they elect for merit.' Writers on Greek Antiquities have favoured a different view, that ἀριστίνδην αἰρεῖσθαι=election from privileged families. But while fully recognising the close connexion between good birth and

'merit' or 'capacity,' as shown by such passages as Isocr. Areop. § 37 οἱ καλῶς γεγονότες καὶ πολλὴν ἀρετὴν ἐν τῷ βίῳ ἐνδεδειγμένοι, Philochorus F. H. G. i. 394 πρωτεύοντες ἔν τε γένει καὶ πλοῦτι καὶ βίῳ χρηστῷ (where πρωτεύοντες echoes ἀριστίνδην) we surely have no right to give the Aristotelian technical term any other meaning than that attested by Timaeus, κατ' ἀνδραγαθίαν αἰρετόν.

P. 309. 1273 a 9. The text presents τούτων καὶ ὁ δῆμος where all the authorities give καὶ τούτων ὁ δ., and the change was defended by Prof. Tyrrell in Hermathena Vol. VI., No. 12 p. 31 f. (cp. No. 14 p. 334). Though the grounds for the change seemed imperative, it would perhaps have been more consistent to leave καὶ τούτων in the text and print the conjecture in spaced type in the critical notes. For Mr Newman has shown that it is not impossible to give a sense to καὶ τούτων: "over the measure which is the subject of that difference of opinion" (between Shofetes and Senate), "as well as over matters voluntarily referred to the assembly in cases of unanimity." But would the writer have left all this for his readers to supply from conjecture? In any case, even this suggestion is not inevitable: Mr Newman has an alternative assumption that ὁμογνώμονοις = are unanimous as to bringing or not bringing a given question before the popular assembly.

Add to the references for c. 12 and the Solonian Constitution: the Constitution of Athens cc. 5—12 (cp. c. 41) to which historical commentaries will be found in Mr Kenyon's and Dr Sandys' editions. Amongst the numerous publications which deal with the relations of this treatise to the Politics may be specially mentioned Mr Newman's review in Class. Rev. v. 155—164, Mr R. W. Macan's in Journal of Hellenic Studies xii. 17—40, P. Meyer Des Aristoteles Politik u. die 'Aθ. πολ. (Bonn 1891), B. Keil Die Solonische Verfassung nach Aristoteles (Berlin 1892), U. v. It is worth noting that while the recent discovery largely supplements the commentary on B. II. c. 12 there is nothing in it to cancel, except the incautious mention of Aristides p. 317 for which Mr Hicks is alone responsible.

Provisionally we may identify the ἐνιοι of 1273 b 36 with οἱ δημοτικοὶ of 'Aθ. πολ. c. 6. F. Dümmler in Hermes xxvii. p. 267 ff. would refer μέμφονται τινες to Critias who, he thinks, wrote on the constitution of Athens.

P. 315. To note (400) add a reference to the summary of Solon's constitution in 'Aθ. πολ. c. 41 § 2: τρίτη δ' ἡ μετὰ τὴν στάσιν (cp. 'Aθ. πολ. c. 2 ad init.) sc. μεταβολή, ἡ ἐπὶ Σόλωνος, ἀφ' ἧς ἀρχὴ δημοκρατίας ἐγένετο: and to c. 2 § 3, πρῶτος ἐγένετο τοῦ δήμου προστάτης sc. Solon.

Ib. 1273 b 37. λαν ἄκρατον κτλ] Compare 'Aθ. πολ. c. 2 of the times preceding Draco and Solon: ἤν γάρ [τότε] ἡ πολιτεία τοῖς τε ἄλλοις ὀλιγαρχικῇ πᾶσι, καὶ δὴ καὶ ἐδούλευον οἱ πένητες τοῖς πλουσίοις...ἡ δὲ πᾶσα γῆ δι' ὀλίγων ἦν κτλ: c. 4 s.f.,

c. 5 § 1 τῶν πολλῶν δουλευόντων τοῖς ὀλίγοις, c. 6 § 1 τὸν δῆμον ἡλευθέρωσε, and (what were undoubtedly the writer's authorities for his facts) Solon's verses copied in c. 12 § 4.

Ib. 1273 b 38. δημοκρατίαν τὴν πάτριον] Comp. the use in 'Αθ. πολ. c. 29 § 3 of οἱ πάτριοι νόμοι οὓς Κλεισθένης ἔθηκεν with the comment subjoined ὡς οὐ δημοτικὴν ἀλλὰ παραπλησίαν οὖσαν τὴν Κλεισθέους πολιτείαν τῇ Σόλωνος; also c. 34 § 3, τὴν πάτριον πολιτείαν (bis). Unquestionably πάτριος had become at the end of the fifth century a synonym for Solonian.

Ib. 1273 b 41. δικαστήριον] Fully explained by 'Αθ. πολ. c. 9 § 1, which for its importance we subjoin in full, though strictly only the third of the three democratic elements is here in point: δοκεῖ δὲ τῆς Σόλωνος πολιτείας τρία ταῦτ' εἶναι τὰ δημοτικώτατα· πρῶτον μὲν καὶ μέγιστον τὸ μὴ δανείζειν ἐπὶ τοῖς σώμασι, ἔπειτα τὸ ἐξεῖναι τῷ βουλευμένῳ [τιμωρεῖν] ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδικουμένων, τρίτον δέ, <ψ> μάλιστα φασιν ἰσχυκεῖναι τὸ πλῆθος, ἢ εἰς τὸ δικαστήριον ἐφεσεῖς· κύριος γὰρ ὢν ὁ δῆμος τῆς ψήφου, κύριος γίγνεται τῆς πολιτείας.

Ib. εἰκε] This, like εἰκὸς 'Αθ. πολ. c. 6, c. 9 cited above, indicates a mode of argument common with the writer of the Constitution and not unknown in the Politics. In default of direct testimony, in criticising current tradition or suspicious evidence, the method of reconstruction is employed, by which from the present we infer the past, and from a given state of institutions reason back to their origin or a previous state. See Mr R. W. Macan in J. H. S. XII. p. 37 f., who calls attention to the 'signals of this method' in style.

Ib. 1274 a 1. τὴν βουλὴν] That this was a pre-existing institution in Solon's time is placed beyond all reasonable doubt by the Constitution of Athens. It confronts us in the sketch of the ἀρχαία πολιτεία c. 3 § 6; ἡ δὲ τῶν Ἀρεοπαγιτῶν βουλὴ τὴν μὲν τάξιν εἶχε τοῦ διατηρεῖν τοὺς νόμους, διώκει δὲ τὰ πλείστα καὶ τὰ μέγιστα τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει, καὶ κολάζουσα καὶ ζημιοῦσα πάντας τοὺς ἀκοσμοῦντας κυρίως. It was then filled up from ex-Archons (ib.). Under Draco's constitution it was made φύλαξ τῶν νόμων and received complaints of their violation (εἰσαγγελία), c. 4 § 4. Before Solon (the statement is vague as to time) it appointed the magistrates, c. 8 § 2. Solon confirmed its censorship, its powers of general superintendence, of inflicting fines, and holding trials for treason by the νόμος εἰσαγγελίας, c. 8 § 4.

Ib. 1274 a 2. τὴν τῶν ἀρχῶν αἵρεσιν] According to 'Αθ. πολ. c. 8 § 1 the mode of choice enacted by Solon was a combination of selection with sortition, τὰς δ' ἀρχὰς ἐποίησε κληρωτὰς ἐκ προκρίτων, a statement which sets in a proper light the tolerably correct (but hitherto neglected) conceptions of the Solonian practice found in Isocrates Areop. §§ 22, 23, Panath. § 145, and [Dem.] c. Neaeram LIX. § 75. Since the lot was limited by the previous selection (or nomination by election) Aristotle can perfectly well speak of the people, here and in 1281 b 33, as electing.

Thus Aristotle's own qualifications of the democratic panegyrics passed upon Solon's constitution amount to this: "Solon did not found the Areopagite Council, though he confirmed it in its censorial prerogatives, and he did not introduce the election of magistrates." The exact sense in which the last comment is to be taken is not quite clear. The little we know of the mode of appointment prior to Solon's reform comes from 'Αθ. πολ. In c. 4 § 2 it is implied that under Draco the civic body (which at the time consisted of those able to provide themselves with heavy armour) used to elect the nine archons: ἀπεδέδοτο (not ἀπεδόθη ὑπὸ Δράκοντος) μὲν ἡ πολιτεία τοῖς ὅπλοι παρεχομένοις· ἡρῶντο δὲ τοὺς μὲν ἐννέα ἀρχοντας. But the authority of this chapter is doubtful and in c. 8 § 2 it is said vaguely that in olden time the Areopagus used to summon and appoint fit persons to the various annual offices: τὸ γὰρ ἀρχαῖον ἦ ἐν Ἀρείῳ πάγῳ βουλὴ ἀνακαλεσασμένη καὶ κρίνασα καθ' αὐτὴν τὸν ἐπιτῆδειον ἐφ' ἑκάστη τῶν ἀρχῶν ἐπ' ἐνιαυτὸν διατάσσα ἀπέστελλεν.

Ib. τὸν δὲ δῆμον καταστήσαι κτλ] The importance of the appeal to the law court where the people interpreted the laws is emphasized 'Αθ. πολ. c. 9 § 2 ἐτι δὲ καὶ διὰ τὸ μὴ γεγράφθαι τοὺς νόμους ἀπλῶς μηδὲ σαφῶς...ἀνάγκη πολλὰς ἀμφισβητήσεις γίγνεσθαι καὶ πάντα βραβεύειν καὶ τὰ κοινὰ καὶ τὰ ἴδια τὸ δικαστήριον. So also Plutarch V. Sol. 18 (τὸ συνεκκλησιάσειν καὶ δικάσειν) κατ' ἀρχὰς μὲν οὐδὲν ὕστερον δὲ παμμέγεθες ἐφάνη· τὰ γὰρ πλείστα τῶν διαφόρων ἐνέπιπτεν εἰς τοὺς δικαστάς (namely through appeals from the sentences of the magistrates). Comp. Busolt *Gr. Alt.*² p. 150 n. (5).

P. 316. 1274 a 3. μέφονται τινες] These critics are probably the same as those mentioned in 'Αθ. πολ. c. 6 §§ 1, 2 (πειρῶνται τινες διαβάλλειν αὐτόν...οἱ βουλόμενοι βλασφημεῖν). Aristotle's acquaintance with them is probably due to an oligarchical pamphlet, perhaps of the time of the Four Hundred or the Thirty: see Wilamowitz op. c. i. p. 74, p. 165 ff.

Ib. 1274 a 8. Ἐφιάλτης ἐκόλουσε καὶ Περικλῆς] The most remarkable novelty contained in 'Αθ. πολ. is the circumstantial account of the plot of Ephialtes and Themistocles to overthrow the usurped powers of the Areopagus: c. 25. The part ascribed to Themistocles seems unhistorical, for as the usurpation of the Areopagus lasted 17 years after Salamis (c. 25 § 1) this story would place Themistocles in Athens circa 462 B.C., whereas various lines of evidence converge in making him escape to Persia circa 466 B.C. See Mr E. M. Walker in Class. Rev. vi. 95 ff. Few at any rate will approve the suggestion to erase Pericles' name in order to insert that of Themistocles.

In dealing with the statement in the Politics we have to decide whether one or two attacks on the Areopagus are intended. Dr Sandys Constitution p. 100 prefers to identify Pericles' action with the later occasion ('Αθ. πολ. c. 27 § 1, τῶν Ἀρεοπαγιτῶν ἔνια παρείλετο) when some of its remaining privileges were taken from the Council. In this way the statements of Politics and Constitution would be reconciled. Prof. Susemihl however is inclined to adopt what is certainly the more natural interpretation, that in the Politics Pericles (not Themistocles) is associated with Ephialtes in the famous attack: Quaest. Ar. crit. et exeg. III. p. IV. He goes on to infer (1) that it is more likely the correct account is later than the incorrect, and therefore B. II. of Politics later than the Constitution of Athens (comp. above Addenda to p. 66), and (2) meets the possible objection from the silence observed in the genuine part of B. II. as to Draco's constitution by reminding us that B. II. only professes to deal with εὐδοκιμοῦσαι πολιτεῖαι, 1260 b 29, 1272 b 24, 1273 b 25. These inferences apart, the conjunction of Ephialtes and Pericles in the attack of 462 B.C. will remain, in spite of the romancing of the Constitution of Athens, a plausible hypothesis in view of the facts (1) that Ephialtes atoned for his share in it with his life, and (2) that Pericles succeeded Ephialtes in the leadership of the party of reform.

Ib. 1274 a 9. Add to note (408): See now 'Αθ. πολ. c. 27 §§ 3, 4 with the story of Damonides' advice (the source apparently of Plutarch V. Cim. 10, V. Pericl. 9), Busolt *Gr. Alt.*² p. 168 n. (4). The whole tone of § 4 and particular expressions can be paralleled from 'Αθ. πολ. cc. 27, 28 §§ 1—4, c. 41 § 2 (the 7th and the 11th μεταβολαί): while the exclusion from Solon's intention of merely accidental results (1274 a 11 φαίνεται δὲ κτλ) agrees with the defence of Solon in 'Αθ. πολ. c. 9 § 2 s. f.

P. 317. 1274 a 14. Add to note (410): Compare 'Αθ. πολ. c. 26 § 1; μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα συνέβαινεν ἀνίσθαι μᾶλλον τὴν πολιτείαν διὰ τοὺς προθύμους δημαγωγοῦντας. The mention of Aristides as a leader of the Moderates is particularly unfortunate: for in 'Αθ. πολ. c. 28 § 2 he finds a place on the list of προστάται τοῦ δήμου: (1) Solon, (2) Peisistratus, (3) Cleisthenes, (4) Xanthippus, (5) Themistocles and Aristides, (6) Ephialtes, (7) Pericles, (8) Cleon, (9) Cleophon; and in c. 23 § 3 ff., c. 24 a greater share of activity is assigned to Aristides than to his colleague Themistocles in the transformation of Athens into an imperial city. According to c. 26 § 1 the Moderates had no leader in the period just before Cimon.

Frag. 369 mentioned in this note is of course Plutarch's careless paraphrase of the eulogy of Theramenes in 'Αθ. πολ. c. 28 § 5.

Ib. 1274 a 15. To note (411) add: This is supported by 'Αθ. πολ. c. 7 § 3, τοῖς δὲ τὸ θητικὸν τελούσιν ἐκκλησίας καὶ δικαστηρίων μετέδωκε μόνον. Under the old oligarchy the Thetes had no civic rights at all: 'Αθ. πολ. 4 § 2, 5 § 1. The second of the two alternatives presented in n. (411) is nearer the truth; neither is exactly right.

Ib. 1274 a 17. No notice is taken of εὐθύνειν in 'Αθ. πολ. Nor is εὐθύνειν δίκας σκολιάς technical where it occurs in Solon's fragments. It is tempting to regard 1274 a 15—19 as neither more nor less than a plain prose paraphrase of the famous lines Δήμῳ μὲν γὰρ ἔδωκα κτλ Fragg. 5 and 6 Bergk.

Ib. 1274 a 19. To note (414) add: From 'Αθ. πολ. c. 4 § 3, c. 7 § 3 it would appear that these four classes are earlier than Solon: for even if c. 4 be rejected as an interpolation, there is the clause καθάπερ διήρητο τὸ πρότερον when Solon's τιμήματα are first discussed. Comp. Busolt in Philologus L. 393 ff.

P. 318. 1274 a 21. Note even the verbal similarity to 'Αθ. πολ. c. 7 s. f. τοὺς δ' ἄλλους [sc. ἔδει τελεῖν] θητικόν, οὐδεμιᾶς μετέχοντας ἀρχῆς. See p. 573 note on 1337 b 21.

Ib. 1274 a 22. Add to note (415): In Frag. 505, 1561 a 5, Zaleukos is called a shepherd and slave. This is hardly to be reconciled with πολιτευθέντες αὐτοί, § 1, 1273 b 32.

Ib. 1274 a 23. Add: The laws of Chairondas (probably another form of the same name) were in force in Cos, see Herondas 2. 48: from Strabo XII. 539 we know that they were in force in Mazaka, in Cappadocia. In a decree found near Teos, Dittenberger Sylloge n. 126 lines 61, 65, 121, 123, Antigonos permits the people of Lebedos and Teos to introduce the laws of Cos for the projected union of the two cities. Hence v. Wilamowitz (I. 65 n.) conjectures that the laws of Charondas, introduced deliberately when in 366 B.C. the state of Cos was refounded, had spread from that place as a centre.

Ib. 1274 a 25. τῶς] Mr Newman adduces reasons why Ephorus cannot be intended. (1) Ephorus (Strabo VI. 260) states that Zaleucus borrowed his laws from Crete, Lacedaemon, and the Areopagus. He could not therefore have made Zaleucus and Lycurgus contemporaries. (2) We should expect him to trace laws to a Cretan origin, to Rhadamanthus or Minos. (3) He would hardly have committed such an anachronism in regard to the Locrian Onomacritus, if indeed he be the same as the oracle-monger of Peisistratid times. Mr Newman inclines to assign the tradition to a Locrian origin, cp. Scymnus Chius v. 314 ff.

Ib. 1274 a 30. To note (419 b) add: Comp. the similar exposure of a chronological error in 'Αθ. πολ. c. 17 § 2: φανερῶς ληροῦσιν οἱ φάσκοντες...οὐ γὰρ ἐνδέχεται ταῖς ἡλικίαις, ἔάν τις ἀναλογίζηται τὸν ἑκατέρου βίον καὶ ἐφ' οὗ ἀπέθανεν ἀρχοντας. P. 320. 1274 b 14. ταῖν] In Archiv f. d. Gesch. d. Philos. II. 504 Prof. Bywater remarks that τοῖν is the only form recognised by the Attic inscriptions. Undoubtedly the preponderance of masculine forms of the dual is very great, τοῖν θεοῖν at least 30 times in inscr.: yet ταῖν θεαῖν does occur, see C. I. A. II. 3, n. 1559. In the dramatists there is no instance of τοῖν, τούτοις as feminine; but Menander Fr. 520 K. gives ταῖν ἀδελφαῖν ταῖν δυοῖν ταύταις. On the other hand τῶ, τούτῳ, τῷδε, αὐτῷ, ᾧ, ᾧτινε, are found as feminine, although τά, αὐτά, ταῦτα, τάδε, with substantives of the first declension, do occur. In the prose writers the results so far differ that τά, ταῦτα, are nowhere attested, while τοῖν is found more often than ταῖν, e.g. in Plato τοῖν six times, ταῖν four times. The Scholiast on Aristoph. Thesm. 566 has τῷ θεῷ ὡς τῷ χεῖρε, οὐκέτι δὲ τοῖν θεοῖν ἀλλὰ ταῖν θεαῖν. In Isaeus ταῖν occurs six times, in Aristophanes six times, in Sophocles, Xenophon, Lysias, Andocides, Hyperides once each.

P. 321. 1274 b 15 f. Δράκοντος δὲ νόμοι μὲν εἰσι, πολιτεία δ' ὑπαρχούση τοὺς νόμους ἔθηκεν. Add to note (427): Possibly the writer felt it incumbent upon him to account for Aristotle's omission of Draco (the real reason being, as explained above, that Draco's was not one of the εὐδοκιμοῦσαι πολιτεῖαι), especially in view of 1273 b 34 οὗτοι γὰρ (Λυκοῦργος καὶ Σόλων) καὶ νόμους καὶ πολιτείας κατέστησαν. Presuming that the sentence is a spurious addition it is not surprising that it is irreconcilable with 'Aθ. πολ. c. 4. Those recent authorities who do not reject it as spurious (and they include Newman and v. Wilamowitz) have to account for a glaring discrepancy with the detailed account of the Draconian constitution given in that chapter: which v. Wilamowitz considers to have been a hasty insertion in 'Aθ. πολ. at the last moment. See again Quaest. Ar. crit. et exeg. I. p. XVI, III. p. III ff.

Ib. Add to note (428): See now 'Aθ. πολ. c. 4 with the increasing literature upon the Draconian constitution, beginning with the doubts of Mr J. W. Headlam and Mr E. S. Thompson in Class. Rev. v. 161 ff., 336, and M. Th. Reinach in Revue Critique 1891 p. 143 ff., to whose attacks replies have been made, amongst others by P. Meyer op. c. p. 31 ff. and Busolt in Philologus L. p. 393 ff. In the opinion of v. Wilamowitz the Constitution of Draco first appeared in Theramenes' oligarchical pamphlet, 404 B.C.: it was reconstructed from the θεσμοὶ of Draco, upon inferences to which Theramenes was led in the course of his inquiries into old and obsolete laws for the purpose of the revision of the laws and constitution instituted by the Thirty.

As to the absence of evidence for any such constitution, Busolt argues that since Draco's laws, with the exception of those relating to homicide, were abolished ('Aθ. πολ. c. 7) and only the laws on homicide remained in force, people easily came to the conclusion that the latter comprised the whole of Draco's work. For a possible reminiscence he points to Pseudo-Plato Axiochus 365 E: ὡς οὖν ἐπὶ τῆς τοῦ Δράκοντος ἢ Κλεισθένης πολιτείας οὐδὲν περὶ σε κακὸν ἦν.

P. 324, line 18. Add: Mr Barclay Head Hist. Num. p. 372 states plainly that a federal coinage implies other federal institutions, and that in spite of continual dissensions something more than a mere tradition of political unity was kept up in Arcadia during the period of the coinage 550—400 B.C.

P. 330. To note (8) of p. 329 add after σύνθητες: This evidence is disputed by Mr F. B. Jevons Kin and Custom in Journal of Philol. XVI. 1887 p. 104 n. 1. According to him Polybius and Caesar were mistaken in attributing polyandry to Spartans and Celts respectively, the 'Joint Undivided Family' having given rise to the misapprehension.

With the changes indicated in the Addenda to Critical Notes the passage runs thus: ἀποροῦσι γὰρ τινες πόθ' ἢ πόλις ἔπραξε καὶ πότε οὐχ ἢ πόλις, οἷον θταν ἐξ ὀλιγαρχίας ἢ τυραννίδος γένηται δημοκρατία (τότε γὰρ οὔτε τὰ συμβόλαια ἐνιοι βούλονται διαλύειν, ὥς οὐ τῆς πόλεως ἀλλὰ τοῦ τυράννου λαβόντος, οὐτ' ἄλλα πολλὰ τῶν τοιοῦτων, ὥς ἐνίας τῶν πολιτειῶν τῷ κρατεῖν οὔσας, ἀλλ' οὐ διὰ τὸ κοινῇ συμφέρον)· εἶπερ οὖν [καὶ] δημοκρατοῦνται τινες τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον, ὁμοίως τῆς πόλεως φάτεον εἶναι [ταύτης] τὰς τῆς πολιτείας ταύτης πράξεις καὶ τὰς ἐκ τῆς ὀλιγαρχίας καὶ τῆς τυραννίδος; "Some raise the question when the state is, and when it is not, responsible for public acts, for instance after the establishment of a democracy upon a previous oligarchy or tyranny: some under such circumstances would repudiate obligations, holding that they were not contracted by the state but by the tyrant, and would decline many other such responsibilities on the ground that the basis of certain forms of government is superior strength and not the public interest: suppose now men to be somewhere living under a democracy of this origin, is the state just as responsible for the acts of this government as for those of its predecessor, the oligarchy or tyranny?" In a 14 τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον is explained by a 9 ὅταν ἐξ ὀλιγαρχίας ἢ τυραννίδος γένηται δημοκρατία. The question should more properly have been put in the reverse way: is the state as responsible for the acts of the deposed oligarchy or tyranny as it is for the acts of the democracy which succeeds them? But Aristotle's inexactness in such matters is notorious. Niemeyer retains the ταύτης bracketed above, as if the question concerned the identity of the state: more probably the alternative is, are the acts of the preceding tyranny to be attributed to the city or to the tyrant?

P. 364 f. 1276 a 36—38. On the divergent spellings αλεῖ del see Meisterhans *Grammatik d. a. Insch.*² p. 25 n. 2; Christ preface to ed. of Metaphysica (Teubner series) p. xv, who cites the variants in the MSS. at 986 b 17, 1016 a 15, 1026 a 21. The whole question of orthography is complicated by the discrepancy between (1) the best manuscripts and (2) the inscriptions. Prof. Susemihl, who has hitherto been content to reproduce faithfully the best manuscript evidence, now writes: "in rebus orthographicis sequi fontes optimos...non pergerem fortasse in nova editione, sed suadente Stapfero ad Meisterhansi grammaticam inscriptionum me accommodarem semperque scriberem non solum, id quod nunc feci, μικρός, μικρότης, verum etiam μέχρι, γίγνεσθαι, γιγνώσκειν, πλέον et forsitan etiam δυοῖν, αἷζειν, breviores comparativorum species in ους et ω desinentes semper reciperem." See Stapfer Krit. Studien zu Aris. v. J. Seele (Landshut 1890) p. 7 ff. On the same rational principles Mr Hicks is inclined wholly to disregard the manuscript evidence on such points as the avoidance of hiatus by elision, and the retention of obsolete or incorrect spelling (θαλάσση 1271 b 34, 35, 37, 1327 a 16, πράσσω 1337 b 20, Μιτυληναῖοι 1285 a 35). v. It is with justice that in the 'Αθ. πολ. the notice of the repayment is followed by the comment ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἄλλαις πόλεσιν οὐχ ὅτι προστιθέασιν τῶν οἰκείων οἱ δῆμοι κρατήσαντες ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν χώραν ἀνάδαστον ποιοῦσιν.

Add to note (516): By Ἀθ. πολ. c. 26 § 4 this famous law of Pericles is assigned to the year 451/0 ἐπὶ Ἀντιδότου διὰ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν πολιτῶν, Περικλέους εἰπόντος, ἔγνωσαν μὴ μετέχειν τῆς πόλεως ὅς ἂν μὴ ἐξ ἀμφοῖν ἀστοῖν ᾗ γεγωνός. An error in the date is not so serious as to have maintained (with Duncker, Schenkl, Buermann and at one time Busolt) that no such law could have been proposed by Pericles. For the practice at Athens in the fourth century see c. 42 § 1 cited in Addenda to p. 360. Cp. 1275 b 21. P. 415. Comm. left col. line 24. Add: The recent additions to our knowledge enable us to arrive at the following provisional results respecting Aristotle's judgment upon Ostracism. Having been wholly disused in the fourth century the institution had become the subject of antiquarian research. Two theories about its origin could appeal, with something like confidence, to facts in their favour: (1) the view of the text, 1284 a 17 ff. and of VIII(v). 3. 3, 1302 b 15—18, which agrees with Diod. XI. 55, Plut. V. Themist. c. 22, Arist. 7, Nic. 11, Alcib. 13 (cp. Nepos Them. 8, Cimon 3), evidently the view of Ephorus and Theopompus, i.e. of the school of Isocrates: (2) the view expressed by Philochorus, Fr. 79 b (cited in n. 603), which is also found in Androtion, Fr. 5 (quoted by Harpocration s.v. Hipparchus). Both explanations appear in 'Αθ. πολ. c. 22, the writer showing himself here as elsewhere well acquainted with the latest researches of historians and Attidographi.

Ib. line 39. The extract is preceded by an account of the procedure in cases of ostracism: προχειροτονεῖ μὲν ὁ δῆμος πρὸ τῆς ἡ' πρυτανείας, εἰ δοκεῖ τὸ ὄστρακον εἰσφέρειν· ὅτε δὲ δοκεῖ, ἐφράσσεται σάνισιν ἡ ἀγορὰ καὶ κατελείποντο εἰσοδοὶ δέκα, δι' ὧν εἰσιόντες κατὰ φυλὰς ἐτίθεσαν τὰ ὄστρακα, στρέφοντες τὴν ἐπιγραφὴν. ἐπεστάντων δὲ οἱ τὴν ἐννέα ἄρχοντες καὶ ἡ βουλὴ· διαριθμηθέντων δὲ ὅτ' ἵκεῖν πλείονα γένοιτο καὶ μὴ ἐλάττω ἑξακισχιλίων, τοῦτον ἔδει τὰ δίκαια δόντα καὶ λαβόντα ὑπὲρ τῶν ἰδίων συναλλαγμάτων ἐν δέκα ἡμέραις μεταστῆναι τῆς πόλεως ἑτη δέκα (ὑστερον δὲ ἐγένοντο πέντε) καρπούμενον τὰ ἑαυτοῦ, μὴ ἐπιβαίνοντα ἐντὸς Γεραιστοῦ Εὐβοίας ἀκρωτηρίου· μόνος δὲ κτλ.

Ib. After note (603) add: Compare now 'Αθ. πολ. c. 22 § 1 ἐν οἷς [sc. νόμοις] ἐτέθη καὶ ὁ περὶ τοῦ ὄστρακισμοῦ νόμος seemingly about 507 B.C., § 3 διαλιπόντες ἑτη μετὰ τὴν νίκην [Marathon], θαρροῦντος ἤδη τοῦ δήμου, τότε πρῶτον ἐχρήσαντο τῷ νόμῳ τῷ περὶ τὸν ὄστρακισμόν, ὅς ἐτέθη διὰ τὴν ὑποψίαν τῶν ἐν ταῖς δυνάμεσιν, ὅτι Πεισίστρατος δημαγωγὸς καὶ στρατηγὸς ὦν τυράννος κατέστη· § 4 καὶ πρῶτος ὠστρακίσθη τῶν ἐκείνου συγγενῶν Ἰππαρχος Χάρμου Κολλυτεύς, δι' ὃν καὶ μάλιστα τὸν νόμον ἔθηκεν ὁ Κλεισθένης, ἐξελάσαι βουλόμενος αὐτόν. εὐθὺς δὲ τῷ ὑστέρῳ ἔτει [i.e. 487/6 B.C.]...ὠστρακίσθη Μεγακλῆς Ἰπποκράτους Ἀλωπεκῆθεν [a nephew of Cleisthenes]. ἐπὶ μὲν οὖν ἑτη τρία τοὺς τῶν τυράννων φίλους ὠστράκίζον, ὧν χάριν ὁ νόμος ἐτέθη, μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα τῷ τετάρτῳ ἔτει [probably 485/4 B.C.] καὶ τῶν ἄλλων εἰ τις δοκοίη μείζων εἶναι μεθίστατο· καὶ πρῶτος ὠστρακίσθη τῶν ἀπωθεν τῆς τυραννίδος Ξάνθιππος ὁ Ἀρίφρωνος. Unquestionably the motives assigned, (1) jealousy of preeminence (Eph. Theopomp.) and (2) fear of a restoration of Hippias (Androt.), are inferences from the persons ostracized. The fragment of Androtion in Harpocration runs thus: ἄλλος δὲ ἐστὶν Ἰππαρχος ὁ Χάρμου, ὃς φησι Λυκούργος ἐν τῷ κατὰ

Λεωκράτους· περὶ δὲ τούτου Ἀνδροτίων ἐν τῷ β' φησὶν ὅτι συγγενὴς μὲν ἦν Πεισιστράτου τοῦ τυράννου καὶ πρῶτος ἐξωστρακίσθη τοῦ περὶ τὸν ὀστρακισμὸν νόμου τότε πρῶτον τεθέντος διὰ τὴν ὑποψίαν τῶν περὶ Πεισίστρατον, ὅτι δημαγωγὸς ὦν καὶ στρατηγὸς ἐτυράννησεν. The coincidence of language is unmistakeable, cp. VIII(V). 5. 6, 1305 a 7.

P. 464 ff. The statistical results here given have been again and again revised by Prof. Susemihl in Quaest. crit. et exeget. II. (1893) and Jahrb. f. Phil. 1893, p. 817 ff., the latter article a rejoinder to Mr Newman's presentation of the statistics in Classical Review VII. 1893, pp. 304—309. In such enumerations mistakes are apt to creep in, and an editor's judgment will from time to time be modified by the greater or less degree of probability which a combination of assumptions seems to present: hence neither the statistics of the text nor the modified results of the articles published in 1893 can be regarded as final. Both sides have made concessions, either from change of view (as when Prof. Susemihl admits that 1272 b 9 Mr Newman has rightly accounted for the variant δυναστῶν by δυναστεία in the next line, and accordingly returns to δυνατῶν II², and Mr Newman 1263 a 23 now accepts ἔθει II¹ in place of ἤθει II²) or from the laudable desire to do all possible justice to the opposing view (which may account for Prof. Susemihl's surrender of 1256 b 1 κομίζονται, 1258 b 1 μεταβολικῆς, 1258 b 7 νόμισμα ἐκ νομίσματος in Quaest. II. p. IV. although he would still regard these three passages as extremely uncertain, and similarly for Mr Newman's omission to count 15 passages on the side of II², for which see Class. Rev. VII. p. 306 n. 1, p. 308). It only remains to state and compare the competing statistical tables in their latest form.

Let us start with Book I. where "II¹ is certainly wrong 15 times" (text p. 464, line 40): deduct three of these 1257 a 22, 1258 b 27, 1260 a 26 which fall back into the uncertain class, and add seven, viz. 1254 b 14, 1256 a 10, 1257 a 6, 1259 b 31 together with the more properly uncertain cases 1256 b 1, 1258 b 1, b 7: this brings the total of errors in II¹ to 19. But again, in B. I. "II¹ is right 24 times" (text p. 464, line 3 from below): this should have been 23 for only 23 variants are enumerated. Of these five are very slight changes and Prof. Susemihl now refrains from counting them: viz. 1252 b 28 (ῆδη), 1256 b 8 (δεδομένη), 1258 b 40 (Χαρητίδη), 1259 b 28 (δὲ), 1260 a 37 (ἄρα), but he adds five in their place, viz. 1253 a 32, 1253 b 33, 1254 a 10, 1260 a 26, a 31: the total remaining 23. Thus in B. I. the problem works out in favour of II¹ by 23 : 19.

Mr Newman does not agree with this statement of the case, but instead of a detailed criticism he contents himself with objecting to five of the 23 variants claimed as right readings for II¹ on the ground that words are omitted, and that this is the besetting sin of II¹: these five omissions are 1252 a 9 (εἶναι), b 20 (συνῆλθον), 1253 b 33 (ὅ), 1257 b 7 (εἶναι), 1260 a 31 (ὅ). If these five claims were struck out, the balance in favour of II¹ would be destroyed.

In B. II. the alleged superiority claimed for II¹ is still disputed. Mr Newman accepts its authority in 35 variants and does not definitely pronounce against it in the 13 other readings, while at the same time rejecting it in favour of II² in no less than 64 cases.

Prof. Susemihl again has altered his result (p. 465) in favour of II¹ over II² from 69 : 40 to 67 : 48. It is clear that while opinions continue thus widely to differ, as to which variants are decisive for the one or the other side, the facts require extremely cautious and delicate manipulation.

The changes in Susemihl's figures for Book II. are thus explained. "II¹ has changed the right reading at the most only 40 times" (p. 465 line 32): deduct 9 of these, viz. 1261 a 35, 1265 b 39, 1266 b 39, 1268 a 26, 1270 a 21, a 27, 1272 a 1, 1273 a 9, 1274 a 4, in return add 17 others: 1261 a 22, 1264 a 16, 1265 a 22, 1268 a 6, a 17, a 34, 1269 a 38, b 21, b 28, 1270 a 23, b 12, 1272 a 3, b 9, b 28, b 34, 1274 b 8, b 9, b 14: the new total of the errors of II¹ is 48. Again of the 69 passages claimed as right readings for II¹ (p. 465 line 23) Susemihl is now disposed to omit nine, viz. 1263 a 12, 1266 b 31, 1267 a 40, 1270 a 22, b 19, b 32, 1274 a 5, a 21, in place of which he advances 9 others, viz. 1261 b 30, 1263 a 23 (καί), b 5, 1264 a 15, b 31, 1265 a 16, 1268 a 6 f., 1269 b 14, 1273 a 35: the total would thus remain at 69, but on reflexion he counts the variations of one passage, 1261 b 2 f., not (as on p. 465) as five, but only two (or three at most). This brings out the final result for B. II.: II¹=67 (or 68 at most), II²=48.

Mr Newman's divergent results are thus obtained. Of the 67 he accepts 35, but transfers nine others to the opposite side and reckons them to the credit of II² (viz. 1260 b 27, 1261 b 4, 1263 b 7, 1268 a 3 all cases of omission by II¹, together with 1265 b 11, 1267 a 35, b 26, 1269 b 6, 1271 a 20): the remaining 23 he leaves doubtful, though strongly of opinion that they also should be counted for Π^2 . Thus Π^1 falls with him from 67 to 35: and Π^2 rises by the addition to the 48 (which Susemihl finally admits) of seven other variants, which Susemihl regards as doubtful: viz. 1264 a 21, 1265 a 12, 1268 b 17, 1267 a 40, 1273 b 32, 1274 a 4, b 6. This makes the total for $\Pi^2=55$. Add the 9 variants above enumerated which Susemihl reckons for Π^1 and Newman for Π^2 and we get the result, $\Pi^2=64$, $\Pi^1=35$.

On the question of the text generally we quote with pleasure Prof. Tyrrell's opinion as expressed in 1888, Hermathena Vol. vi. No. 14, p. 335. "The course taken by recent criticism illustrates one of Aristotle's rules for attaining the mean, ἀποχωρεῖν τοῦ μᾶλλον ἐναντίου. Bekker having completely neglected Π^1 and Γ , Susemihl's recoil carried him perhaps too far from Bekker's method, and now Busse and Dittenberger"—may we not add Newman?—"seem to be dragging him too near it again. Without free emendation and transposition we can have no readable text."
